As thousands of dollars pour from all over the nation into the group's slush fund, the AFA's national chairman, Edward A. Hayes, is being mentioned as a likely Republican opponent to Douglas next year. He is a Decatur lawyer and former American Legion commander.

Joe's In The Act

And the fact that Gen. Robert E. Wood, Sears Roebuck executive, heads the group as honorary national chairman indicates the kind of campaign Douglas faces. Wood has been linked to L. C. Hunt, wealthy Texas oilman whom Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) conferred with recently.

McCarthy's visit to Texas apparently proved lucrative to the reactionary cause. He's said to have been promised "unlimited funds" for a political spree of McCarthyism, directed primarily against Douglas and Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), to be staged over radio and television just before the 1954 elections.

Ironically, both of McCarthy's prime 1954 targets are regularly condemned by the Communists as viciously as the venom that is mouthed against them by the phony right-wing "patriotic" fronts.

One article about Douglas in the Communist's defunct Midwest Weekly Record, for example, called him a "war monger," a "phony liberal" and "the echo of LaSalle St.," Chicago's financial district. The epithets McCarthyites hurl are just as extreme in reverse.

The hatred of Douglas by both the extreme right and left isn't without reason. As a fighting liberal, he's tread too often on the toes of both monopoly and subversion not to be feared by both groups.

One of the first to recognize the imperialistic nature of the Communist threat, Douglas led the protest against Russia's invasion of Finland in 1939 and he rallied immediately in 1950 to the President's support in the Korean crisis.

Lincolnesque in stature and background, Douglas has always been a man of the people, with their interests at heart. Born a farm boy, he worked his way through college by waiting on tables, mixing concrete, farming, baggage-smashing and selling gelatine deserts, finally getting a doctor of philosophy degree from Columbia Univ.

Since that time, he has been one of the nation's outstanding figures in every position he's filled: economist, teacher, author, labor consultant and arbitrator, Chicago alderman, combat Marine (twice wounded), and Senator. His books on wage theory, unemployment and social security won him international acclaim and a reputation as one of the world's foremost economists.

Douglas has been fighting crooked business practices ever since he undertook to investigate and expose Samuel Insull's sale to the public of "watered" public utility stocks on which thousands of small investors lost millions. He regards his work against monopoly as the high point of his Senate career to date.

Fair Labor Law

A member of the Senate Labor Committee, has long been advocating a fair labor law to replace Taft-Hartley. He doubts that the big business interests which control the Republican Party will let such a bill be reported out in this Congress.

Francis Perkins, former Secretary of Labor, credits Douglas with having converted Pres. Roosevelt to the idea of social security in the early days of the New Deal. He was an adviser to the Senate when the Social Security Act was drafted and has worked steadily for improvements.

Also a member of the Senate Banking and Currency and the Joint Economic Report Committees, Douglas has tried to protect consumer interests, check inflation and develop a sound, expanding economy. He's also fought steadily for sound farm legislation, most recently battling against cuts in rural electrification appropriations.

At the same time, Douglas has become nationally known as the most effective enemy of unessential government spending.

Douglas' approach to economy, however, is quite different from the phony across-the-board "economies" pushed through by the Republican "wrecking crew" in the last Congress. He's fought hard against cuts in all public welfare measures, and advocates instead their expansion.

"Waste can always be eliminated," he says, "without a reduction in program."

Douglas Urges Job Program As Factory Layoffs Climb

FACTORY hirings dropped in July to the lowest rate for that month since 1949, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week, as Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) warned of steps needed to prevent a depression.

The BLS report also noted that layoffs rose markedly during the same period, running at the rate of 12 per 1000 employes, compared with nine the previous month. Manufacturing plants hired new workers at the rate of 40 per 1000, contrasted with 51 per 1000 in June.

Douglas said he fears prosperity is beginning to decline because of several weak spots in the economic picture. He urged a reduction in consumer taxes and a public works program to be put into effect if unemployment reaches 7% or 8% of the working force.

Douglas said that, in the present economic situation, any tax cuts should be made on consumer and excise levies, thus providing a lower purchase price to consumers.

"Unfortunately, what the Administration seems to have in mind is cutting income and corporation taxes and imposing a manufacturer's sales tax, which to my mind is the worst thing that could be done," he added.

Joint Wage Talks Held

THE CIO AUTO Workers and the AFL Machinists in New York City held the first of a series of regional meetings to join efforts and spur organization in the aircraft industry.

"This initial meeting will have far-reaching effects in developing close integration between the unions to achieve much needed improvements in the below par contracts now shackling employes at the United Aircraft plants."

$75,000 A Year—And They Can't Make Ends Meet

IF YOU THINK things are tough for you, consider the plight of a not-so-mythical couple dubbed "Mr. and Mrs. High Society."

They can barely get by on an annual income of $75,000 a year, wrote Athlyn Deshais, society reporter for the Chicago Daily News.

The "society" family must spend an absolute minimum of $35,000 each year to hold their heads up, Miss Deshais pointed out. And even with the gimmick of splitting income taxes, the government may leave them little more than needed for "essential" living costs.

First of the basic needs is a roof over the "society" family's head. The cooperative apartment it occupies cost "Mr. Society" $40,000 and the yearly maintenance assessment runs between $4500 and $6000, Miss Deshais estimated. Then there's a chauffeur at $300 a month, a cook at $200, the laundress at $8 a day—that adds up to $6400 a year.

For groceries Miss Deshais put down a pittance of $2000. But the two cars, which each cost $5000, require $2400 a year for upkeep. So pressed is the "society family for funds that Junior and Daughter still have no convertibles of their own, despite protests. But the two youngsters' education at Eastern prep schools costs at least $8000.

"Mr. and Mrs. Society" obviously must keep up their club memberships. That's another $5000 to $6000 for the five clubs in town and country to which they belong. And entertaining—parties cost money these days. "A mere breakfast for 50, with champagne and flowers," the reporter pointed out, "wouldn't be much under $750. So think of the cost of a dinner dance."

"Mrs. Society" holds her wardrobe to an absolute minimum, making her mink coat do for eight years, but she also has a mink jacket and a brace of sables. She limits her wardrobe to a single Paris suit each season and her lingere bill to somewhere under $1000. But, at that, her clothes and beauty care run to nearly $4000. Poor "Mr. Society" spends only $1000 on new clothing each year.

A few more essentials such as $3000 for travel, $5000 for insurance, $2000 for charity (says Miss Deshais), and there's the $35,000.

But "Mr. Society" rides to the rescue—he can call some of his spending "business expense" as a loophole to pay less income tax. Miss Deshais advises her upper bracket readers "how much of this you can write off to expenses only you and your income tax lawyer would know." (LPA)

"Why Don't We Just Shove Our Chairs Together?"

...So Now He's A Man Without A Country

By MILTON PLUMB

IGNATZ MEZEI, husband of an American citizen and from 1926 until 1949 a resident of Buffalo, N. Y., today is a man without a country.

He was made that last year by the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act enacted while he was out of the U. S. at the bedside of his dying mother in Roumania.

Mezei was born in Gibraltar and came to the U. S. in 1923. Three years later he was permanently settled and living simply in Buffalo. He left there only in 1949 when news reached him that his mother was dying.

After his mother's death, he was denied readmission to the U. S. because 27 years before he had joined a Hungarian-American organization called the Worker's Sickness Benefit and Education Society. This harmless organization was taken over subsequently by the International Workers Order, which is on the attorney general's subversive list.

Mezei, who remained an IWO member because of insurance benefits and, he says, with no political interest, was barred on these grounds. He was shuttled off to Ellis Island, and the Supreme Court ruled five to four that he was without remedy under the law.

Because the McCarran-Walter Act specifies that a hearing need not be given in exclusion cases, Mezei has never been given a hearing despite his 26 years of residence in this country. He was not even given the reasons for his exclusion. The Immigration Act sanctions such injustice.

Meanwhile, our immigration authorities have asked 25 countries to accept him but to no avail. Without further legislative action, he can be held on Ellis Island for the rest of his life.

A ray of hope for Mezei has opened with the introduction by Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) of a private bill to sanction his entry into the U. S. under the British quota. Gibraltar, the place of his birth, is a British possession.

"No member of the House or Senate with any humanity in him would, in my opinion, refuse to vote for such a bill," Celler said. "With the introduction of a private bill, at least a hearing will be given him before a congressional committee so that he and the public may at least know the exact reasons for his plight."

Celler pointed out that if Mezei's connection with the IWO were serious, "we ought to know about it." He said that the McCarran-Walter Act provides for complete secrecy of the record and for no disclosure of the charges and findings.

"It is all too absurd if it were not so tragic," he exclaimed.

Disputes Arbitrator Planned Under CIO, AFL No-Raid Pact

"BOTH THE American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations should adopt as a fundamental policy of both federations this principle:

"No union affiliated with either federation shall attempt to organize or to represent employes as to whom an established bargaining relationship exists between their employer and a union in the other federation."

That is the heart of the CIO-AFL no-raid agreement, drafted (1.) as a step to speed U. S. labor's efforts to organize the millions of unorganized workers in shop and office and (2.) as a big step towards organic unity of the two federations.

And it is buttressed with a point-by-point program for mediation, adjudication and—if finally necessary—settlement by an impartial arbitrator of any and all questions and disputes that might arise under the no-raid agreement.

PUBLICATION last week of the full, legal text of the seven-page no-raid agreement came on the eve of the AFL national convention in St. Louis, which will act on final approval for the federation.

Both the CIO Executive Board and the AFL Executive Council have recommended acceptance. CIO's action will come at the national convention, opening in Cleveland on Nov. 16.

Thereafter, affiliated national or international unions of both federations would have to ratify the agreement before it would go into effect in their respective jurisdictions.

DRAFTING of the no-raid pact was the first concrete result of the joint committee discussions of CIO and AFL officials, which began six months ago, on the problems of amalgamation.

And the draft agreement concludes:

"This agreement, and its faithful observance, is the first and essential step toward the achievement of organic unity between the AFL and the CIO, a goal to which both organizations wholeheartedly subscribe.

"It is the intention of both parties to continue their joint meetings in the endeavor to achieve this objective."

AFL Considers Disputes Plan

The AFL convention in St. Louis this week will consider establishing its own program to prevent and settle jurisdictional disputes.

A program for an "AFL jurisdictional adjudicator"—comparable to CIO's jurisdictional disputes arbitrator — was drafted by the AFL Building & Construction Trades Dept.

The pattern established by CIO in setting up its inter-union jurisdictional disputes program—headed at first by Dr. George W. Taylor and now by Prof. Nathan Feinsinger—was followed in the draft CIO-AFL agreement.

THE AGREEMENT sets forth that neither CIO nor AFL nor any of their local affiliates signatory to the pact shall "directly or indirectly" seek to win bargaining representation among employes now represented by unions of the other federation.

In cases of disputes, the agreement provides this procedure:

- Notification by a complaining union to the other union and its federation.
- Mediation efforts by the two unions directly involved.
- Further settlement efforts by the secretary-treasurers of the two federations, or their representatives.
- If agreement is not reached within 15 days, either union or federation may submit the dispute to an impartial umpire.
- The umpire shall be selected and jointly appointed by the presidents of the CIO and the AFL. He "shall have jurisdiction only to determine whether the acts complained of constitute a violation of this agreement."
- "The decision of the impartial umpire . . . shall be final and binding."
- "The parties further agree that any party to this agreement to whom they are so bound shall have the right to institute such actions or proceedings as may be necessary to compel compliance with the terms of the agreement only after exhausting all of the steps provided herein."

CIO members of the joint subcommittee on the no-raid agreement were Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers.

John W. Vandercook Says—

'For McCarthy, Ignorance Is The Best Defense'

Joe McCarthy tangled with the U. S. Army last week. McCarthy claimed an Army publication on Soviet Siberia was "Communist propaganda." The Army said it wasn't, and besides the Senator had violated security regulation by releasing information marked "Restricted." Here are excerpts from CIO Commentator John W. Vandercook's coverage of the story:

By JOHN W. VANDERCOOK

THE ARMY, with more gumption than other government departments have lately shown, has hit back at Sen. McCarthy on an issue on which the Army thinks McCarthy has been clearly wrong.

In his most recent effort to save the nation from the Communist menace—and attract attention—McCarthy has given to the press lavish excerpts from an Army publictaion with the snappy title of "Psychological and Cultural Traits of Soviet Siberia." The Army observed that the publication was "Restricted."

It was never intended for general circulation but was put out solely for limited distribution to intelligence officers "to develop understanding of the Soviet people which would be militarily useful in case of war."

TO REVEAL the contents of restricted—that is to say, secret—material is a plain violation of the law. It is exactly the kind of violation of the espionage law of which the Wisconsin Senator has been so fiercely critical when he has discovered that witnesses before his committee have been guilty of it.

The document under fire was apparently an intelligent attempt to explain to U. S. Army intelligence officers how the people of Soviet Siberia reacted to the circumstances under which they live. What our bargain basement Grand Inquisitor seems to have objected to is that the document reported certain aspects of life and work behind the Iron Curtain the Soviet people liked.

SEN. McCARTHY is not a remarkable phenomenon. He only seems extraordinary to us because he is a type which has not been usual in American political life.

The most conspicuous of the traits which fill a great number of the American people with an aching—and increasing—boredom, is his self-righteousness. Sen. McCarthy seems to asure us that he and he alone really cares about hunting out subversion; that no one but himself fully understands the red menace, or stands ready to do anything about it.

The result of that amazing sense of self-importance is that Sen. McCarthy has seemed to be presenting a picture of a whole federal establishment manned by the subversive, the negligent, the uncaring and the ignorant. That is a distorted and dangerously alarming mask which McCarthy has impishly put on the true face of things.

THE SENATOR, of course, also has the usual fault of uncultivated minds—the medieval belief that what you disagree with is simply heresy: that—strangely—heresy is so catching that one must never even peek at the heretics' ideas or he might adopt them.

The Army, in the debated document, was trying to explain communism to certain officers. It added, in a passage the Senator did NOT reveal, "such an existence would be intolerable to Americans."

But the man from Wisconsin, certainly in this instance, seems to try to persuade us that ignorance is the best defense.

Some Of Joe's Best Friends Are Critical

Even some of Sen. McCarthy's best friends are telling him it's time for a change.

The Chicago Tribune, one of the Senator's strongest backers, felt called upon to criticize him editorially for his attack on the Army's document on Soviet Siberia.

"We regret to see him pursuing what looks like a wrong trail," the Tribune editorial said. And the paper went on to point out that the pamphlet in question clearly stated its purpose in its conclusion.

That was the part of the publication McCarthy did not release to the press.

Demos In Happy Mood—

GOP Talks One Way, Acts Another—HST

By HENRY ZON

DEMOCRATS from all over the nation gathered in Chicago last week in a happy mood to talk over problems, raise money, set a course for next year's congressional campaigns, and listen to speeches from party leaders.

At the speech-making sessions they heard former Pres. Harry Truman tick off 10 instances in which the administration of Pres. Eisenhower talked one way and acted another.

They also heard from their standard-bearer in the 1952 campaign, Adlai Stevenson, who reported on his recent world tour and gave his impression of current domestic events.

AT PANEL sessions on agricultural and political organization O. A. Knight, president of the Oil Workers Intl. Union, and William H. Dodds, Jr., educational director and PAC representative for the CIO Auto Workers in Wisconsin, pointed out labor's interests in these fields.

Rules of the party organization were discussed in closed door sessions and, it was reported, the views of northern and southern elements on the so-called loyalty pledge were reconciled.

Speaking to the panel on agriculture and to the more than 600 people who crowded in to hear, Pres. Knight stressed the identity of interests between worker and farmer.

"The farmers' problem is labor's problem too," he said. "Your stake in this is our stake."

When farm income goes down, he noted, purchasing power for the materials labor produces is reduced and workers suffer from lay-offs and curtailed production schedules. Properous farmers mean prosperous workers, Knight said and he urged the enactment of the plan advanced by former Sec. of Agriculture Charles Brannan for supporting farm prices.

Dodds, at a session dealing with organization, discussed the political action work of unions in his area. He noted that where the party organization makes unions feel they are welcome and consults with them on the matter of candidates, more effective work is possible.

Speaking to the $100-a-plate dinner—which Democratic Chairman Stephen Mitchell said netted the party $150,000—Truman said that what's happening in Washington in 1953 is that the finest set of principles in the world are being expressed but that action is being taken in the opposite direction.

"They say," he noted, "they are for better housing but they kill off public housing and raise the interest rate so it is harder to build private housing . . .

"They say the injustices of the Taft-Hartley Law should be corrected but their Secretary of Labor found out they didn't mean it and, being an honest man, he resigned."

"RIGHT NOW," he said, "the most constructive thing I can suggest to this gathering is the election of a Democratic Congress next year.

"That will do more to help the situation than anything else I can think of for this year and next. We can't wait. If we do, the country and the world will go down the road to ruin.

"Then in 1956 we can complete the job. We can take the government of the United States away from big business and return it to all the people where it belongs."

Stevenson noted that the Administration solution for problems seemed to be the appointment of a "study" commission.

"I guess you might call it 'government by postponement'," he remarked.

Noting the changes presently taking place abroad, Stevenson said that "we Democrats will have all the greater need of our resources of imagination, maturity and political courage in these years ahead.

"Let us keep this in mind when we choose our candidates for next year's election."

Unquote

Adlai Stevenson got under the elephant's hide when he told the Democratic conference in Chicago that the GOP Administration has been "government by postponement."

Next day White House Press Sec. James Hagerty reached into Shakespeare and shot back: "It's just sound and fury and the rest of the quotation is 'signifying nothing'."

In this skirmish of quotations, Hagerty's statement reminds us that the Bard of Avon also said: "The lady doth protest too much, me thinks." And the Bible adds: "By their deeds, so shall ye know them."

UAW Praises Durkin, Raps Big Business Domination

"THERE IS no place in the big-business dominated Washington scene today for the voice of the working man and the policies of organized lagor."

That's what the CIO Auto Workers said last week about the resignation of Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin, who quit the Eisenhower Cabinet because of the Administraton's failure to carry out promises to amend the Taft-Hartley Act with "justice and fairness."

THE UAW-CIO Executive Board commended Durkin for his "courageous action" and it condemned the GOP 83rd Congress for budget cuts "crippling" the Labor Dept.

Americans for Democratic Action commented that Durkin's resignation "demonstrates very clearly the obedience of the Eisenhower Administration to the anti-labor bias of those big business interests who would like to shackle the American trade union movement."

GOING beyond his press conference comments, Durkin last week said Pres. Eisenhower personally had repudiated an agreement to submit major Taft-Hartley revisions to Congress.

Durkin said he had conferred with the President in New York Aug. 20 when "the President agreed with me that the 19 amendments should not be withheld, that they should be submitted to Congress." But a few days later, Durkin said the White House told him it would not go along.

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) said the resignation "proved that the Republican promises of last year to change the Taft-Hartley Law were a snare and a delusion to catch votes but not result in action."

Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) predicted "they'll never get another Marty Durkin for the job. They'll have to take some one now who is willing to march in the ranks of the Taft-Hartleyites."

Washington speculation mentioned Arthur S. Flemming, defense mobilizer, and New Jersey Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll, both Republicans, as among possible nominees to fill the Eisenhower Cabinet vacancy.

Food Prices Jump

Dun & Bradstreet reported the sharpest weekly rise in two months drove wholesale food price index up 10c on Sept. 15.

'Peon Wages' For Retail Workers Draws CIO Fire

"PEON WAGES" that would make retail workers "second class citizens" were criticized by a CIO representative at a hearing conducted at Buffalo by Edward Corsi, New York labor commissioner.

The criticism was voiced by Joseph J. Lovas, CIO national representative in Buffalo, against a State's board's minimum wage recommendations for the retail industry. The board recommended minimums ranging from 65c to 75c an hour in intra-state jobs.

Lovas called for a 80c minimum, rejection of the board's recommendations and convening of a new board that "would provide a decent standard of living."

Murray, Haywood Memorials To Be Dedicated In Britain

HOME-TOWN memorial services for the late Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood will be conducted by the CIO in Scotland and England on Oct. 10 and Oct. 11, with a number of union officials in attendance.

Representatives of CIO, the British Trades Union Congress, the Scottish Trades Union Congress and the governments of the U. S. and Britain are expected to attend the ceremonies.

The service honoring the late CIO president will be held at his home town of Blantyre, Scotland, at 3:00 p.m. on Oct. 10. Next day, the group will reassemble in Barnesey, England, for the Haywood services. Memorial plaques will be dedicated at each town.

A number of CIO officials will travel to England for the two services. Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers Union and head of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation, will head the CIO group.

Others will be Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO United Steelworkers; Victor G. Reuther, assistant to the CIO president; Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs; and members of the Murray and Haywood families.

Other CIO union officials, including Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, may make the trip, with final decisions due later this month. The group is scheduled to sail on the S.S. United States from New York Sept. 30.

Arrangements are being handled by Harry Read, assistant to Carey.

After The GOP Blitz, Ike Orders Housing Inquiry

THE EISENHOWER Administration last week locked the barn door after the housing cart was stolen.

A special advisory committee on government housing policies and programs—one of nearly a score of such bodies set up by the GOP—was named to look into the nation's housing needs.

The actions came after these related anti-housing moves since Inauguration Day:

1. Federal rent ceilings were wiped out for some five million tenant families; no enforcement staff is policing such controls as remain in a few defense areas.

2. The low-rent housing program was decapitated. Congress allowed only enough funds to build 20,000 units already contracted for, with no new construction projects. GOP housing foes boasted that meant the end of slum clearance projects.

3. "Hard money" interest boosting programs stepped up by the Eisenhower Administration have made homes harder to buy.

4. New home construction has declined for each of the last three months, hitting at employment not only in the building trades but in related fields.

Big builders, bankers and home financiers predominate in the membership of the new Eisenhower advisory committee, which is headed by Albert M. Cole, chief of the Housing & Home Finance Agency (and a long-time foe of public housing.)

Only two committee members represent labor. They are James G. Thimmes, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee and vice president of the CIO Steelworkers, and Richard J. Gray, president of the AFL Building Trades Dept. Nine bankers are among the other members.

Eisenhower said he expected the committee to "develop for me a series of recommendations which will clearly identify the proper role of the federal government in this field and outline more economical and effective means for improving the housing conditions of our people."

Wagner Wins N. Y. Primary By Landslide

A LANDSLIDE victory for the Fair Deal program won last week in the Democratic primary for mayor of New York City.

Robert F. Wagner, Jr., Manhattan borough president and son of the late U. S. Senator, defeated the incumbent, Vincent R. Impellitteri. Wagner was supported by such New Dealers as Sen. Lehman and Rep. Roosevelt.

The election was described as a defeat for James A. Farley, conservative Democrat and former national chairman of the party, who backed Impellitteri. Wagner got 350,000 votes, Impellitteri 180,880.

The Labor Committee for Wagner wound up the campaign for the successful candidate with a television show broadcast from Transport Hall of Local 100 of the CIO Transport Workers at which Roosevelt and Wagner were the principal speakers. TWU Pres. Michael Quill presided.

The Labor Dept.

The resignation of Martin Durkin as Secretary of Labor was both applauded and regretted by the unions of the CIO and AFL.

It was applauded because workers rightly felt that Durkin did the honorable thing in leaving the government when his suggestions were over-ruled and agreements into which he had entered were violated.

His resignation was regretted because it symbolizes so directly the dimming of a hope—the hope that Pres. Eisenhower would not fall prey to the big business sentiments of the men who dominate his official family.

Last fall, when so many promises were being made, Candidate Eisenhower promised "fairness and justice" in the amending of the Taft-Hartley Act. In his speech to the AFL convention, he spelled out some of the changes that he felt were necessary in Taft-Hartley.

Eventful months have passed. The White House and its staff have undergone great changes. Many of the promises that swung independent voters to Eisenhower have been forgotten.

Martin Durkin took these promises at face value, and as a patriotic American, took the Labor Dept. helm to translate them into fact. He worked hard to win Administration approval of decent amendments to the labor law. But the people to whom the President listened were not the men of labor but those who want to make Taft-Hartley even more severe against unions.

So successful were they that the President declined even to accept Taft-Hartley amendments that had been proposed by the late Senator Taft. And behind the scenes, according to the Wall Street Journal, Sec. of Commerce Weeks was organizing a businessmen's Cabinet committee to sabotage any pro-labor Taft-Hartley proposals by Secretary Durkin that might win the President's approval.

Thus, the Labor Dept., which Eisenhower had promised greater status than ever before, was ignored and weakened still further; pledges were broken; and the future of this Administration's relationship to the unions of the country has been placed in grave doubt.

The Eisenhower Administration, by the character of its appointments and the nature of its policies, has convinced many Americans that it is a big business government. It now runs the danger, unless present trends are changed, of responding too readily to anti-labor forces, both within and outside of government.

'Consumer Be Damned'

Treasury Sec. George Humphrey confesses that he's getting "just a little irritated" because his increasingly-frequent predictions of a federal sales tax are building up a grassfire of popular protest.

What the friends of the sales tax aren't mentioning is that the government can meet its revenue needs without swatting low-income families by fair tax laws which would close up some of the present wide-open tax loopholes—like the oil depletion allowance—and continue the excess profits tax.

The Administration's record so far, as Sen. Gillette (D. Iowa) has suggested, is one in which the tycoon's old boast of "the public be damned" has been modified to "the consumer be damned."

The Melancholy Days Have Come

In Other Words—

The Case For Industry Councils

The following article on the CIO's Industry Council Plan was written by John Brophy, coordinator for the CIO Free World Fund and a veteran CIO official. It is reprinted from Work, paper of the Chicago Catholic Labor Alliance.

By JOHN BROPHY

WHAT IS CIO'S "Industry Council Plan?" When and where was it born. What is it all about? The great depression of 1929, the New Deal, and then a recession in 1938 gave American labor cause to ponder whether strict "bread and butter" unionism could deal fully with the problems of mass production industrialism.

Many union leaders began to see that no union operating alone, along conventional trade union lines, could solve the problems that limit collective bargaining and prevent full employment.

Philip Murray was one of those within the CIO who, during the defense and war years, saw the need for long-range solutions of our economic and social problems. The Industry Council Plan (ICP) got its beginning then, in the thinking and planning of the CIO.

A Program Of Planning

It was in the winter of 1940-41 that CIO leaders presented to Pres. Roosevelt plans to step up production based on the industry Council Plan. Walter P. Reuther presented a program for aircraft expansion in the defense period which was a specific application of the ICP to one industry. A few weeks later, Phil Murray produced a program for the steel industry. A little later, the aluminum workers followed with a comparable plan.

Was the CIO's Industry Council Plan only a wartime proposal? In 1944 Philip Murray presented to the CIO convention his postwar reemployment program, an integral part of which was the ICP. At nearly every CIO convention since then, we have adopted a resolution reaffirming the Industry Council Plan as basic CIO policy.

What is the ICP? The ICP is a program of comprehensive national economic planning. The people of America, through their government and their economic organizations, labor unions, farm organizations, and consumer societies, must have a voice in the key decisions of the basic and monopolistic industries which affect their lives.

How is a program of industrial planning to be accomplished? Representative boards, called industry councils, would be established. There would be one in each basic industry, representing labor and management, and one overall national board composed of representatives from labor, management, farmers, consumers and government.

What critical decisions would have to be dealt with by such democratic industrial planning? They would include:

1. Production, investment, and employment levels.

2. The rate and nature of mechanization and technological change.

3. The establishment of minimum wage floors and strict ceilings on the hours of labor.

4. Firm price ceilings established throughout the administrative mechanisms of the corporations but subject to democratic public control (and the closely connected questions of the nature and quality of the goods produced).

5. Labor-management relations, public relations (meaning propaganda and advertising), and the foreign relations of our big corporations.

6. The policies of these corporations in respect to natural resources and in respect to size and location of industrial plants (questions which are deeply involved in all regional planning for the benefit of the people).

Legislation Is Necessary

National economic planning is not new in America. The corporations have been doing their own planning at our expense for a long time. We need to put these decisions on a democratic basis by providing for participation by government and the economic organizations involved.

Legislation will be required to launch it. It will need the conscious cooperation of the respective functional groups to give it a fair start. It is a long-range program to be realized by evolution, not revolution.

The ICP can be labor's most effective answer to the extremism of communism and other forms of totalitarianism.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE ORIGINAL GUESS of reporters as Pres. Ike's "new team" took over was that bumbling Defense Sec. Charles Erwin Wilson would be the first Cabinet member to depart. Instead it was Martin P. Durkin, president on leave of the AFL Plumbers Union and Secretary of Labor.

Rumor

Big news in Washington sometimes is on the society page, rather than page one, as for example in the Washington Post:

"New Yorkers are saying that it would make Gov. Tom Dewey very happy if Sec. of State John Foster Dulles would be ousted because he'd like the job himself! And talk there is if a Cabinet change should occur, Gov. Dewey would be tapped and Mr. Dulles would be named to the Supreme Court bench, under Harold Burton who would become Chief Justice."

Durkin, as a man of honor, found himself facing an intolerable situation.

He was scheduled to speak to the AFL convention in St. Louis on Monday, Sept. 21, as an apologist of the Eisenhower Administration.

He would have had to speak to the CIO convention at Cleveland in November—and again, if he had remained in the Cabinet, as a representative of the "businessmen's" administration.

This position became increasingly impossible for him.

He thought he had obtained "agreement" on certain modest changes in the Taft-Hartley law—although, it should be observed, he couldn't obtain even tentative agreement on wiping out the vicious so-called national emergency sections.

Durkin suddenly learned that he was unable to match the big-businessmen's influence on the Administration even on modest Taft-Hartley revisions—the kind the late Sen. Taft would himself have been willing to accept. So he took a walk, right out of the Cabinet and into a position of freedom and dignity.

It may appropriately be pointed out that Durkin's appointment was a Republican attempted slick trick, the kind of politics that Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell learned to play in New York under Gov. Tom Dewey. The idea was to split some labor forces from pro-New Deal positions.

Durkin took the Cabinet post with complete propriety. Even though he was a Democrat and a pro-Stevenson man last year, he had an obligation to try to work with the new administration when he was asked.

He had no obligation to function, after he learned what was happening, as a pro-Republican trained seal, while Commerce Sec. Sinclair Weeks dominated policy and Eisenhower refused to back up the man he had requested to serve in the Labor Dept. post.

He Just Hates Taxes

The Republican chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee is a cantankerous old gentleman, Uncle Dan'l Reed of New York, who hates and fears all kinds of taxes—and probably will save the country from Treas. Sec. Humphrey's projected federal sales tax.

He simply hates taxes—income taxes, sales taxes, any other taxes. He also hates to see his Republican Party win an election on promises to cut spending and taxes and then dishonor the pledges by simply shifting the nature of taxes.

Sec. Humphrey is more sophisticated. He would like to get rid of some graduated income taxes and substitute a federal sales tax. This would have the single effect of transferring the burden of taxes from those best able to pay to those least able to pay.

The financial responsibilities of our world position would be transferred from those whose standard of luxury is cut by high income taxes to those whose basic standard of living—food and shoes for the children—would be cut by the sales tax.

Uncle Dan'l Reed says that Sec. Humphrey can't get away with this scheme—and the betting is at least 20 to 1 that Dan'l is right.

If enough Republicans are returned to increase GOP majorities in the 84th Congress, however, and if Reed could be worn down by the burdens of his job and the pressures of the Treasury, 1955 might tell a different story.

A Fighter For Principle

It is a pleasure to report that one New Dealer in the government has never quit fighting for his principles, and that he apparently will continue fighting until his term expires late this month. He is Stephen J. Spingarn, a member of the Federal Trade Commission.

The FTC is being dismantled both by its new pro-business members and by slashes in its appropriations. Spingarn points out that budget cuts are reducing the agency to about 600 persons—about 15% smaller than in 1939 or in 1918. The advertising volume the commission is supposed to police has jumped—from $250 million a year, originally, to about $7 billion.

Spingarn's dissent from his fellow commissioners' budget requests for fiscal 1955 also emphasizes that the FTC now has fewer economists to work on fact-finding studies than ever in its history—

Ike's men in the FTC aren't following any "middle way" philosophy. They are helping destroy the laws they are supposed to enforce.

Confusion Confounded—

Uncle Sam, The Biggest Boss, Is Called 'Worst One' With Reason

In the background for the "job jitters" among federal employes are the antiquated, complicated personnel policies of U. S. agencies.

Some of the contradictions of those policies are described by Sam Stavisky in an article titled "The Nation's Worst Boss" in Nation's Business, U. S. Chamber of Commerce magazine. With permission, here is a digest of the article:

By SAM STAVISKY

A GOVERNMENT PERSONNEL officer, interviewing a job candidate, wanted to know why the applicant had been laid off only a week before by another federal agency.

"I was caught in a reduction in force," the applicant replied.

The personnel officer wasn't satisfied. He wanted to know the details.

"Well," explained the applicant, "I proposed a program for improving the efficiency of my department. The suggestion did away with the need for three clerks. On the basis of the layoff rules, I was one of the three dismissed. On the day I was let go, I was given a cash award for acceptance of my efficiency suggestion."

Civil Service Is Evaded

An incredible story? Not so. The personnel officer vouches for the story. A two-year investigation of the federal Government under the Truman Administration conducted by the Senate Manpower Subcommittee confirms the fact that this incident, though uniquely ironic, is symptomatic of the wasteful personnel practices of the federal Government.

As a direct employer of more than 2.7 million civilian workers, Uncle Sam is the country's biggest boss. However, the congressional probe leaves no doubt that Uncle Sam is the nation's poorest, least efficient employer.

The subcommittee's staff investigators, directed by Melvin Purvis, former FBI agent, discovered that Civil Service was something that all government officials talked about—in public favorably—but which many evaded whenever possible.

Why? Because civil service procedures are antiquated, cumbersome and often ineffectual.

U. S. Agencies Compete

For example, during the rapid expansion of government under the impact of the mobilization program in 1951, two out of three government jobs in Washington, and one out of two in the field (where 90% of the federal positions are located) could not be filled by regular civil service channel. The operating agencies had to recruit their own personnel, often competing with each other for the same manpower.

The subcommittee found that the cost of laying off workers is "excessive," and that because of outmoded procedures, the Government is losing many of its most efficient and highly skilled workers.

Reduction in force hit employes on the basis of each worker's retention points. These points are measured by four factors. Least important factor, the subcommittee found, is efficiency. Seniority also is given little weight.

The dominant factor in retention is tenure of employment. This is divided into 26 categories and subgroups. Veterans have retention priority over nonveterans within the same tenure group.

As this complicated system works out, the employe with more retention points can and does bump off the employe with fewer points, setting off a costly chain reaction down the line.

Best People Lost

Each threatened reduction in force scares the employes of the agency into hunting new jobs before the ax falls. As a result, the agency often loses its best people—some of whom might have escaped the layoff. Meanwhile, the actual bumping reaction, once it gets under way, creates unrest for weeks, and keeps the bureau in a constant turmoil of restaffing, restraining, and changing records.

Costs of reduction in force are so exorbitant that a top federal personnel expert told the subcommittee: "Based on our exeprience, it is believed that the cost in man hours and money of reduction in force as now administered, in addition to the loss of morale of employes of the agency, is far greater than the actual money saved by legislative action requiring a reduction in force."

"The vast majority of government employes are reliable, conscientious, and hard-working people who want to do a job," the group concluded.

"If we can rid the federal structure of red tape and antiquated practices, government workers will be able to make their finest contributions to the public service."

Report From The South—

UAW's Role Against Bias Hailed

AN IMPARTIAL SURVEY last week praised the CIO Auto Workers for helping the International Harvester Co. to enforce its anti-discrimination policy in three southern plants.

The report of the Committee of the South of the National Planning Association pointed out that at two of the plants, Memphis and Evansville, Ind., the UAW-CIO is "virtually the sole representative on non-managerial ship employes."

At the Louisville plant UAW shares jurisdiction with other unions. The report which was prepared for the committee by John Hope, II, director of industrial relations, Fisk Univ., Race Relations Dept., says:

"The company minority policy states 'there shall be no discrimination against any person because of nationality, race, sex, political or religious affiliation.'

Gains In Skilled Jobs

"While this policy was espoused and implementation initiated before unions obtained bargaining rights in any of these plants, virtually all of the union locals, both CIO and AFL, which subsequently became representatives of the employes have accepted the policy and incorporated it into their contracts with management.

"The clauses in some of the craft union contracts are less comprehensive than those on some other locals at the Louisville Works, but generally they are at least explicitly nondiscriminatory as the prevailing policies of their parent international unions.

"Through the continuous application of this minority policy in these three plants from their beginning, the Negro's share in their total employment has continuously increased, and the percentage of Negroes engaged in job classifications above the unskilled level has grown significantly.

"From the time the plants were opened until the end of 1950, Negro employment more than trebled at the Louisville Works, and approximately doubled at Evansville and Memphis in relative importance.

"During the same period, of the total number of Negroes employed in the respective southern plants, the percentage of those engaged in job classifications above common labor almost doubled at the Louisville, was more than five times as great at the Evansville Works, and almost trebled at the Memphis Works."

For The Ladies—

Women Workers From 23 Nations Meet

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

LIFE is not exactly a bed of roses for working women in this country. Both on the job and in the union they still have their difficulties. But compared to the lot of women in many parts of the world, American women live in a paradise.

Here we take it for granted that a woman, married or unmarried, has a right to work anytime and anywhere she can get a job—not to mention other rights, including the right to vote, and her right to membership in a union.

Such things were unknown to many of the 50 women from 23 countries in Asia, Africa, and Europe who attended the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions first summer school on women's union activities held at the Chateau Breviere, near Paris.

Two CIO women who attended the school were Sara Fredgant, of Philadelphia, from the Clothing Workers, and Gwendolyn De Roche, of Denver, from the Communications Workers.

Held In Chateau

The ICFTU school, which was run with the support of UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization), was held in a romantic 19th century chateau owned by the Swedish trade unions.

Among the women from faraway countries where little about unions is heard, was Safie Diallo, teacher at a girls' college in French Guinea, who said she was the only woman so far to belong to a union. (Only 10,000 men out of a population of two million are trade union members.)

Another teacher, Aubertine Ravaoarisoa, of Madagascar, a leader of the Union of Civil Servants & Teachers, said that women in her country meet with severe difficulties when they want to get higher education.

Dowry Headaches

Mme. Paule Malroux, a representative of the French Union Assembly, who spoke on efforts being made to improve the lot of women in French territories, told of conditions of West African women. She blamed most of the ills on "polygamy . . . and the unhappiness it entails to women."

The problem of dowry, she said, makes it difficult for young men to marry. Eligible wives are bought by old men.

In large areas, she said the signature of a marriage contract means only that "the woman changes hands, and is transferred from her own family estate to that of her husband's family, who purchases her for a prearranged price, which constitutes her dowry—so many goats, so many bushels of millet, or money. Her children are the property of her husband."

"If the husband dies, the widow remains part and parcel of the estate of the deceased, and is handed over to the heirs . . . generally to his brother," Mme. Malroux said.

Indira Mane from Bombay, India, also a trade union leader, had a less depressing story to tell, although she explained that women as trade unionists still suffer many handicaps. Miss Mane is treasurer of the West Railway Employes Union, one of India's oldest unions, founded in 1920. Only 150 out of a total membership of 25,000 are women.

The president of the union is Miss Maniben Kara—only woman in India to hold such a position, Miss Mane said. Miss Kara was formerly a substitute member of the ICFTU executive board elected at the second Congress held in Milan in July 1951.

"Indian social traditions are such that it is unusual for women workers to take up the day-to-day activities of trade unionism and assume responsible posts within the union," Miss Mane said. "Ignorance and superstition are equally responsible for the women's non-participation in trade union activities."

Only in the textile industry do women make up a substantial proportion of union members. In Bombay and Madya Pradesh "women workers have played an important part in the struggle for textile workers. During the strikes they stood in picket lines at mill gates and marched in processions, defying the bans imposed on meetings and parades," Miss Mane said.

"India is in full development. Tremendous possibilities are open to women in a country where everything is in the making, and the new Indian Constitution gave women increased attention from the state and the political parties."

Gains In Africa

An encouraging account of improvements in the lot of women and trade unions was also given by Miss Nya Enian Inyang, principal of a girls' school in Calabar, Nigeria. Miss Inyang has belonged to the Nigerian Union of Teachers since 1931.

She said the union, which has a membership of more than 28,500, is credited with "many achievements for improvement of the (free) teaching services in Nigeria."

There were both light and dark spots in the report given at the ICFTU school by Miss Violet Lynch, trade union official from Barbados, British West Indies. She is secretary of the Barbados Workers Union, founded in 1937. The union includes groups of all workers of the island and has 9000 members, with 1000 of them women.

"Not many women do actual trade union work because of the spirit of fear, cowardice and insecurity still looming over them," Miss Lynch said.

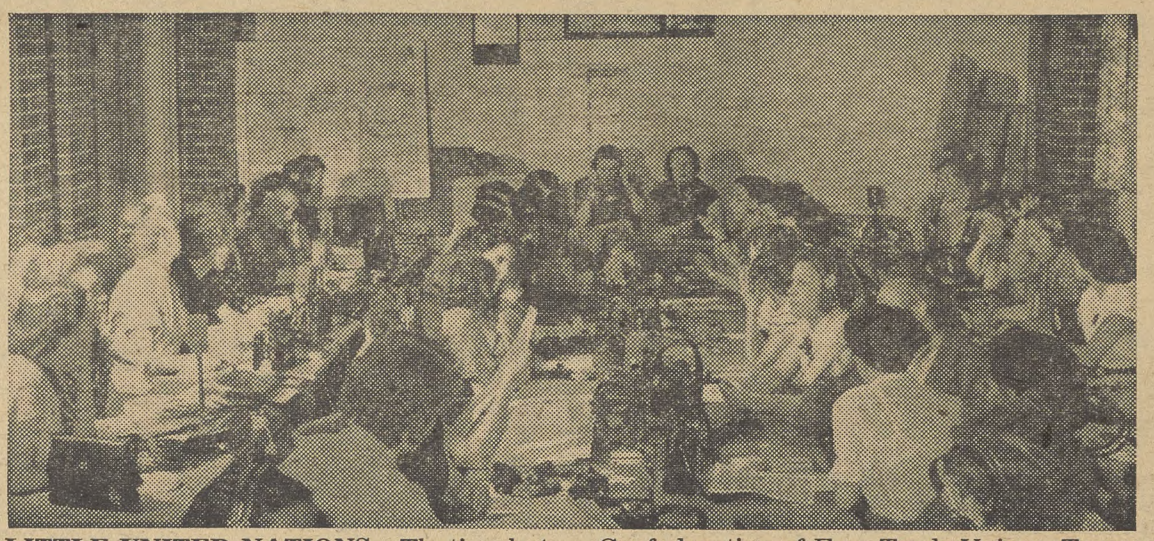
A lot of work lies ahead for both men and women in the West Indies, Miss Lynch said. "There are slums to be cleared, housing schemes to be extended, health services to be developed, personal hygiene and sanitation to be taught and practiced . . . promiscuity to be wiped out."

Report To ACW

A report on the ICFTU women's conference was given by Miss Fredgant to the ACW Joint Board in Philadelphia.

"Today strong traditions still remain which tie women to the performance of the most back-breaking, strenuous labor for long hours in factories as well as the home," in many nations, she said.

"The educational and social systems of many of these countries still do not provide women with the opportunity to develop their capacity for leadership and responsibility. The delegates (at the school) recognized that in these areas especially, the first major job was to broaden educational opportunities for women, together with the task of breaking down the prejudices against them that exist."



LITTLE UNITED NATIONS—That's what this scene looked like, as women trade unionists from all over the world met at conference in France sponsored by Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Translator earphones were on almost every delegates head, as sessions were conducted in English, French and German.

'We Cannot Afford To Forget Them'

The British Trades Union Congress will try to organize 1.25 million working mothers in the United Kingdom. Every third worker in Britain is a woman but only every seventh working woman belongs to a union.

Organizers for the TUC have been reminded that "married women and mothers are playing a role in the economic life of the country unprecedented in peacetime. In our trade union movement we cannot afford to forget them."

Older Women Join Work Force

There are 19 million women working in the United States today. They make up about 30% of the total labor force. What is less known is that more than half of these working women are married.

The number of married working women increased from 7.5 million in 1947 to 10.4 million in April 1952.

A good part of the married women with jobs are in the older age group. Figures showed that the greatest proportion of working wives are in their early forties (33.3%) while married women in their fifties entered the labor force in about the same proportions as those in their twenties and early thirties. Around 25% are in both groups.

No Smoochin'—

Social Notes On Salween— Or, Reds Put Crimp On Cupid

LOVE among the Communists in Burma—land famous in song and story for such romantic props as the Road to Mandalay, the mysterious Saliveen and Irrawady Rivers, towering mountains and soft temple bells—has been taken strictly under control by the comrades.

When the blind bow-boy's dart lodges in the fluttering heart of an ardent young party member, he can't do a thing about it until he tells the party executive committee that he wants to pay court to his beloved. But no smoochin' even after he gets the go-ahead signal. Standbys like "I love you" and "Where have you been all my life?" are barred. The proper approach:

"I am deeply impressed by your qualities as a faithful and energetic member of the party, and I wish to wage the party struggle together with you."

If this impassioned declaration doesn't win the lady, the committee can give the lucky fellow two additional tries. She can turn him down twice without giving any reason—if she has one. But if she does it the third time, she has to tell the committee why.

The Communist swain gets one break, though. He gets a clear field while he's wooing. Competition, the party has decreed, is a capital offense punishable with death.

'Stop The Raw Deal'—

'Shameful' Record Of GOP Hit By URW

By AL ZACK

"THE SHAMEFUL record of the Eisenhower Administration and the Republican leadership of the 83rd Congress" was condemned in emphatic, measured tones last week by the CIO Rubber Workers.

Meeting in Grand Rapids, Mich., in their 18th annual convention, the URW delegates charged the GOP had "refused to provide for the people of the U. S. those very measures which they promised in their campaign speeches."

Calling for expanded, intensified political action by every local union, the 600 delegates looked forward to 1954 as "an opportunity to replace the reactionary elements now in control with liberal, progressive and humane legislators."

A Liberal Congress

Summed up, the delegates rejection was contained in one pithy sign which looked down on the huge auditorium all week: "Stop the raw deal—elect a liberal Congress in 54."

In the resolution, recommended by the General Executive Board, approved unanimously by the resolutions committee, and adopted by the delegates with a vigorous roar, the Rubber Workers charged:

1. The GOP won in 1952 "through a campaign based on deception, reckless promises, insincere pledges and the expenditure of huge sums of money."

2. Since gaining power "they have proceeded in a systematic program to erase the tremendous advances of the past 20 years."

By acclamation, the URW's top international officers were returned to office—Pres. L. S. Buckmaster to his ninth term, and Vice Pres. Joseph Childs and Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker to their fifth terms.

Throughout the long convention sessions, marked by a serious, quiet air and numerous short speeches on every issue, the delegates considered a host of proposed constitutional changes.

Chief proposal was for a shift to conventions every two years, with national officers serving two-year terms. The proposal brought five hours of debate and a lengthy roll call, before failing to pass.

Proponents argued that annual conventions were a costly financial drain on the international and the locals, and that small locals could not afford to send delegates and meet normal operating expenses.

Opponents held that annual conventions and annual elections were more democratic and their arguments prevailed. On the roll call vote, the delegates lined up 937 for the change and 786 against. Since the proposal would have changed the constitution, it needed 1150 votes, or a two-thirds majority, to win.

Heeding the advice of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to watch with extreme care federal tax legislation, the convention charged that proposals of the National Association of Manufacturers for a federal sales tax were "unfair and inequitable." The convention urged all locals to being "a broad educational campaign" to warn members of this "serious threat to their living standards.

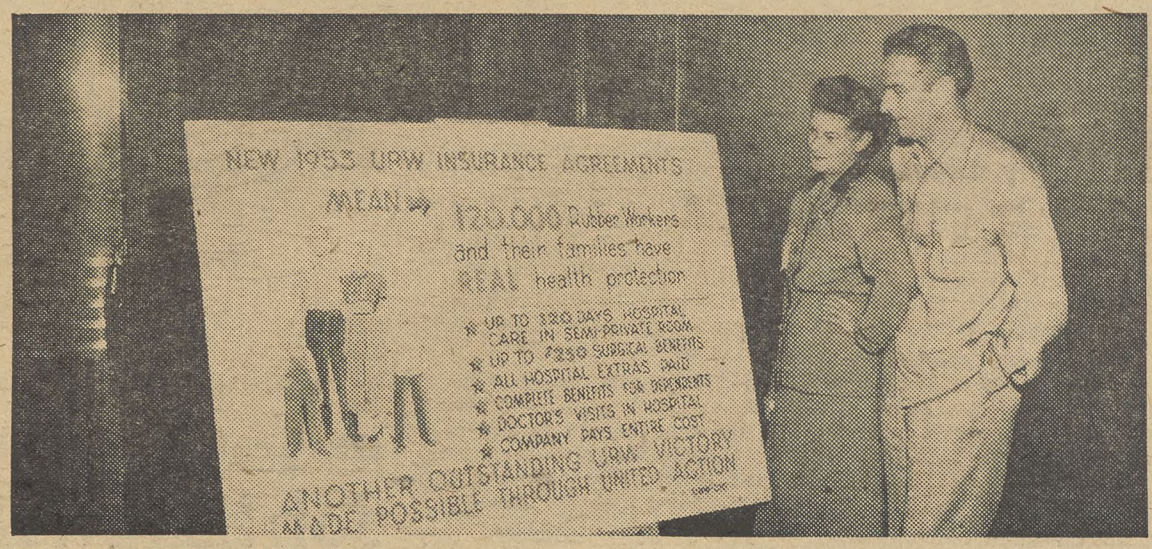
The convention praised the no-raiding agreement negotiated between CIO and the AFL.

The convention authorized the Buckmaster to "execute the agreement on behalf of the URW" in the event the no-raiding agreement is approved by the forthcoming conventions of the CIO and AFL.

The "give-away, take-away" record to date of the GOP Administration was strongly condemned by Reuther and Buckmaster (see adjoining story).

Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan also blasted the Administration, charging it had failed to keep its promises on Taft-Hartley.

Williams called for immediate action "from the grass roots of the labor movement to the very top" cautioning that failure to act now would be meek submission to the Administration.



SOLID GAINS of CIO Rubber Workers in recent negotiations for better health insurance benefits for 120,000 URW members and their families are admired by Edward Hester and his wife. Hester is a URW Executive Board member, Local 154 president, and executive secretary of the Denver Area CIO Council.

CIO RUBBER Workers and their dependents will be free of the gnawing worry of unexpected hospital and surgical bills by the summer of 1954.

That was the pledge of URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster as the 18th annual convention of the URW opened in Grand Rapids, Mich., last week.

It was a pledge based on 1953 accomplishments in negotiations with the rubber industry's five largest producers.

Already the union's campaign to win company-paid hospital and surgical coverage has gained such protection for more than 100,000 members of the union and their dependents.

The drive to extend the coverage to workers in more than 275 other firms under URW contract has already begun, Buckmaster said, predicting victory by next summer.

Gains Summarized

The URW bargaining gains, which CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther hailed as "outstanding," were part of the 12-cent package won this summer. Buckmaster catalogued the gains for rubber workers and their dependents this way:

120 days of hospitalization in semi-private rooms

Complete payment for all miscellaneous hospital services

Surgical benefits up to $250.

The total cost of premiums, worth roughly $14 million annually, is carried by the companies.

Buckmaster hailed the plan as a "tremendous advance" but he warned that it was not the full answer. Cancer, heart disease and diabetes, he cautioned, could only be prevented by regular, costly examinations and treatments, generally in a doctor's office.

URW Chief Hopes For Labor Unity

Rubber Workers Pres. L. S. Buckmaster is hopeful of organic unity of the CIO and AFL.

"We need all the power we can muster," he said, "to fight the forces which now control the political climate in Washington."

BIG BUSINESS control of the present Administration came under slashing attack at the 18th annual convention of the CIO Rubber Workers in Grand Rapids, Mich., last week.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, the main convention speaker, called it "an exclusive millionaire's team" which, he said, "is taking over the Administration lock, stock and barrel."

Reuther told the cheering 600 delegates from 33 states and two Canadian provinces that American workers faced a two-headed threat, from the Communists on the far left and the reactionaries on the right.

Both are wrong, Reuther said, pointing out that the "future of the world freedom hinges on what we do to the American economy."

Both the Communists and big business, he charged, are predicting a new American depression and he pledged an all-out fight by CIO to prevent one.

Reuther charged that big business "has lost faith in the future of the American economy in peacetime," and he recalled urging Pres. Eisenhower to plan now to prevent a skidding economy.

Labor, he said, is in the vanguard fighting for a progressive America, with a better living standard for all. That, he pointed out, is the pathway toward world peace and America's most potent answer to Communist threats.

"Men like Philip Murray and Allan Haywood," the CIO president continued, "who devoted their lifetime to the day-to-day task of making life better for workers, did more in one year in the practical fight against Communists than all the fat boys in Wall Street will do in their whole lifetime."

Reuther promised a winning battle by the CIO Auto Workers to win a guaranteed annual wage in 1955 when major auto contracts are reopened.

"The antiquated, worn-out idea of paying workers by the hour won't meet the needs of our modern technological society," he told the cheering delegates. "Workers live by the year. They must be paid by the year."

"We are going to get the guaranteed annual wage in 1955," he predicted flatly.

Buckmaster, speaking in calm and measured tones, condemned the "organized godlessness, the divine right of brute force" of the Communists and the "selfish minority in the U. S. always ready to rob the majority of their just rights."

Denouncing the "present give-away, take-away policies of the Eisenhower Administration," the URW president charged "the present political situation constitutes the gravest threat to confront the American people since Hoover left the White House 20 years ago."

Buckmaster lauded Martin Durkin, ex-Secretary of Labor, for his "honest, sincere" step in resigning when the Administration reneged on its pledges. Durkin, he said, showed a "much better understanding of the American people than anyone else in the Administration."

Sarcastically, he branded Eisenhower's campaign promise to amend the Taft-Hartley law to make it "fair and just" as a "reckless promise" which administration stalwarts would not allow him to keep.

A Sure Formula For Quick Results

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has "a magic formula" for achieving a $1.25 minimum wage, he told the CIO Rubber Workers convention.

"But no one will ever use it," he predicted.

Reuther would sentence every member of Congress, who voted against increasing the federal minimum wage to $1.25 an hour, to support himself and his family on that income level.

"It wouldn't take very long for them to change their votes," he opined.

Winter Comes Early—

Gold Miners Seek Basic Rights In Long Canadian Ore Strike

By GERVASE N. LOVE

WINTER arrived early this year in Ontario's North. Six to eight inches of cold, wet snow fell last week on Timmins, center of the gold-rich Porcupine camp, after 24 hours of heavy rain.

It broke power lines, felled trees two feet in diameter and blocked main traffic arteries.

But it wasn't enough to dim the spirit of the intrepid members of the CIO Steelworkers in the ninth week of a strike for basic goals won years ago in industrialized Canada.

ABOUT 1000 of miners are on strike at four gold mines in the Porcupine area — Broulan Reef, Delnite, Preston East Dome and Hallnor.

A few miles away, in the Noranda-Rouyn field in Northwestern Quebec, some 1600 additional USA-CIO members have been on strike since Aug. 21 at the Noranda Mining & Smelting Co., which mines copper and processes both copper and gold ore.

The aims of these hard-rock miners and smeltermen are the same as those other workers in Canada and the United States have enjoyed for years—decent wages, the 40-hour week, the checkoff as the minimum form of union security, and a pension and health insurance plan.

"We're fighting the same fight in Northwestern Ontario and Northwestern Quebec that was fought in our industrial centers years ago," said C. H. Millard, USA-CIO Canadian director.

"The issue is whether they're going to try and get along with the union or destroy it."

TO THE STRIKERS and to all fair-minded Canadian citizens, it is apparent that the employers in both fields are following a common policy: One of not trying to get along with the union.

It's entirely reasonable they should, for the Noranda Co. dominates the Noranda-Rouyn Field, controls three of the Ontario gold mines, and carries a lot of weight with the rest through interlocking directorates and the Canadian Mine Operators Association.

Gold mining is hard, dirty work. Death all too often is at the side of the miner as he grubs for the precious metal. Serious injuries are commonplace. Silicosis, or miner's asthma, is frequents. Great physical exertion is required, and men burn out early.

But the employers, sparked by Noranda and its tycoon owner, R. Y. Murdoch, one of the most powerful men in Canada, refuse to treat their employes as human beings with a right to organize unions for their mutual advancement, a right they are guaranteed by the law. They have constantly rejected Conciliation Board recommendations.

In other nearby industries, including some owned or dominated by Murdoch, some form of union security is common. But at Noranda and Timmins the mine operators are obdurate about even the minimum form, the checkoff.

MURDOCH has indicated his company might be willing to talk with the union about wages, but not until the union abandon the checkoff.

The strike hasn't been an easy one. Mass picketing kept the scabs out of the mines and the smelter until the operators, like employers elsewhere, precipitated a series of picket line incidents and obtained injunctions limiting pickets to four at each gate.

Since then, a few scabs have trickled into some of the mines, but not enough to break the determination of the strikers. The walkout has the growing support of the Canadian Congress of Labor and the whole Canadian labor movement.

Mining Wages Are Incredibly Low

Wages in the gold fields are incredibly low. The Canadian Bureau of Statistics reported that average hourly earnings last Apr. 1 were $1.31. Noranda has a basic hiring rate of but $1.05.

In other basic industries, rates range from $1.59 in plants making agriculture instruments to $1.68 in primary iron and steel mills and $1.69 in auto plants.

Practically all Ontario gold mines are on the 48-hour week. In all Canadian manufacturing, the average work-week is 41.5 hours—and in all mining it is only 42.7 hours.

Harvester Local Protests—

Job Layoffs Mounting— And So Are Profits

GROWING LAYOFFS in the auto, aircraft, electrical and farm implement industries were reported last week, as a CIO Auto Workers local cited record sales and profits of International Harvester — where some of the biggest layoffs occured.

While Harvester Pres. John L. McCaffrey "keeps talking about 'bad business,' 'sick industry,' 'slump' and 'empty pocket book,'" said UAW-CIO local 6 at the I-H Melrose Park, Ill., plant, "the company's own figures show that profits and sales continue at a record high level."

The local pointed out that the firm's profits for the first nine months of the current fiscal year rose $75,000 over the same period last year and sales were 1.9% higher. Yet Harvester has laid off 10,300 workers during the past month in 17 of its 19 plants.

FACTORY HIRINGS dropped in July to the lowest rate for that month since 1949 and layoffs rose markedly during that month, according to the latest Bureau of Labor Statistics report.

General Electric furloughed 700 workers at its Erie, Pa., home freezer and refrigerator plant because the products are "not moving." Republic Steel has laid off 450 workers at its Canton, O., alloy steel factory during the past two weeks because of slackening demand.

The McDonnell Aircraft Corp., St. Louis, announced it was cutting its employment level from 14,100 to 12,000—on top of a reduction of some 1000 since the middle of June.

Government defense contract changes also caused decreased employment at Boeing Airplane Co., Bell Aircraft and Baldwin, Lima-Hamilton Corp.

AIR FORCE cancellation of a $3.5 million contract caused Aircraft Engineering & Maintenance Co. to lay off 100 workers in the past month and to plan to furlough another 200 over the next two months.

Defense industries also not the only ones affected, the Journal said. As a result of lack of orders, the Bay City Lumber Co., Aberdeen, Wash., is shutting down its hemlock mills operation for an indefinite period—throwing some 150 employes out of work.

Optimist

Treasury Sec. Humphrey told the National Press Club in Washington last week that, despite "soft spots," he saw no reason to expect a major business recession.

"There is no reason for any one to fear if here and there are some soft spots," he said. "Such readjustments by business can be healthy if they don't all happen at once."

Miners, Oil Workers Get The Same Bitter Medicine

THE MAN regarded by miners as the evil genius of Canadian metal mining, R. Y. Murdoch, is a Toronto capitalist who believes miners should work a 48-hour week and enjoy only four holidays a year because they wouldn't know what to do with more leisure.

His interests are widespread.

Besides being president of three Porcupine area gold mines —Hallnor, Pamour and Aunor— he also is president of Norbeau mines, Quebec, Waite Amulet mines, Goldale mines, Amulet Dufault mines, Kerr-Addison gold mines, and Midcamp mines.

He is vice president and a director of Pacific (Eastern) Gold Mines; Wright-Hargreaves mines; Hollinger Consolidated gold mines; the Mining Corp. of Canada; Iron Ore Co.; Cariboo Quartz Mining Co., and Labrador Mining & Exploration Co.

Noranda has 16 subsidiaries and holds interests in 17 other companies.

Murdoch also owns Canadian Copper Refineries, Ltd., in Montreal East, where 500 members of the CIO Oil Workers were on strike for eight months last year in an effort to win the same gains the Steelworkers seek in the gold fields.

OWIU-CIO strikers were beaten and threatened, and Larry Packwood, a union organizer, was kidnapped and assaulted by police. The union is now carrying on a legal fight to force the company to recognize its certification by the Quebec Labor Board.

CIO Co-operates With AFL As Shoe Wage Talks Begin

CO-OPERATIVE negotiations of the CIO and the AFL with the big International Shoe Co. opened in St. Louis last week, with the CIO Shoe Workers beginning the contract talks.

The CIO union has agreed in advance with the AFL Boot & Shoe Workers Union on almost uniform demands.

The CIO negotiators, headed by Pres. Russell Taylor and David Wilson, USWA regional director, met late last week with the AFL negotiators to report on progress. Neither union will accept a contract without the other's consent, a plan that has been in operation for the past two years.

USWA represents workers in 28 of the firm's plants, and the AFL speaks for the workers in 18 other International Shoe plants.

Taylor said that no progress was made last week in the talks but that they would continue the balance of the week. Negotiations will be resumed Oct. 5 with the assistance of a federal mediator.

USWA asked a 15c hourly wage boost, seven paid holidays a year instead of only six, an increase in the minimum wage from 75c to 90c an hour, extension of the present two-week paid vacation to three weeks for workers with 10 or more years service with the firm; a union shop; company contributions to the pension plan, and increased company contributions to life insurance.

Sad Saga Of GI And Store-Bought Teeth

A CIO member in Canton, O., who was a Korean veteran, went to the Veterans Administration to have his teeth fixed.

Dentists pulled all his teeth, intending to give him artificial ones. Before they could make them, however, VA policy changed and then he was told there was no money available for his false teeth.

He's now looking for a political program with teeth in it.

Morse Urges Inquiry On Big New GM Defense Contract

SEN. MORSE (Ind. Oreg.) last week called on Congress to investigate the $285 million tank and truck contracts awarded General Motors by the Defense Dept.

"Apparently, these new contracts demonstrate once again that the Eisenhower Administration feels that what is good for General Motors is good for the country," Morse said. "A thorough investigation is needed to see how wrong the Administration may be."

GM and Chrysler both bid for the contract to produce M-48 Patton medium tanks under the new program to "concentrate" defense production. Army Sec. Robert T. Stevens announced the contract was awarded to GM's Fisher Body Division "clearly in the public interest."

Both companies are now making the tank. Chrysler first developed the M-48, but GM was brought in a second source. The Army said Chrysler will continue to make the weapon at its Newark, Del., plant for several months. The contract for 2.5-ton trucks will be shared by GM and Reo Motors Corp.

PAYCHECK PAYOFF — Disabled machinist Raymond Brenton displays check for $224 back pay to CIO Organizer T. J. McCarthy after CIO Electrical Workers win NLRB discharge case involving Silver Spring, Md., firm. Brenton, veteran with five children, was fired after he had pushed IUE-CIO at National Electrical Machine Shops, where AFL Machinists held contract. IUE won his job back and all lost wages.

IUE Gains Wage Boosts In Half-Dozen Plants

SOME 1100 members of the CIO Electrical Workers received wage increases and other gains in a new contract signed recently with the Independent Lock Co. at Fitchburg, Mass.

This was one of some half dozen new and revised pacts obtained in the past few weeks by IUE, all of them bringing pay increases and some as high as 15.5c an hour.

At the Fitchburg plant, day workers' wages were increased 6c an hour and piece workers got a 4c hourly increase, both retroactive to July 1. The shift differential for night workers was boosted by 2c to 10c an hour.

A 9c AN HOUR raise was won by day workers at the Roach Appleton plant, South Bend, Ind., with an extra 2c to go to tool room workers, die setters, maintenance and set-up men.

Basic rates of incentive workers were hiked 4c and 5c an hour. All increases were retroactive to Aug. 1. Other gains included an improved insurance plan amounting to 2.7c an hour and guaranteed holiday pay, even when the holiday falls on Saturday.

In a new agreement with National Carbon, Fostoria, O., the union obtained a general wage increase of 6c an hour, plus inequity adjustments ranging from 1c to 9.5c an hour.

Increases received so far this year at the plant range from 10c to 18.5c an hour. Good Friday was added to the list of paid holidays, bringing the total to seven.

An across-the board increase of 8.5c an hour was won under a wage reopener at the Federal Machine & Welder plant, Warren, O. The average work week for computing vacation pay was set at 46.4 hours a week, maximum payment for surgical fees was upped from $150 to $225, and an additional reopener on wages was provided for next Jan. 1.

At American Standard & Sanitary plant, Bayonne, N. J., a 7c an hour across-the board increase plus an additional 5c an hour for inequities was obtained, retroactive to May 1.

Give The Women A Bigger Role

The convention of the big District 4 of the CIO Electrical Workers at Asbury Park, N. J., adopted a resolution urging locals to use various means to get women members more active in union activities and PAC work.

The resolution called for the use of techniques discussed by Esther Murray of the PAC staff and Theresa Healy, of the district's research department.

Jersey GOP 'Hatchet Job' On Disability Pay Protested

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council last week charged the Republican party with "a hatchet job" on a bill to improve temporary disability benefits.

The measure, which would have provided retroactive payments, was conditionally vetoed by Gov. Driscoll and the State Legislature failed to pass it.

State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman pointed out that the bill was sponsored by Sen. Bodine, Republican state chairman and campaign manager for Paul L. Troast, GOP gubernatorial candidate, but "Bodine allowed it to be killed in the Senate caucus." The Governor also originally had supported the measure, Holderman said.

"S-343 had the announced backing of Troast, in his answer to one of the questions on the CIO questionnaire, but Troast, a trustee of the New Jersey Manufacturers Association, lifted not a finger in its behalf as a result of industry's opposition to the bill," Holderman said.

Riot Act Read On GOP At West Virginia CIO Convention

By ED LASHMAN

SOME 250 delegates to the 15th West Virginia CIO Convention in Huntington heard their Democratic senators, Matthew M. Neely and Harley M. Kilgore, read the riot act on the Republican Administration.

While Neely was talking he was handed a message announcing Labor Sec. Martin Durkin's resignation.

Indicating that he was not at all surprised, Neely said that Durkin had been appointed to the Cabinet, "to drive a wedge between the CIO and the AFL at worst, and to take over both unions at best."

KILGORE ATTACKED Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell for what he called the "gratuitous insult" of saying there were more Communists in unions than anywhere else.

"The free labor unions of America have done a magnificent job of fighting Communism," the Senator said.

"I should like to remind some of my Republican friends who seem to have short memories that the greatest gains the Communists ever made in America were during the depression years in which the last Republican Administration ended."

Marland urged the delegates to join forces with other groups in the community seeking solutions to the problems of state government.

"The voice of labor must be heard in political disputes as well as in industrial disputes," the Governor said.

"AS CITIZENS as well as union members you have the responsibility of seeing to it that a proper program is developed by your government that will benefit the general welfare."

One highlight of the convention was an afternoon memorial program honoring CIO's late Pres. Philip Murray and late Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

Pres. Burl Phares of the Glass Workers gave the tribute to Murray and Pres. Elwood Swisher of the Chemical Workers spoke in memory of Haywood. Paul Rusen, director of CIO Steelworkers District 23 concluded the memorial at which Reg. Dir. DeNucci presided.

Eighteen different international unions sent delegations to the convention, representing nearly 40,000 members in the state. The final day's session was devoted to 1954 plans of the state Political Action Committee.

In addition to approving a number of constitutional changes and adopting a variety of resolutions guiding state CIO policy for the ensuing year, the delegates elected officers to a two-year term.

RUSEN was elected President and Albert D. Villers of the Glass Workers in Clarksburg was elected executive secretary-treasurer.

Thirteen vice presidents were also elected: Freeman C. Pettus, USA-CIO; Thomas Diaz, Glass; Carl B. Dean, TWUA; Roscoe Holland, CWA; John Link, TWUA; William Parker, IUE; Pete Cuffaro, USA-CIO; William Potter, Chemical; Charles E. Hess, Toy; Earl Richard, USA-CIO; Bernard Schultz, Chemical; John W. Davis, Chemical; and T. C. Stafford, Government Employes.

'Count Your Friends On Missing Finger'

Sen. Kilgore held up his right hand to make the point.

"You used to be able to count the friends of organized labor in this Administration on one finger," the Senator told the West Virginia CIO convention.

Then he pointed to the finger missing from his right hand and said, "Now that Labor Sec. Martin Durkin has resigned because of Ike's broken promises on Taft-Hartley, you'll have to count your friends on my missing finger."

Sen. Neely's Praise—

'Get The CIO News—The Paper With The Real Story'

Sen. Neely (D., W. Va.) told delegates to the West Virginia CIO convention they should read the record on the Republican Administration.

"You won't find it in your daily newspapers," the Senator said. "Those are the boys who wanted Ike in office and they're trying to cover up the mistakes and give-aways."

Then Neely pulled out of his coat pocket a copy of the July 27th issue of The CIO News. He pointed to the front page summary of the Administration record and said, "That's the kind of information you need. And your own paper is giving it to you."

The Senator urged the delegates to subscribe to The CIO News and to read the paper regularly "because it's the only place you'll find the real story of the Republicans' performance compared to their glittering campaign promises."

'Old Home Week' Observed By Two CIO Union Chiefs

A PAIR of self-styled "West Virginia hill-billies" celebrated old home week at the West Virginia CIO convention in Huntington.

Not only did they grow up together in Randolph County, not only do they come from the same town, Elkins, but as children they lived in opposite sides of the same double house.

But Swisher insists that he has an edge over Phares because his father owned the house and rented to Phares' father.

"GREAT CRUSADES" by big business for state anti-labor laws and a federal sales tax requires that CIO members step up political action.

That's what Delmond Garst, CIO regional director, told 100 delegates at the Nebraska CIO Council convention at Omaha.

Pres. Joseph A Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers and John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, said the resignation of Labor Sec. Martin P. Durkin was inevitable.

"The President has made it preposterous for any self-respective union leader to consider seriously accepting an appointment to the office," Beirne said.

He added that "the plumber had been overpowered by the millionaires" in the Cabinet.

Edelman said Durkin "could certainly do no less than he did and maintain his self-respect.

"No other Chief Executive of the United States in recent times ever permitted himself to be pushed around by a bunch of underlings as Eisenhower has done in regard to the proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act," Edelman said.

Padrutt Wins In Wisconsin Primary

State Sen. Arthur Padrutt in a Wisconsin primary, last week defeated five other candidates to win the Republican nomination to fill the congressional vacancy left by the death of Rep. Hull (R. Wis.). He piled up at least 6877 votes to 6040 for his closest opponent, George Rowe.

Give A Buck To PAC

Voter Signup Drive Pushed

Voting registration in Pennsylvania is being spurred by the State CIO Council's Political Action Committee.

Final day for registration in this year's municipal elections is Sept. 28. Harry Boyer, PAC chairman, has reminded CIO affiliates that any registered voter failing to cast a vote in any two-year period cannot vote until he has re-registered.

You And Your Money—

1. $3 Billion Price Gouge Collected

"Any abandonment of price controls at this time will result in added cost to business, to the consumer and to the nation's tax bill of well over $3 billion a year."

That prediction has come true with a vengeance, Commentator James Crowley pointed out in a recent CIO-sponsored broadcast on ABC Radio.

With the BLS consumer price index climbing each month—and twice setting records—since the Republicans took over, Crowley cited this record:

"Mr. Eisenhower was no sooner in the White House than steel, which had contributed so heavily to his campaign, raised its prices twice, $4 a ton on ingots, $5 a ton on extras, for a total mill price gouge of $810 million.

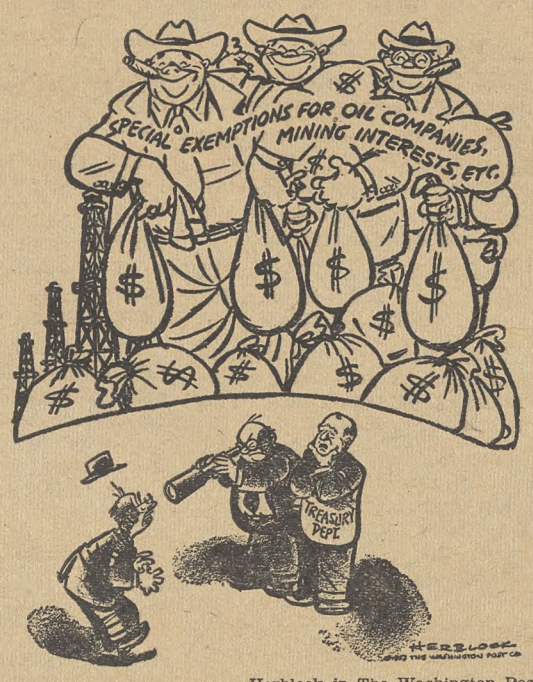
Alcoa Also Cashes In

"The Aluminim Co. of America, another heavy contributor to the Eisenhower campaign, also boosted its prices twice. With other producers following steel and Alcoa, the total cost to the consumer in these two fields is just under $1 billion.

"As Freehill had pointed out, however, increases of this kind are pyramided by other markups in manufacture and distribution, so that the cost to the consumer has been doubled; it totals just under two billion."

"But this isn't all," Crowley continued. "The oil industry, another heavy contributor to the Eisenhower campaign . . . has acknowledged that its recent price boosts will cost you and me approximately another billion.

"The total, therefore, is more than $3 billion which you and I now pay over and above what we were paying prior to the inauguration of the man who said this sort of thing could not and would not happen if the nation's affairs were intrusted to him and his team. And this does not take into consideration any of the large increases in rents (since decontrol).



—Herblock in The Washington Post

"Let's See, Now, Where Can We Raise More Taxes?"

"We, the American people, are now paying more than at any time in history for housing, medical care, transportation, food, other goods and services which are essential to life.

"The laugh on Mr. Freehill is over," Crowley said, recalling how his prediction had been belittled. "The laugh is on you and me. It becomes plainer each day that the cost of living will come down when the American consumer does not have one more nickel for which he can be taken."

2. 'Consumer Be Damned' Is Rule

TIME WAS a half century and more ago when U. S. tycoons said "the public be damned" but "we are now apparently in a period when the Senate shall cry 'the consumer be damned.'"

That's how Sen. Gillette (D. Iowa) summarized what happened—or didn't happen—in the GOP 83rd Congress to several proposals designed to give consumers a break.

Speaking at Des Moines recently, Gillette described how the Senate Banking Committee pigeon-holed his proposal to establish a special Senate committee to protect the interests of consumers, housewives and householders.

Then the Senate defeated, by a 45 to 30 vote, the effort by Sen. Langer (R. N.D.) to strike out an anti-consumer rider adopted by the House which banned the Federal Trade Commission from studying where the consumer's dollar goes.

"The record of that vote," said Gillette, will come back to haunt the Republican Party. Exactly four members of that party supported the Langer amendment to strike out this vicious anti-consumer rider, while 36 members of that party voted to keep the rider in the bill. On the Democratic side, 25 members supported the Langer proposal to give a break to the consumer while, only nine opposed it."

The Iowa Democrat said "disregard for the principle of the greatest good for the greatest number is as prevalent on Capitol Hill as it is in the bureaus downtown" under the Eisenhower Administration. He pledged renewed efforts in the next session of Congress to gain approval for a special committee on consumer interests.

3. And Sales Tax Drive Speeds Up

A SALES TAX by any other name—call it, for example, a uniform manufacturer's excise tax—would sound twice as sweet to Administration tax planners, but it would still be poison to millions of plain Americans.

That's what the Democratic Digest says in its current issue, in an article titled "Danger Ahead: GOP Pushing Sales Tax Plan."

"Treasury Dept. officials are hard at work on the nation's first Administration-sponsored federal sales tax plan," the new Democratic magazine said.

"Whether or not the sales tax proposal will actually be submitted to Congress next January will depend largely on public reaction to the idea in the coming months. Several trial balloons are up.

"The final decision on whether or not to propose a sales tax will be a political, not an economic decision, and it will have to be made by the President himself.

"Administration leaders know that since a sales tax is a tax on spending, it falls most heavily on the lower income families who spend the greatest share of their income and save the least.

"Experts estimate that families earning under $1000 pay nearly three times as large a share of their income in sales and excise taxes as families earning over $7500. This means that the sales tax will be extremely unpopular politically."

"Two of the biggest business group supporters of the Republican Party, the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce," the Digest pointed out, "are now pushing hard for a sales tax."

And the NAM is trying to disguise its proposal as a "manufacturer's excise tax"—collected on the producer, but passed on and multiplied by wholesalers and retailers all along the line.

"A sales tax by any other name," as the late Fieorello LaGuardia once observed, is just as odious."

A federal sales tax at a rate of from 2% to 5% is reportedly under consideration. Cost to an average family earning between $4000 and $4500 a year, the CIO Political Action Committee estimates, would be from $84 to $228 annually. That's 228 times the cost of a PAC Dollar contribution to help fight the sales tax and elect a Congress that will vote fair tax laws.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

HAVE YOU EVER BOUGHT a pair of rayon slacks and found that in the first cleaning they actually stretched a full size? Or bought what seemed like a nice rayon blouse but found they emerged from the first washing limp as a rag? Or paid good money for a bathing suit that bled its colors all over you the first dip in the surf?

New Booklet

"The Consumer's Guide To Better Buying" has been issued in a completely new and expanded edition by Sidney Margolius, author of LPA's "How To Buy" column, a weekly feature of The CIO News.

Margolius discusses money-saving principles for home, auto, appliance and insurance buyers, brand comparisons, budgets, discounts and other topics. Published by Signet, the 224-page pocket book is priced at 35c.

The truth is, many times when you buy a rayon garment you run the risk that the color will bleed, or that it will shrink or stretch or come apart at the seams. You even take a chance that a rain will make spots on your rayon dress or suit that no dry cleaner can eradicate.

You take chances with other materials, of course, including the much-ballyhooed "wonder fabrics" (Orlon, Dacron, etc.). But rayon is one of the most important fabrics to a working family because of its comparatively low cost. Thus, the great deal of careless manufacture in the production of rayon clothing and the frequent misrepresentation in its sale, cost your family and others much money.

Much of the trouble arises from the fact that often fabrics are not suitably dyed and finished for the purpose for which they are sold. One textile expert tells about the case of a bathing suit manufacturer who bought a lot of fabrics which had been originally dyed for use as pajamas. The results were horrible; the bathing suits faded in the sun and bled in the water.

ANOTHER REASON for the disappointing performance of garments is labelling them "washable" or "washfast" or "completely washable" when they are not. The mill may have told the manufacturer the garment was washable, the manufacturer may have assured the retailer it was, but you are stuck when it turns out someone either unknowingly or deliberately exaggerated.

Many rayon garments labeled "washable" should actually be designated only "hand washable" but manufacturers sometimes prefer not to be so specific because they know people don't like to buy garments they must wash by hand.

This is one reason why people have been running into trouble with men's rayon sports shirts which have become popular both for leisure and work wear. If put into a washing machine these shirts may bleed their color so they come out in a rainbow shade, and also discolor other garments in the tub. Colors have been known to bleed even when the wearer sweated profusely on a hot day.

For the first time you have a chance to do something about this problem that will end much of this waste of money and materials, and simplify your buying and laundering problems. A minimum standard of quality has been developed for rayon garments. It was worked out under the auspicies of the American Standards Association, by a committee of labor, consumer, manufacturer, retailer and laundry representatives, including the CIO and AFL, and the Cooperative League.

THIS MINIMUM standard assures you that any garment labeled as meeting it will not fade appreciably from prespiration, cleaning, or sun; that colors will not crock (rub off); that shrinkage will not exceed 2.5%; that finishes added to the fabric to give it crispness, texture or body, are permanent; that the garment won't be spotted or stained by shower, and that the fabric meets the durability standard set by the committee for breaking and busting strength.

Moreover, the "American Standard" labels, as they are called, won't merely say "washable." They will state precisely either that the garment is "washable at 160F" (washing machine temperature), or "wash at hand temperature 105F," or "dry cleanable—do not wash."

Thus you could buy any rayon garment carrying the "American Standard" tag and be assured of at least fair quality.

But there's one big hitch. The use of the label is voluntary. So far no manufacturer is using it. If you want to see it in use, your best opportunity to plug for it is to tell retailers that you prefer buying garments produced in accordance with the American Standard (L22) for rayon and acetate fabrics.

Irritated

Treasury Sec. Humphrey said at a recent press conference that "I am getting just a little irritated" at steadily increasing predictions that the Eisenhower Administration will ask Congress at its next session to enact a federal sales tax. He added:

"Every time I am asked whether we are considering a sales tax, I say: 'Yes, we are considering a sales tax.' We are also considering manufacturers' excise taxes; we are also considering difference and increases of varying changes in income taxes and all sorts of other taxes. We have 40 different kinds of taxes downstairs that the boys are working on."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

LAST WEEK I had the pleasure of meeting in New York with the executive officers and board of the United Railroad Workers-CIO.

Along with R. J. Thomas, CIO's assistant director of organization, we sat down to study the outline of a broad organizing effort, for the entire country. We reached agreement that it would be wise to appoint a new assistant director of the Railroad Workers Organizing Committee, a post that has been vacant for a year. We hope to announce this appointment in the near future.

The Railroad Workers, I believe, are definitely committed to a sound program. One of their major efforts will be to organize membership within the contracts they already possess, to increase the stability and power of the present organization.

They face serious problems in the fact that the railroad industry, in general, is declining in employment; yet they have been able to make significant gains in the face of these and other difficulties. CIO will assist them, of course, in every way possible.

IN SPEAKING last week of the so-called "Right to Work" bill passed in the State of Alabama, I emphasized the need for effective action on our part to convince legislators and the general public of the stake they have in the trade union movement.

I don't think we can spend too much time carrying on this vital work. I'd like to point out again that this is the time of the year when the legislators, both state and federal, are at home and can be reached, by you, their constituents.

The burdens on our councils are already very heavy. They, of course, do the bulk of your legislative work, but that work cannot reach the peak of effectiveness unless you are willing to ring the doorbells of your legislators along with them.

Here, in Washington, your officers and their departments spend considerable time working with the members of Congress, persuading them, reasoning with them, attempting to foster good legislation, and head off the bad legislation. But unless we are backed up at the grass roots we can do little more than perform a holding action.

Just as you, the rank-and-file, are the true power of the union; so you are the true power of the nation. It seems to me we need only carry into public life the lessons learned in our unions . . . that the greater our participation in public affairs—our personal participation—the greater is our expectation of benefit to ourselves, family, community, and nation. We prosper through democracy only to the extent we practice it.

Steelworkers' Oldest Local In Bay State Marks 20th Year

There was no union at the plant, a steel fabricating shop, when organizing began in July 1933. Management had reduced the work week from 50 to 40 hours without proper wage adjustments. But the workers' experience with a mutual aid association set up in 1922 decided their future and they established the Steel and Metal Workers Industrial Union of Massachusetts on Aug. 2, 1933.

Less than two weeks later the local conducted its first strike—and won it after three hours of negotiation and the same amount of lost time. The company conceded all demands. These included a union shop, a 25% increase in wage and piece rates, and a grievance clause.

Working under its state charter, the local organized several other plants in the Greater Boston area. Efforts to affiliate with the AFL failed. In 1937, it was chartered as CIO Local Industrial Union 511.

When Dist. Dir. Martin Walsh extended the Steelworkers' organizing activities to Boston the LIU got its charter as Local 2431 USA-CIO.

Beirne Asks Funds Now To Aid Phone Strikers At Indiana Bell

PRES. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers last week called on all CIO unionists and CWA locals to contribute to a fund to help 7000 striking members in Indiana.

Now in its ninth week, the walkout at Indiana Bell is the second longest strike in phone union history, according to CWA.

All the economic issues were settled more than a week ago. The strike continues because of the company's insistence on the right to fire union members whom it accuses of being guilty of "misconduct," such as singing or heckling on the picket line. A score of CWA members have been dismissed.

"These dismissed members must be returned to the job," Beirne said to in a letter appealing for funds to help the strikers. "We cannot and will not settle the Indiana strike if the company insists on the right to fire our members indiscriminately.

"The outcome of this, like all CWA strikes, affects all CWA members and must be supported to the fullest extent."

Beirne pointed out that since the strike began about a quarter million dollars of the union's defense fund has been used in Indiana and that the expenditure is continuing at the rate of about $10,000 a day.

Some 3900 CWA members won a new contract with the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. in West Virginia, with the firm agreeing to cut the progression schedule, and to increase wages from $1 to $3 a week.

'Don't Buy Cudahy' Drive Ends

"THE DON'T BUY Cudahy" campaign of the CIO Packinghouse Workers was called off last week after UPWA settled some long-standing disputes with the big meat packer.

The packing union won reinstatement of eight members suspended by Cudahy Packing Co. at its headquarters plant in Omaha, while the company dropped a $1,250,000 damage suit against UPWA.

A UPWA annoucement said "the union has agreed to terminate its 'don't buy' campaign directed against the company's products and to request the CIO to do the same." (The drive, recently endorsed by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, was directed against the "Big Four" meat firm, not the smaller Cudahy Bros. Co. of Wisconsin.)

The union said early sessions would be held in an effort to settle "an accumulation of grievance problems."

CUDAHY also agreed to "match any settlement reached by the union with any of the other Big Four packing companies."

An "impasse" in negotiations with Swift & Co. was reported as some 100 delegates representing UPWA and AFL Butchers locals held a joint wage conference in Chicago.

The unions described Swift's wage and hospital insurance proposals of 2.8c an hour as "picayune." An Armour offer of a 5c hourly raise also has been rejected.

Guild Strikes Maine Paper

Some 100 members of the CIO Newspaper Guild last week struck the Portland, Me., Press-Herald. The walkout came after a long deadlock in negotiations which Portland Guild has been conducting for employes of the editorial, maintenance, proof reading and mailing departments.

OWIU Leader Dies On Coast

CIO Oil Workers in California mourned the death of Frank Casey, a leader in the 1948 statewide oil strike and secretary-treasurer of OWIU Local 326, Rodeo.

Casey, 42, was killed in an auto accident. He had been active in the Contra Costa County CIO Council and in East Bay civic affairs.

Showdown Fight Grows On GOP Anti-Power Policy

PUBLIC POWER advocates and the Republican Administration squared off last week for the coming showdown over the latter's so-called "local development" power policies.

Chairman Dondero (R. Mich.) ordered his House Public Works Committee to hold hearings early next year on his bill to halt what Republicans call "creeping socialism" in the Tennessee Valley Authority.

But Rep. Jones (D. Ala.), a member of Dondero's committee, said the people of the TVA region "don't look forward to their emancipation" by Dondero. He pointed out—and Dondero acknowledged—that the measure would increase the cost of electric power in the area.

Promising to lead a fight against the "take-away," Jones charged that Dondero's bill originated with the "private utilities."

Meanwhile, residents of the Tennessee Valley organized the "Citizens for TVA, Inc." and opened a drive for $100,000 to "stump America for TVA." Mayor George Dempster of Knoxville, president of the group, said most of the funds "must come from those who stand to lose the most, the consumers of TVA."

The Administration's power policy also was denounced by Pres. James G. Patton of the National Farmers Union. He called it "a total surrender to the electric company lobby."

"The only concession it makes to the public interest," he said, "is to screen its real content behind catchwords that have been invented and well-worn in the service of private utility propaganda."

But Sec. of Interior Douglas McKay, in an address before the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers, defended his program.

"AS MUCH of the future power development of the country as can be financed with local money, whether it is public or private money, should be so financed," McKay declared.

Speaking before the Power Distributors Association, Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) explained what the Administration means when it says it wants "local people" to do the job. The Administration, he said, is ignoring the wishes of the residents of Idaho and Oregon as expressed through the Hells Canyon Association when it favors giving the Hells Canyon power development to the Idaho Power Co.

"The Idaho Power Co. is local in name only to Idaho," Kefauver pointed out. "The home office of Idaho Power Co. is in Maine. Its stockholders and officials are 'local' to New York and New England for the most part."

RECALLING that during the campaign, Eisenhower had promised that "under my administration, TVA will be operated at maximum efficiency," Kefauver undertook to show the origin of the "creeping socialism" phrase, which the President since has applied to the project.

He traced it to a booklet prepared by the Electric Companies Advertising Program for power executives' guidance which, he said, "deliberately and calculatingly" urged them "to deceive the public and poison their minds."

"Apparently they succeeded even in deceiving the President of the United States," he said.

OTHER OBSERVATIONS about the "phoniness" of the private power lobby propaganda were made before the New York Municipal Electrical Utilities Association by Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.), who assailed Republican efforts to give-away Niagara Falls to five private power companies.

In an effort to win public support for the give-away, the power companies have used as their chief argument a claim that they will pay $9 million a year in federal taxes if they are given the Niagara power project.

"Since Korea, in subsidies and tax write-offs these five companies have received $300 million of taxpayers' money," Roosevelt said.

"The attempt of the cabinet in the Harding Administration to grab the oil resources of Teapot Dome begins to look like mere child's play when compared with the steal these utility companies contemplate."

4 Million Served By REA Power

Last week the Rural Electrification Administration power system began service to its four millionth rural customer.

REA Administrator Ancher Nelson said that more than 1000 systems built with REA financing are now operating about 1.3 million miles of power lines in 46 states. New consumers are being added at a rate of 20,000 a month.

Nixon to his brother, Eugene, and his mother, Mrs. Emma Kelly. He won the award for three single-handed attacks on Red machine gun nests.

Hobby Confirms Closing Of Hospitals Is Being Studied

THE HEALTH, Education & Welfare Dept. is considering asking Congress to end the free hospital care the government has given merchant seamen for 155 years.

Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby last week said that as a result of two requests by the Bureau of the Budget, the department is considering closing the 16 hospitals it operates for merchant seamen.

The Public Health Service, which is part of the H-E-W Dept., was founded in 1798 to operate the hospitals to care for seamen and prevent the introduction of plagues and other communicable diseases.

Mrs. Hobby said that the Bureau of the Budget had written two letters, on May 20 and July 24, concerning closing the hospitals.

"The question of the costs of operating the federal government, is of course, a matter to which the present Administration gives high priority; and exploration of all means to cut costs without denying services provided by law is in order," she said.

"The Public Health Service Hospitals are operated for the benefit of such major groups on non-federal personnel as merchant seamen, persons afflicted with Hansen's disease, and narcotic addicts.

"In addition, there are numerous groups of federal employes who receive medical care in these hospitals."

Tax Bonanza For Utilities Under Fire

SEN. MAGNUSON (D. Wash.) moved last week to prevent granting of "tax bonanza" rapid tax write-offs on the proposed private power company dams at Hells Canyon.

If the eastern-owned Idaho Power Co. gets the project, he predicted, taxpayers would not only have to advance a tax-free loan of $30 million, but provide $200 million more in benefits to the company. And Idaho Power would own the power plants.

Sec. of Interior Douglas McKay, in giving approval to the Idaho Power Co. dams, said that they can "be built without cost to the taxpayers" in place of the $380 million Hells Canyon project.

ACTUALLY, Magnuson pointed out, taxpayers would have to subsidize the private construction, while if the federal government constructed the larger multi-purpose dam "about 90%" of its cost would be returned to the Treasury with interest, and the people of the nation would still own a producing asset."

Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) said that the five New York power companies seeking to take over Niagara Falls have received $300 million in federal subsidies and would get another $150 million in tax write-offs for the Niagara program.

Total tax write-offs to electric companies now is nearly $1.8 billion. The companies get the buildings, taxpayers the bills.

'Sustain'—So The Gals Put A Halter Around The Boss

By LES FINNEGAN

THE EASTERN heat wave that sent temperatures soaring to 100 degrees and higher recently provoked a crisis in a small electronics plant at Jersey City, N. J., which hadn't had a strike in the 15 years of the company's existence.

Fifty union girls, comprising the entire assembly line of the plant, went through four days of the heat wave and then tempers started to fray. They started to talk about walking out, and the local union president hurried to the plant manager.

The next morning there were a dozen additional fans in the shop and it looked as though the no-strike record would be saved. But that day the temperature started rising higher than ever, and the union president knew a breaking point was bound to come. She consulted her girls and again went to the plant manager.

"We have a proposal," she told the manager. "The union suggests you agree to a new clause in the contract which will say that the management 'agrees to sustain the girl members of the union in their right to wear shorts and halters in the plant whenever the temperature rises above 90 degrees.'"

The union leader went on to assure the plant manager he'd get a lot of free newspaper publicity with pictures of the girls in brief shorts and halters. The manager fell for the idea and signed the new agreement enthusiastically.

Then, just as he was about to have his publicity department call in the newspapers, the union president stopped him cold.

"That contract clause you just signed," she pointed out, "says you have to 'sustain' our right to wear shorts and halters. To 'sustain' that right you have to provide the shorts and halters. We have consulted our lawyer."

The next day the girls came to work in shorts and halters—all paid for by the company. The plant was just as hot as ever but the morale of the union was the highest in history.

Only part of it was due to the glamour pictures and "leg shots" taken by the newspaper men; the rest was attributable to the psychological victory the girls figured they won in the single word "sustain."

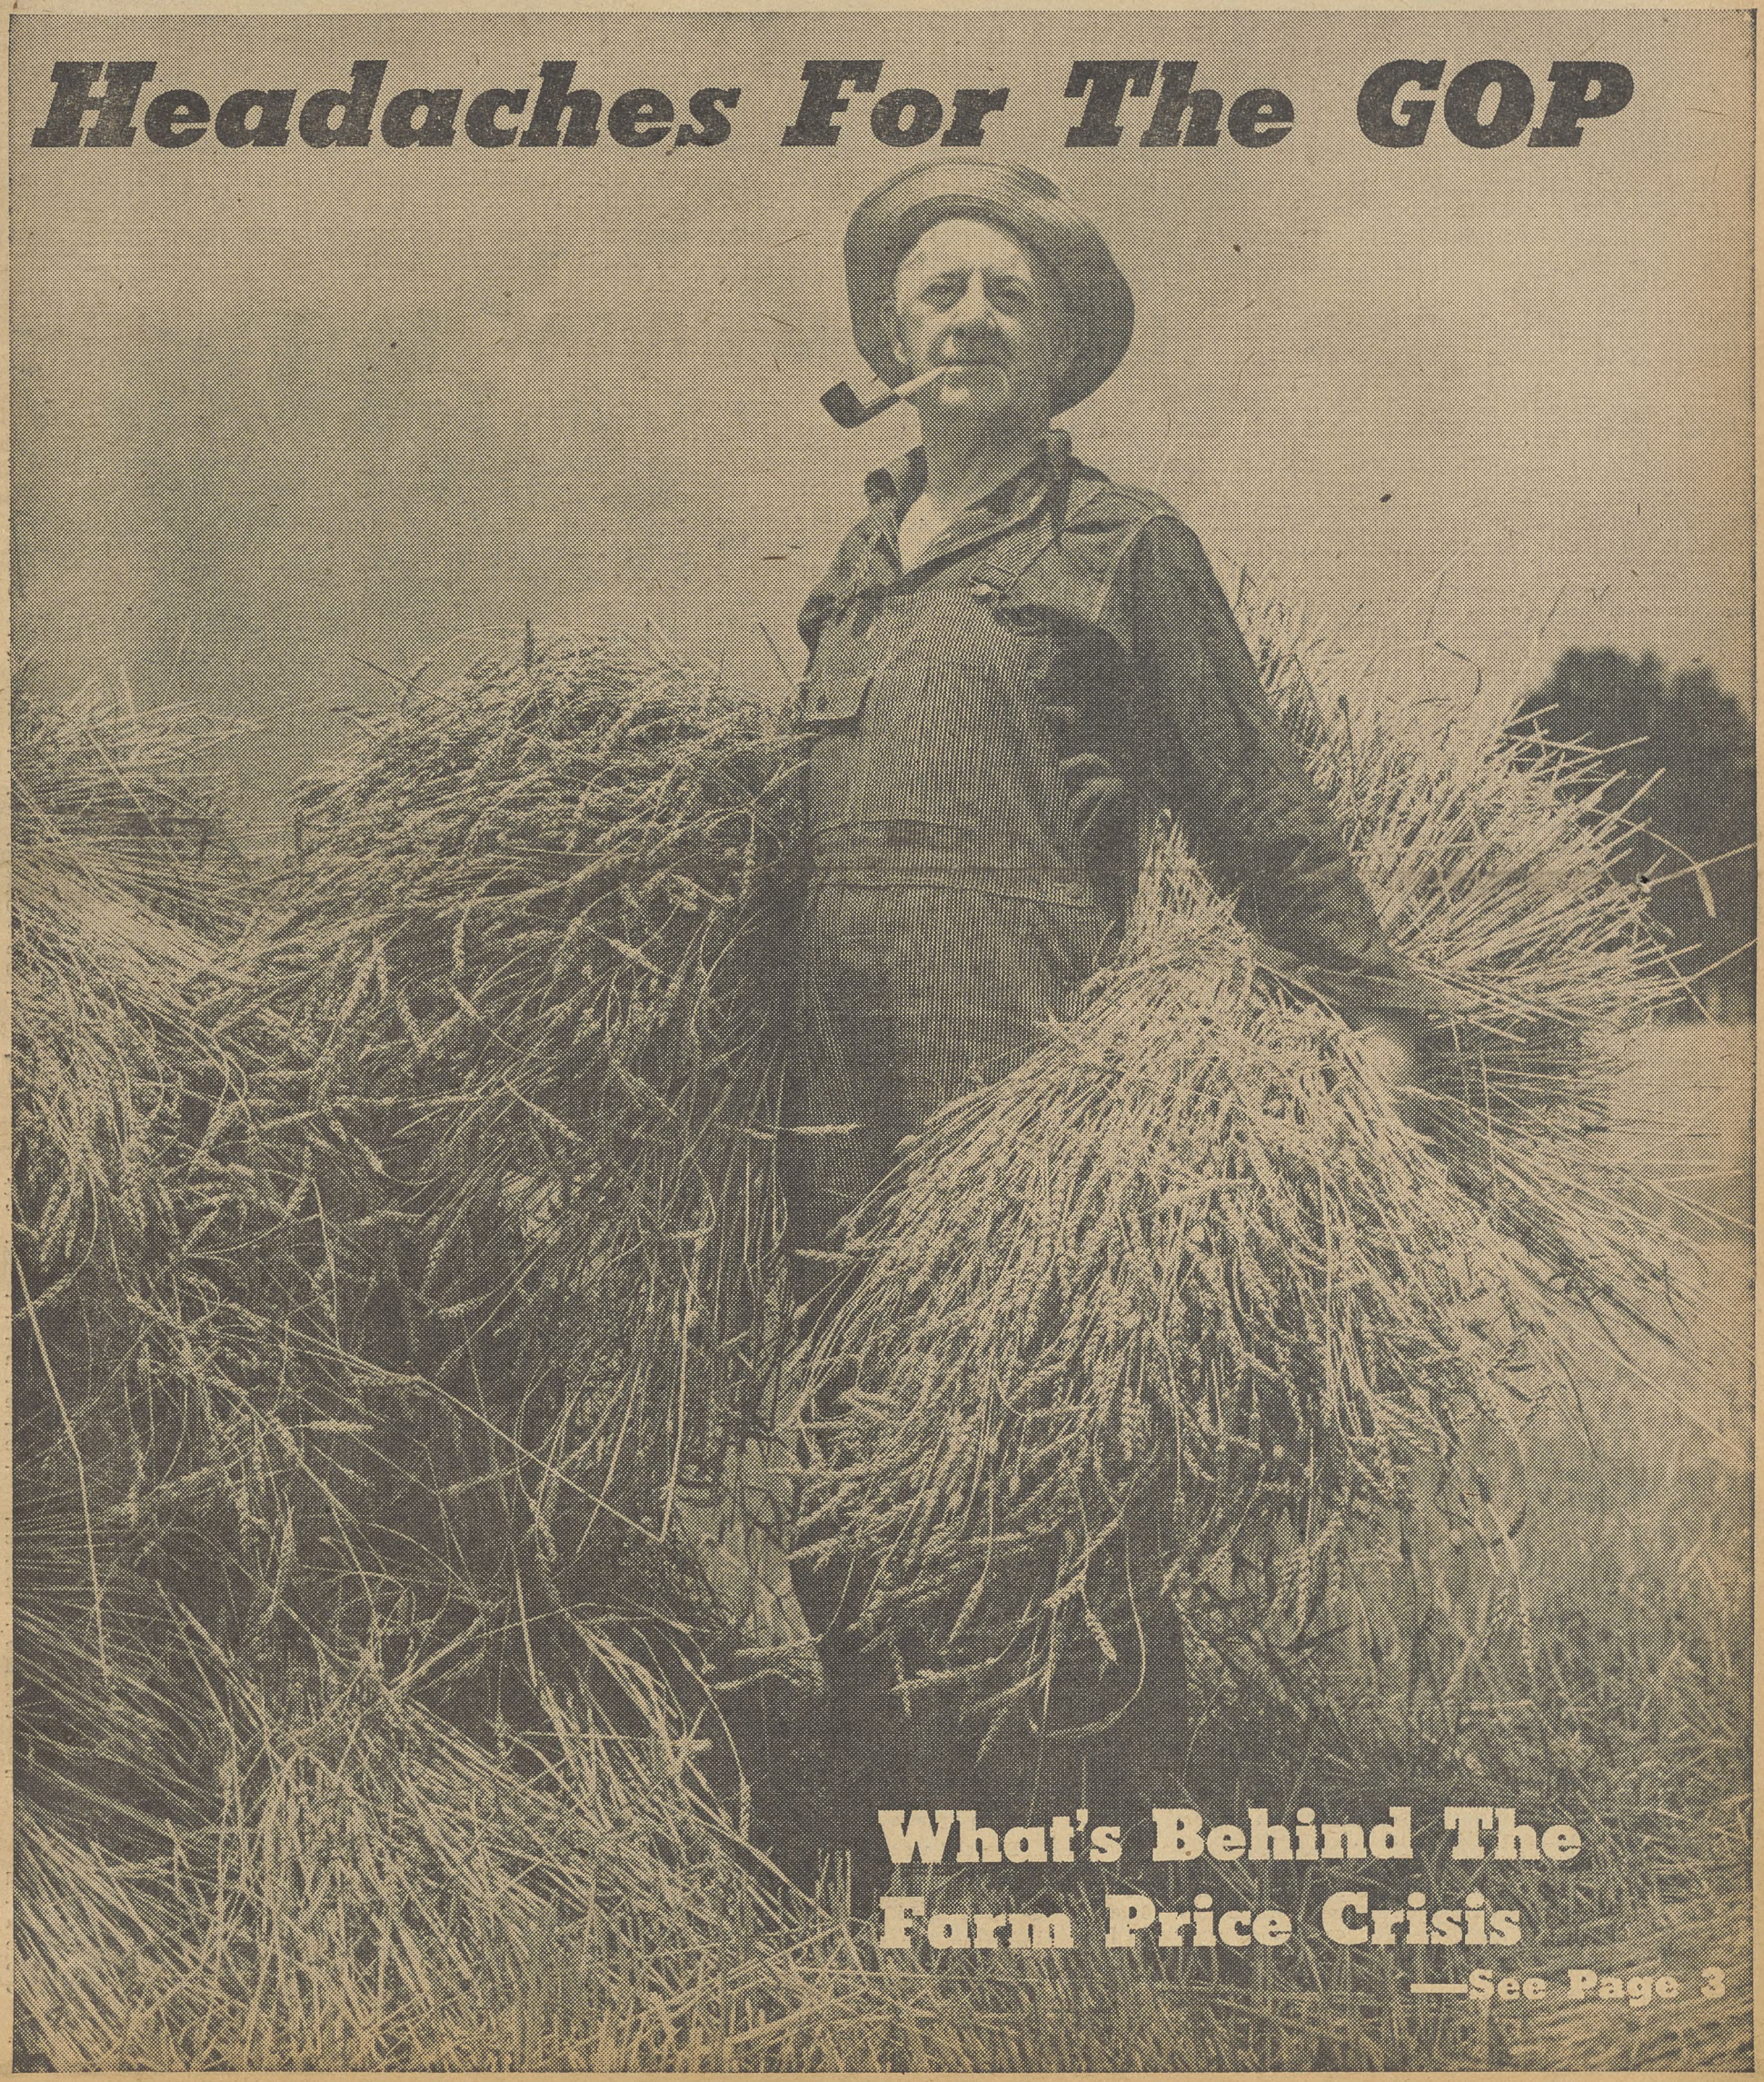
Headaches For The GOP



What's Behind The Farm Price Crisis

WHITE COLLAR STRIKE.—Tired of seeing their wages lag behind production workers, white collar employes are on strike at the New Jersey Zinc Co., Palmerton, Pa. 'Cost Of GOP Living' Sets New Record For 3rd Month In Row

FOR THE third month in a row, the government's figure on living costs set a new record. Paced by climbing prices for meat, other foodstuffs, rents, medical care and transportation, the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumer priee index reached a new peak of 115.0 in mid-August, the agency announced last week.

The BLS "new" index—which affects escalator wage clauses in contracts covering millions of workers—has climbed by 1.6 points since inauguration of the Eisenhower Administration.

Announcement of the new record high index came as GOP officials were praising the Administration's "sound money" policies at the plush Washington convention of the American Bankers Association.

The month-by-month climb in the BLS index began when the new Administration shelved price controls, and it took a new spurt in the latest figure reflecting the almost-complete removal of rent ceilings. The rent index has gone up 1.1% since ceilings died on July 31.

BLS SAID BEEF and veal prices rose 6% in the month to Aug. 15, the largest increase in any single month since 1948.

Shortly before the BLS index was announced, the American Meat Institute issued a statement claiming that wholesale and retail beef prices are from 18 to 33% lower than last year, and have reflected the drop in cattle prices. The packers' organization said its figures included the one-month boost for beef and veal.

This was the sixth straight monthly increase in the living cost index, which now is .6% above a year ago and 13% over the pre-Korea figure.

Meantime, the Commerce Dept. reported that cash dividend payments in the first eight months of '53 totalled $4.8 billion, with increases averaging 4% and running as high as 20%. Communications, utilities and railroads showed the highest gains.

TWU Protests Force N.Y. Transit Board To Retreat

By JOSEPH KUTCH

THE FIRST attempt of New York City's new Transit Authority to get tough with the CIO Transport Workers fizzled last week when the agency was forced to back down.

The TA arrogantly told the union that it was going to post bus and subway schedules without prior agreement with the union.

TWU, after several weeks' dispute over the schedules, insisted that the disagreement be taken to a committee appointed by Mayor Impellitteri as is provided under the memorandum of understanding. The memorandum is the working agreement between the union and the New York City Transit system.

AN overflow meeting of almost 1500 of the union's section leadership on Sept. 22 enthusiastically supported TWU's Local 100's program of forcing justice in schedule dispute.

Telegrams to Impellitteri and TA Chairman Hugh J. Casey demanded that the memorandum's stipulations on settling schedule disputes be followed.

Meanwhile the TA, warned that TWU's Enlarged Joint Executive Committee would recommend a stiff course of action, backed water rapidly with the announcement that the new schedules would not be posted immediately.

Mayor Impellitteri on advice of his corporation counsel informed Casey that he was naming a committee such as TWU demanded to arbitrate the schedule dispute between the union and the authority.

CIO Convention Call Is Issued

THE EXECUTIVE officers of the CIO have issued the call to the 15th Constitutional Convention with a warning against the "lustful power of totalitarian political dictatorship."

The CIO's convention will be held in Cleveland at the Public Auditorium from Nov. 16 to 20. The call which was signed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Exec. Vice-Pres. John V. Riffe, and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

On a note of rededication to CIO's founding objectives, the call said "there is no room in an intelligent society for enforced idleness, illiteracy, pestilence, hunger, or prejudical discrimination, all of which are akin to aggressive war."

The call went on to point out that "our specific objectives are steady employment, expanded civil rights, wider education, improved health standards, world peace and international cooperation.

"Our democracy must continue to be an ever expanding force in the lives of our people," the call said. "To its widening influence, the people look for protection of their God-given right to share equally in and enjoy the material things they produce through their labor."

In warning that "lustful power today stalks the earth in several forms," the call pointed out that "on the one hand are those seeking worldwide power through totalitarian political dictatorships; on the other we have those who seek control of all men through economic imperialism at home and abroad."

IUE Wage, Organizing Gains Told By Carey

ON THE EVE of their fifth convention, the CIO Electrical Workers last week reported a smashing representation election victory over the Communist-run United Electrical Workers at the big Westinghouse meter plant in Newark, N. J.

The local had voted in July to disaffiliate from the UE, which was expelled from CIO in 1949, and to join the IUE. In the recent NLRB balloting the Westinghouse employes cast 1360 votes for IUE-CIO and 981 for the UE.

The victory underscored the officers' report to the convention, now under way in Montreal, Canada, that by the end of its fourth year, IUE-CIO will represent 400,000 men and women and now is "the largest union by far" in the electrical, radio and related industries.

HIGHLIGHTING the organizing gains in the report were seven election triumphs in General Electric plants, including Louisville's Appliance Park, and five victories in the previously unorganized DuMont chain. All told IUE chalked up 71 NLRB election victories in the year.

Pointing out "clear-cut proofs of UE's disintegration," the IUE reported 12 election wins over UE and nine cases where UE pulled off the ballot in the last year.

In a section headed "economic advances," Pres. James B. Carey and other officers reviewed total package gains over the past four years. In General Motors, the reported stated, the gain has been a 51c package, while it was 50.5c in Westinghouse and 50.01c in General Electric.

Package advances in independent companies ranged as high as 68c for the same period, the report pointed out. For the 19 months between Jan. 1, 1952, and July 31, 1953, the IUE package gains went as high as 36.5c an hour.

The officers hailed the pending no-raiding agreement with the AFL and pointed out that "conspicuously outside this agreement will be the weakened Communist-controlled unions."

IUE's financial picture was reported as "the most promising in its four-year history." From a net operating loss of $88,000 at last year's convention, the union moved in the past year to a net income of nearly $290,000 and a net worth of nearly $400,000.

Voting Record Is Postponed

THE CIO NEWS will not issue a "Voting Record" supplement for the first session of the 83rd Congress.

After careful study of the record, the CIO Legislative Committee, which annually has prepared the record of roll calls in cooperation with the CIO Political Action Committee and The CIO News, voted against attempting to appraise the sparse performance of the present Congress at this time.

This decision was reached because it was felt that the issues which arose during the first session, while often important in themselves, were not fairly representative of the whole Congressional program. After the full record has been established in the next session, a Voting Record will be issued covering the entire Congress.

Truman Address On ABC Oct. 8

Former Pres. Truman will speak at a Sidney Hillman Foundation dinner in St. Louis on Oct. 8. His address will be broadcast over the ABC Radio network at 9:35 p.m. CST, 10:35 p.m. EST, that evening.

Farm Price Crisis Is Headache For GOP

By WILLIAM MILLIS

THE PROVERBIAL "cloud on the horizon no bigger than a man's hand" is rolling up to tornado size in the farm belt.

The "price scissors"—the gap between what farmers receive for wheat, corn and other crops and the price they pay for tractors, combines and other farm implements—is getting wider.

Month by month, the gap widens. For the first time since 1941, farm prices will average less than parity—the formula for fair farm incomes.

And all the time the cost of living—for farmers, city workers, and all consumers — keeps going higher.

That's the economic background—a developing farm crisis that may grease the skids for depression.

And there are important political consequences—for both Democrats and the Republican Administration.

The Democrats, in their recent Chicago conference, made plain they hope to ride the farmers' horse to victory in the 1954 congressional elections. The memory of the farm depression in the Twenties, the record of New Deal-Fair Deal farm programs, and what the Democrats call the "tarnished brass" of present GOP farm policies look like a political natural for '54.

GOP Shows Concern

Pres. Eisenhower—shortly before he returned to Washington after his six-week Colorado vacation—tried to dispose of rumors that Sec. of Agriculture Ezra Benson might be replaced, possibly by Colorado's Gov. Dan Thornton who had been making sounds like he already was in the Cabinet.

Benson met with the President. Rumors that he might resign were dismissed as "cock-eyed." And then the Agriculture Dept. chief went off to address the National Plowing Contest.

Benson blamed the farm slump on the Democrats, said the GOP would "do everything to enhance farm prices"—but didn't spell it out.

This chart prepared by the President's Council of Economic Advisers shows how parity index of prices farmers pay (solid black line) has gone up slightly through 1952-53 while prices farmers receive (dotted line) has gone down:

The Eisenhower Administration has followed contradictory courses on farm price questions. During the campaign, the General advocated as high as 100% parity. (Parity can be likened, roughly, to cost-of-living "escalator" wage clauses in union-management contracts. Parity farm prices are designed to maintain farm purchasing power. They don't apply to all farm products.)

The appointment of Benson—long a critic of farm price supports except as what he called "disaster insurance"—has been under increasing criticism.

Law Running Out

Long before next election day, the Republicans will have to make their minds up about farm price policy, for the present law providing flexible supports runs out in the coming year.

Along with specific farm policies, a number of Administration programs have affected the farm economy. For example:

- The "give-away" program on development of public power resources has struck at industrial growth and job opportunities; it also has curtailed power supply and fertilizer production for farmers.
- The "hard money" interest-boosting policies of the Treasury Dept. have increased loan costs for farmers as well as workers and consumers.
- Knifing of price controls by the GOP Administration has boosted the farmer's cost-of-living, while reducing the purchasing power of city workers.
- The middlemen, wholesalers and retailers who "farm the farmers," as CIO Pres. Walter Reuther has said, are making bigger killings than ever, while Congress has curbed the Federal Trade Commission and knifed investigations showing that farmers get less and less of the city dweller's food dollar.

In this connection, Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) last week renewed demands that Congress investigate why consumers are still paying high food prices despite the sharp drop in farm prices.

He recalled that the Eisenhower Administration and Republicans in Congress had repeatedly blocked such proposals in the recent session.

"I hope it is a first order of business in January" when Congress reconvenes, Murray said.

- The "what's good for General Motors is good for the country" philosophy of absolute big business control over all branches of the government is paralleled in the Agriculture Dept. by the controlling voice given to the American Farm Bureau Federation and the big mechanized farm interests which in many parts of the country are indistinguishable from big banking and business interests. The factory farms of California are a case in point.

Specific GOP farm policies also are receiving increasing farm belt criticism. These include the whittling down of REA rural electric and telephone co-ops, fund cuts for soil conservation programs, the "molasses in January" speed with which the government provided drought relief to the hard-hit southwestern states, and the uncertainty as to the Administration's future farm program.

Another GOP Study

The "government by postponement" policy of study commissions was duplicated by the GOP in the case of the Agriculture Dept. That committee was dominated by Allen B. Kline, head of the Farm Bureau Federation and foe of "high" price supports. (From his criticism of organized labor and defense of Taft-Hartley, Kline apparently is more at home around a board of directors table than running a tractor.)

But the GOP theory that the farmers didn't really want governmental price supports was blown sky-high when 87% of the wheat farmers a few weeks ago voted in favor of 90% of parity price loans.

CIO GOES TO THE FAIR.—Youngsters from 4-H clubs sign up for prizes offered by the Minnesota State CIO Council at the Swift County Fair. Livestock awards were part of the farm-labor information program conducted by the State CIO Farm Relations Committee. In the group admiring heifer are 4-H Agent James Edman, Junye Carsten, and Albert Phillips and Ben Storm of Local 4, CIO Packinghouse Workers. Other state CIO councils have similar programs to build farm-labor relations.

What's Happening To The Farmers

Since early in 1951—after commodity speculators ran hog-wild with the outbreak of the war in Korea—the farm price index has been going down. Here are some of the economic highlights:

In 1952, farmers increased total crop production by 3.5% but prices paid to farmers fell by 11%. Farmers net income dropped by 3% or $500 million.

So far in 1953, income of farm owners, according to the President's Council of Economic Advisers, has dropped by 9%. The Agriculture Dept. said that farm prices in the first eight months of 1953 were 10% lower than in the same period a year ago. Farm prices have averaged about 94% of parity, the lowest since 1941.

Cattle growers are voicing increasing demands for a price floor under beef of up to 28c a pound, and are asking questions about "exorbitantly high" retail meat prices in the face of low cattle prices.

Food processors and retailers—Libby McNeil, Consolidated Grocers, Food Fair, Safeway Stores—reported profit increases of as high as 120%, thanks to GOP killing of price controls.

As the National Farmers Union commented, "farmers get less, consumers pay more, the middlemen take a bigger bite than ever out of both. The economic disaster for farmers in this ironic picture is obvious."

The Farm Vote Begins To Shift

Question No. 1: Do you believe Pres. Eisenhower is doing a good job? The answers were 5416 good, 5200 fair and 6602 a bad job.

Question No. 2: Do you believe the Republican Congress is doing a good job? The answers were 4967 yes and 12,188 no.

At the recent Democratic national conference in Chicago, Gov. G. Mennen Williams assailed GOP farm policies as "creeping Hooverism" and warned:

"Historically, the leaks which foundered our economy into recessions and depressions have sprung first in agriculture.

"We don't want creeping Hooverism for our farmers or for any other segment of our economy, and that's just what we're getting from the Republican Party.

"Creeping Hooverism can lead to galloping recession if present agriculture trends continue."

CIO support for the Brannan Plan of fixed farm price supports was voiced by O. A. (Jack) Knight, CIO vice president and Oil Workers president, at the Democratic rally.

The farm situation seems to be bringing Southern, Northern, and Midwestern Democratic leaders together. Some of the strongest recent criticism of the Administration came from Sens. Russell (D. Ga.) and Johnston (D. S. C.).

Democrats are drawing a contrast between the GOP's "golden promises" to farmers in last year's campaign and the "tarnished brass" of GOP performance under Sec. of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson.

It was just a year ago that Gen. Eisenhower promised:

"The Republican Party is pledged to the sustaining of the 90% parity price support, and it is pledged even more than that to helping the farmer obtain his full parity, 100% parity, with the guarantee in the price supports of 90."

The latest Agriculture Dept. report says that farm parity prices are at the lowest point since 1941.

And falling farm incomes, says Pres. James Patton of the National Farmers Union, "speak a lot louder than all the words uttered in the last campaign."

Depression Is Here On The Farms

A depression is here and now for the farmers, not a future possibility, says Pres. James G. Patton of the National Farmers Union. "The farmers are suffering from a present depression," he said.

'Let's Work Together,' CIO Says On Farm Issues

A THIRD of all Americans live on farms or in rural communities and when there are "hard times" for them, there aren't "good times" in the cities.

That's what CIO says, in its long-standing program for farm-labor co-operation and support for fair farm programs and building up of the nation's resources.

The close relationship of the farm and industrial sections of the economy is illustrated by the recent production cutbacks in the farm implement industry, which has laid of some 10,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers and other unions.

Big business is making use of some national leaders of the Farm Bureau Federation and, recently, of the National Grange, in an effort to stir up animosity in farm areas against city workers.

"Farmers and workers win together," said a recent National CIO leaflet. "Above all, we of CIO seek the friendship and co-operation of your, our farmer neighbors, both as individuals and through your organizations. Standing together we can achieve our common goals."

Sounding Off

"Sound money is a sound economy"—which the Republicans promised so lavishly a year ago as the cure-all for inflation—appears about to join "the full dinner pail" and "two chickens in every pot" in the crowded stable of unfulfilled but not forgotten GOP campaign promises.

Ever since Inauguration Day, Administration spokesmen have been emphasizing the beneficial results of their hard money policies. They were hard at it last week before the American Bankers Association—whose 7000 delegates and wives spent an estimated $3 million in just four days of enjoying the sights of Washington.

Then the Bureau of Labor Statistics came out with its monthly index of the cost of living . . . and the "sound dollar" looked more and more shaky.

The new BLS figure, for the third time in as many months, set another new record. Its gone up every month since Inauguration Day . . . ever since the GOP started scuttling price and rent controls.

Figuring on the basis of the "new" BLS index—which set 1947-49 for 100—the dollar was worth 87.7c in January. Now after seven months of the GOP, it's worth 86.5c.

Which calls to mind Candidate Eisenhower's promises: "The first thing we need in a stable economy is stable money . . . We want to preserve the value of your money."

2c A Day

Are Pittsburgh kids worth 2c a day? That's the question coming before voters in the Steel City, and (as reported on Page 7) it's a good illustration of what too many American youngsters face in too many American cities because of our under-staffed, inadequate, over-crowed school system.

The big business-Chamber of Commerce crowd downtown lives in the suburbs—and doesn't mind paying high taxes for the education of its youngsters. But it's hollering like the devil in an effort to prevent decent schooling for the city's children.

In Pittsburgh, there hasn't been a new school building finished in 12 years. Some 70 of the schools are 35 to 64 years old. Others are up to 103 years of decrepitude.

In an effort to keep some of the essential school services going, to keep kindergartens in operation and to prevent pay cuts for already low-paid teachers, a referendum is coming before Pittsburgh voters. The cost figures out at 2c a day.

Pittsburgh's CIO Council and the other union groups joined together in the United Labor Committee to Save Our Schools are to be congratulated on their efforts to provide a decent education for tomorrow's Americans.

My, How That Boy Has Grown

In Other Words—

All Don't Live In Houses Beautiful

By ROBERT SMITH
(From the Berkshire Eagle)

SOME TIME AGO a man I never met sent me a short poem he had written—not for me to comment on, or to sell, or to rewrite for him, but merely for me to read. He isn't a writer. He's just a hard-working man who is growing old, living on social security, and he wrote the poem to express something in his heart.

One of the verses will never leave my mind, though I live to be twice as old as the author. Here it is:

My kids are growed; I'm tired now.
My bed feels awful good.
I've missed a lot of things in life
But then I knowed I would.

Well, I suppose if Edgar Guest had written that, or Nick Kenny, or some other professional sentimentalist, a guy could laugh at it. But I don't believe one of those people could have put it that way. It takes a man who has worked hard all his life, who has seen sudden small disasters eat up all his savings again and again, who has often pushed his muscles just past their endurance, to say it as simply as that.

Poverty At The End Of Life

Thinking about this poem and the man who wrote it, I find myself dwelling frequently on the fact that a great many of our social, business, and political leaders, as well as our professional spokesmen, have only a rudimentary notion of how the working people of our country live.

And I wish I could invent a way of making some of them see what it is like to find poverty waiting at the end of a long hard life. It would do nothing but good if some of our lawmakers and editorial writers could, by a magic incantation, be transferred for a while into social security pensioners.

Perhaps it would be difficult for them to decide then just how much is "too much" for a man on social security to earn in one year. Maybe they would not talk so loosely about the "risks" a speculator takes that are supposed to entitle him to a lion's share of what the working people of the land pour their sweat into.

For they might see who the people are who really take risks, who sometimes must gamble their health, their homes, their bodily comforts, and even their kid's safety for a chance to achieve some temporary betterment, or merely to hang on to a job.

Some men and women who have been insulated by wealth and social position from the hundred thousand small shocks that common flesh is heir to enjoy treating "social problems" in the abstract—being "tough-minded" and practical about them. They find themselves able to way, with a grim expression, that while they recognize the need for certain reforms, we just can't afford them now, because we "have a pistol at our heads."

By this they mean that the threat of Communist invasion is so acute that we must take money away from hospitals and schools and health and housing programs and put it to the practical purposes of making machines to kill human beings more efficiently.

I would wish for such people that after a swig of my secret brew, they would find themselves living in a trailer, earning every dollar with their hands, and trying to keep even with the doctor and the grocer, while scrounging some sort of education for the kids to lift them out of their present station.

Life In Texas

Most of the people in Texas have to work hard for a living in the factories, oil fields and farms, but there's a slick upper crust—as indicated in this Labor Press Associated report from Houston:

Troubled by the problem of having your children attending overcrowded schools, or perhaps transportation is difficult? Well, even oil millionaires in Texas have troubles, if you're interested.

Complained Kraus Earhart, "oil man and civic leader," to School Supt. W. E. Moreland: "How do they expect a youth to get an education when they don't provide parking facilities for his car? Often my boy has had to walk two or three blocks to get to school."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

MR. EISENHOWER'S Administration has been in power long enough to allow a few studied judgments. There are bench marks that can be confidently noted.

This does not refer particularly to the six-week vacation in Colorado, to be followed closely by another trip to Augusta, Ga., where a "cottage" has been reared for the President's use on the famed Augusta National Golf course.

No Show

As the line stretched out all around the White House and the waiting grew tiring, the wives of the bankers meeting in Washington began to mutter about their "special invitation" to visit from Mrs. Eisenhower.

Official explanations later that the First Lady couldn't possibly meet such large groups" didn't calm the ladies' tempers when she failed to show up during the tourist-type run-through they were finally given at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

It refers to the President's reluctance to make policy decisions, to substitute a general effulgence of good will and decent intentions for hard work on dozens of problems.

One example is glaring: The new Joint Chiefs of Staff were instructed to present only unanimous opinions to the President, to settle any quarrels down below and give Ike short summary papers representing their "joint" attitudes.

This means that Ike merely ratifies the attitudes. The decisions will be made by the strongest manipulator and manager among the military men (Adm. Radford, perhaps).

Ike can make decisions, all right, when he is pushed to it. He decided to get along without Martin P. Durkin as Secretary of Labor when the business forces vehemently argued against any decent Taft-Hartley revision. But that was because the President is a prisoner of his millionaires and slick public-relations experts.

Pledges Fall Like Leaves

A second cardinal fact about the Administration is its devious reversal of campaign pledges that the dominant businessmen consider "unimportant."

Thus, John Foster Dulles is allowed to abandon the campaign oratory promising "liberation" to Eastern Europe, which at the time implied that the Truman-Acheson policy of merely "containing" the Soviet empire was little short of treasonable appeasement.

Dulles abandoned the "liberation" policy in a United Nations speech finally admitting that we planned to instigate no riots or insurrections within the Soviet-gripped Eastern satellites. Dulles is for "containment," too.

Agriculture Sec. Ezra Taft Benson is allowed to abandon campaign promises of a "new" farm program that cuts down benefits. Benson made a speech saying, in effect, that the only thing wrong with New Deal farm programs was that they didn't "do enough" for the farmers.

When Ike's "new team" comes to an issue that the millionaires consider "important," liberalism doesn't have a chance.

The President sent Vice-Pres. Nixon to the AFL convention with a message calling the Taft-Hartley Law a "substantial contribution to the quest for sounder labor-management relations," and a law which has established its "essential soundness."

That wasn't the way he talked in 1952 when he addressed the AFL convention as a candidate. But it's the way business pressure led him to talk a year after the election was over.

One wisecrack circulating here is that 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. is now "the summer White House."

Business Gets Its Demands

The express or implied campaign promises to businessmen are all being faithfully executed.

The Federal Trade Commission is in the hands of its foes (see Page 12.) The new National Labor Relations Board will be "stricter" in enforcing Taft-Hartley against unions.

Cheap federally-produced and distributed power is being booted out the window by Interior Sec. McKay, and the heyday of the private utility has arrived again. The Federal Power Commission has been seized by Ikemen opposed to strict regulation designed to protect consumers. The National Bureau of Standards has been undermined.

The "new team" is beginning to come apart at the stitches. Durkin has left and Emmett Hughes, the slick Life writer who coined the "I shall go to Korea" campaign oratory, is out of the White House. Craig Schaeffer, the fantastic assistant Secretary of Commerce, was kicked back to private life.

Dulles and Benson are both in trouble in their Cabinet jobs, and Charles E. Wilson in the Defense Dept. has never been out of trouble. Sherman Adams, White House "chief of staff," is steadily being undermined by resourceful rivals.

The "businessman's administration," presided over only remotely by a kind of absentee ghost representing ill-informed good will, is piling up trouble for itself.

It is also piling up trouble, unfortunately, for the country.

Big Changes In Gary—

Super-Machines In Steel Pose Technological Layoff Threat

NEW SUPER-MACHINES as big as a four-story building and as complex as a bomber are creating the threat of technological unemployment in the steel industry.

"Tremendous towers of steel, showing here and there tiny brilliant flashes from fires within, rose 50 feet above us, as high as many city apartment buildings," Bloomberg writes.

"Walt (a fellow worker of Bloomberg at the plant) led me beside the giant and pointed down. I leaned over and looked into a shaft extending deeper below the vibrant floor where we stood than the double basements of some department stores.

"A speeding ribbon of steel about a yard wide flashed down from the heights of the superstructure into the depths of the pit and up again. It was part of some 300 feet of continuous sheet steel, ranging in thickness from one 15/1000th of an inch to half that, which rushed endlessly through the various processes, disappearing into one roaring chamber after another, reappearing as a taut silver gleam here and there between the machines' gigantic parts.

Just Six Men Run It

"Six men operate the new super-machine. Taking into consideration its speed of production and the combination of several processes, the personnel of the annealing department could be cut by over a third if all its work were accomplished on continuous annealers.

"These new industrial titans require a different kind of intuition, a feeling not so much for the interaction between machine and material as the interrelationship of the different parts of some massive combination of motors, machinery and electronic control system.

"Instead of one skilled man pitted against the material to be treated, shaped or otherwise changed, there is an operator who co-ordinates the work of the various parts of the machine complex with cooperation of his team of assistants. Each of them attends to the particular activity of one section of the line, and electricians and mechanics make countless adjustments and repairs for the operator on the tall superstructures or within the labyrinthine basements where he cannot even see them.

"The general disregard of what is happening in the very heart of our industrial civilization is evidenced by the failure of management to develop any sort of over-all policy for the creation of new skills among those who have devoted a lifetime to the acquisition of outmoded capabilities.

"The only 'policy' seems to be a tendency to settle each such problem as it arises by a long and not always logical fight between managers preoccupied with profits and production and an aggressively defensive union.

" 'Think your job'll still be around 10 years from now?' is a question asked more frequently as they (the workers) walk past the super-machines that have done so much to make production per man soar despite the fear that inhibits most of the hands that run the mill.

"Their increasing undercurrent of foreboding is based on simple arithmetic: Some time, probably sooner than we think, the increase in productivity per man will rapidly outdistance the total increase in production.

"Then this irresistible new technology will, as Walt warned me, manufacture six-hour days or job-hungry men."

'Just Getting Started'

"Of course, they'll always need me," a thin, wiry mechanic with over 20 years' service told Warner Bloomberg. "All this new machinery just needs more work for maintenance.

"But I know guys with more know-how on one hand than you'll ever have, guys who started in production when I hired in, and they're back hooking with cranes. 'Cause what they know isn't worth a damn any more and they're too old to start studyin' the books.

"Listen, this thing's just getting started. Some day the only people in this damn mill will be us mechanics, you electricians, the bright boys who push the buttons, and the fellows who sweep the floors. And the bosses. Don't forget the bosses! They don't seem to be able to invent a machine that can sit in an office all day with its feet on a desk."

Washington Window—

Will Oil Men Lose Big Tax Break?

By Public Affairs Institute

THE TREASURY DEPT. and the House Ways and Means Committee are each working on plans to revise our tax laws. They will introduce their proposals to Congress next January.

Both Treasury Sec. George Humphrey and Chairman Reed of the committee say that they are considering everything, including a federal sales tax. On the basis of their statements they should weigh seriously tax laws which now give special tax allowances to gas and oil producers.

These allowances have cost the government about $1.5 billion a year in tax revenue. If these laws were changed it could ease the burden on lower income groups now finding it so difficult to pay their bills.

One allowance is known as percentage depletion. Depletion means to deplete or empty. When the operator of an oil well sells his oil the resource is used up. The law is intended to compensate him for using up his property.

U. S. Just Skips 27.5%

The odd thing about the law is that it has nothing directly to do with how much the oil well has been depleted. Rather it is concerned with the gross income or the sum of money the operator took in during the year. The law permits an oil well operator to deduct 27.5% from his gross income and it cannot be taxed.

This means that over a period of years the owner of an oil well can deduct from his taxable income many times the value of his property. A factory owner or cab driver cannot do this. They are only permitted to deduct from their profit and not be taxed on an amount equal to the depreciation or wear and tear on their property.

Oil and gas operators have their depreciation allowances too, but for tax purposes these are relatively small compared to percentage depletion.

The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce now probing the recent gasoline price increase has requested the oil companies to file their depletion claims but only one company has filed to date.

Approximately 2.2 million barrels of crude oil and natural gas were produced in the U. S. last year. Percentage depletion plus drilling and developing cost means a total tax loss of over $1.5 billion.

Other resource operators have percentage depletion too, but the rates are not as high as the 27.5% for gas and oil. The sulphur deduction is 23%, for coal 10%, and for other minerals 5 to 15%.

Talk In 2 Languages—

CCL Delegates Draft Economic, PAC Goals

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A FAR-REACHING program of action on a wide range of fronts in the battle for social and economic justice was drawn up last week by the CIO's brothers north of the border, the Canadian Congress of Labor.

Nearly 900 delegates, representing almost 400,000 members in 19 international unions, eight national unions and some 200 CCL chartered unions and councils, held their 13th annual convention in Montreal, the metropolis of French-speaking Canada. Speeches from floor and rostrum were nearly as frequent in that language as in English.

The convention approved plans to extend organizing with even greater vigor than in the past, especially among white collar workers.

Renewed PAC Drive

Delegates voted to continue recognition of the Canadian Commonwealth Federation as the CCL's political arm—despite left wing demands for a shift to a non-partisan policy—and to push political action with renewed zeal.

They took the first steps to inaugurate union-sponsored co-operative housing in the hope of relieving a shortage even more desperate than that in the United States.

They adopted a realistic foreign affairs program in the face of left wing opposition, and they took action on a variety of legislation needed to improve the lot of the average Canadian and to strengthen his unions.

Labor Unity Call

They also cheered a call for a united labor movement in the opening address of Pres. A. R. Mosher.

"Economic pressure will sooner or later force the workers of Canada to seek a unified labor movement, based on sound and enduring principles of freedom and justice," he predicted.

"Wasteful and inefficient methods of organization will inevitably be discarded, and the closest cooperation will be established between all labor organizations, in Canada and throughout the world."

The convention voted to continue support of the CCF after Wilfred Fienborough, a Labor Party member of the British Parliament and a member of the Transport & General Workers Union, described how British workers turned to political action to safeguard and extend their bargaining gains.

Left wing supporters of the non-partisan move branded backing of the CCF "unrealistic." (Their stand contrasts with the unsuccessful efforts of commie-liners in the U. S. to gain union backing for the Wallace third party in 1948.)

Opponents of this view ridiculed it. No other political party, they pointed out, has made any of labor's goals its own. Under the Canadian system in both Parliament and provincial legislatures, they added, voting is on a party basis, and the presence of a few pro-labor members in other parties would have no effect on legislation.

Co-op Housing Plans

The action on housing was touched off by Rev. F. A. Marroco, director of the Social Action Dept. of the Canadian Catholic Conference, who described both the need for workers' homes and the success of a co-operative housing project launched in Ottawa by St. Patrick's College.

He said, "the most pernicious disease eating at family life today is bad housing."

The convention directed the officers to encourage and help members to use the services offered by the college.

In the three fields most seriously beset by unemployment, they demanded that the government call a conference of labor and industry in each to pool resources in a broad attack on the causes of joblessness.

Foreign Affairs

It called on Canada to take the initiative in exploring a possible negotiated settlement of the cold war, paid tribute to workers beyond the Iron Curtain for their fight for freedom, called for removal of artificial restrictions on international trade, gave full support to the United Nations, NATO and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, urged recognition of the Red government in China and its admission to the UN, demanded "genuine disarmament."

Other convention speakers included Pres. A. H. Hartung of the CIO Woodworkers; Leo A. Perlis, national director of the National CIO Community Services Committee, Dominion Minister of Labor Milton Gregg, and Moshe Bitan, U. S. representative of Histadrut, the Israel federation of labor.

Mosher was reelected to his 14th term as CCL president in a token contest in which he rolled up 585 votes to 108 for W. L. White, left wing Marine Worker from Vancouver, B. C.

Donald McDonald was reelected secretary-treasurer without opposition. Also renamed were four vice presidents: George Burt, CIO Auto Workers; Silby Barrett, Mine Workers; C. H. Millard, CIO Steelworkers, and Sol Spivak, CIO Clothing Workers.

Tribute Paid To Murray, Haywood

The nearly 900 delegates to the Canadian Congress of Labor convention in Montreal stood in a minute of silent tribute to the memories of the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray, CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, and Raoul Leclerc, CCL executive board member, who died within the previous year.

They later observed a minute of silence in memory of Arthur J. Bielek, a pioneer active member of the CIO Steelworkers in the Timmins gold mine area, who was killed in a mine accident the day before the convention opened.

1200 More Join Gold Mine Strike

The long, bitter strike of CIO gold miners in far northern Ontario spread last week as 1200 members of the CIO Steelworkers walked out at the McIntyre mines near Timmins. Some 4000 miners now are out in Ontario and Quebec mines.

THE RELATIONSHIP between the United States and Canada is a symbol for the rest of the world, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the annual convention banquet of the Canadian Congress of Labor.

"The solidarity of Canadian labor and American labor," he said, "and the friendship of the people of Canada and the people of the United States is one of the finest assets of freedom this world has.

"Look at the things that divide the peoples in the world, and then look at our own fine relationship. We're a symbol of the kind of world people strive for and dream of, a world without bitterness, a world in which peace will replace warfare."

Lead The Free World

Custodianship of world freedom has been thrust on the U. S. and Canada, Reuther asserted. They must help lead the free world to economic, social and political strength, as well as military strength, if the forces of freedom are to prevail over the Communists, he added.

The CIO president cited the 2.7 billion bushel wheat surplus of Canada and the United States as a more powerful weapon in the fight for freedom than the H-bomb and "all the guns in the world."

"The Communists are telling the hungry that if they follow communism, they'll take the wrinkles out of their empty bellies," he explained.

Bread And Freedom

"You can't appreciate what that means unless you have wrinkles in your belly. They say they'll give food, but they give it at the price of economic and political enslavement.

"The people of the far right say depressions are inevitable, that they are the price of political and economic freedom.

"We say they're both wrong, that we can have both bread and freedom.

"What we in the labor movement must work on are the economic and social mechanisms we must have to obtain security and material well-being. We must help develop a sense of moral and social responsibility in translating technical progress into human values."

Forced Arbitration Drive Assailed By CCL Delegates

BITTERLY reactionary labor legislation recommended recently by the Canadian Bar Association got short shrift from the Canadian Congress of Labor convention.

The organized lawyers demanded that strikes be prohibited and arbitration be made compulsory in any labor dispute where "public health or safety is in danger;" that union officers be held responsible for the action of union members, and that unions be compelled to incorporate.

"This group, in a very cunning and subtle way, would if they succeed in getting the kind of legislation suggested, not only shackle the workers to their jobs in many, if not all, instances, but would destroy the entire labor movement," said CCL Pres. A. R. Mosher in his opening address.

In a resolution endorsing Mosher's views, the convention directed CCL officers to mobilize the "full force necessary to stop the action . . . to halt the progress of the Canadian people for social and economic justice."

FRATERNAL greetings and hopes for "a single organization" of Canadian workers were voiced to CCL by Vice Pres. Claude Jodoin of Canadian Trades & Council. As a Montreal city council member, he welcomed delegates.

Are The Kids Worth 2c A Day?—

Pittsburgh Labor Fights For Better Schools

By AL ZACK

Are Pittsburgh kids worth 2c a day?

That's the question the city voters will decide on Oct. 6th.

The parents and teachers in Pittsburgh say, "Yes." So does the CIO and other branches of organized labor in the big steel city.

But the real estate interests and the Chamber of Commerce are saying, "No." And they are saying it to the tune of costly, daily propaganda.

The issue is the city's schools and the money needed to run them.

On Oct. 6th, Pittsburgh voters will go to the polls for a special election with only one item on the ballot. It will be the question of raising the city's school tax rate by 1.5 mills, from a present 11.75 mills to 13.25 mills.

On a $10,000 home, at present real estate valuations, this would mean a tax increase of $8 a year —2c a day.

It will be the first increase in school taxes in 12 years—a period in which prices of everything zoomed to new heights.

On one side are the schools, the school officials and teachers, the Parent-Teacher Association and a hastily-organized group of civic-minded individuals who have formed the aptly-named Save Our Schools Committee. The only organized force on the side of the school children is Pittsburgh's labor unions.

Labor Joins Forces

The Steel City Industrial Union Council of the CIO has joined forces with the AFL Central Labor Union, Dist. 5 of the Mine Workers and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen to form the United Labor Committee to Save Our Schools.

On the other side, are the powerful money interests of Pittsburgh. The Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board and the Building Owners and Managers Association.

They have all the usual political tools that money can buy and have launched a campaign in which they lack only one asset usually on the side of big money —the newspapers.

Pittsburgh's school board is appointed, not elected. Therefore, it has no ability to levy taxes beyond the 11.75 mill limitation presently in existence. Within that limit, it levies taxes as the theoretical agent of the Legislature.

They Got Nowhere

This year, the Pittsburgh school authorities took their tax problems to the Harrisburg, but got nowhere. The Republican-dominated Legislature was interested in passing a 1c sales tax and lowering corporation taxes, thus shifting the state tax burden from the shoulders of the big firms to those of the small consumer.

The schools will not benefit from these sales tax revenues; in fact other legislative items cut the school revenue.

All the Legislature would do was allow the issue to go to the voters. Thus came the special election on Oct. 6.

The pro-school forces point out that victory will merely mean a continuation of present school services. Defeat would mean a sharp cut in services and elimination of most of what Pennsylvania calls "non-mandated services"—items not specifically requested by law.

What Defeat Means

Cutting of these non-mandated services would mean:

- Elimination of kindergartens.
- Cuts in teachers' salaries and in teaching staffs, with increased class sizes.
- Virtual elimination of the school dental and eye clinics.
- A two-thirds slash in the city's adult education program.
- Closing of school-operated swimming pools, after-school playgrounds and summer athletic activities, summer schools and recreation programs, all considered deterrants to juvenile delinquency.
- Elimination of manual training and home economic courses, elementary music instruction, the Carnegie Library and Institute, and slashes in the clerical and janitor's staffs.

The pro-school forces believe they can win. They believe the motto inscribed on the wall of the city's school headquarters: "The vitality of the state . . . the freedom, the welfare and the happiness of the people, depend directly on the education of all the people."

THESE TOTS will suffer if the Pittsburgh real estate interests win hot school tax fight. All city kindergartens and other services will be out.

Some Schools Are A Century Old

Statistics show that 14 of the buildings, still in use, are from 65 to 103 years old. Another 69 are 35 to 64 years old.

The only new school constructed in the last 12 years will be ready in February. It will not replace one of the ancient firetraps, but will serve Sunnyside, one of the city's newer residential areas.

Teachers' Pay In Low Bracket

Pittsburgh school teachers aren't well paid. Only three cities of more than a half-million population pay less than Pittsburgh pays its teachers.

This year 282 applicants passed Pittsburgh's qualification tests for teachers but only 156 accepted positions offered them. The other 124 refused the jobs because the pay rate was too low.

Chalk Up Another— A New Kids' Game

Any time one of the kids sees a mouse in the classroom, he puts up his hand and the teacher makes a chalk mark on the blackboard. The other day there were six mouse tracks on the board.

CIO IN Pittsburgh has plunged into the battle to save Pittsburgh's schools, faced by the worst financial crisis in 12 years.

Joining with the AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods and the Miners, the Steel City CIO Council has pledged its full support to the pro-tax forces.

"The American labor movement, since its inception, has fought hard to obtain a public school system so every American child, rich or poor, would be offered an equal education," the labor group points out.

"Labor, will continue to fight the arch enemies of our schools who now threaten the gains in education won with so much effort," the CIO and other labor forces pledged.

'False Issues' Charged

Lashing out at "the same selfish groups which fought against forbidding child labor and which also fought against giving teachers adequate compensation and providing for compulsory school attendance," the CIO charged "this same selfish group is active again."

In a direct slam at Pittsburgh real estate interests and the Chamber of Commerce, which is fighting the tax increase, the CIO labeled them "so-called pillars of civic advancement who, under false pretenses, are trying to conduct a fear campaign and masquerade under the guise of economy."

The real purpose of the opposition, the labor unions point out, is to "do away with the services they have fought to destroy over the years."

Leading the CIO fight is Pres. Anthony J. Federoff, Vice-Pres. Milton Weisberg and Sec. Joseph A. Goney of the Steel City CIO Council. The CIO Council summed up its position this way:

"The education of our children must have priority—the future of our community and our nation is tied to the effectiveness of our school system."

Two Standards Of Schooling

Pittsburgh's wealthy interests, who are fighting a tax increase for the city's schools, have a double standard of education.

They pay a suburban school tax which is far higher than in Pittsburgh. As a matter of fact, it is far higher than that proposed by the pro-school forces.

$50 Million In Pay Boost Won By CWA In New Phone Pacts

DESPITE heavy resistance by management which resulted in several strikes over the country, the CIO Communications Workers estimate that 300,000 CWA members will have won at least $50 million a year in wage increases and other money gains when all contracts are settled.

The biggest settlement, covering more than 52,000 workers employed by Southwestern Bell, came after an 11-day strike. It brought basic wage increases averaging $2 to $3 a week for plant workers and similarly-rated jobs in other departments, and $1 to $2.50 in traffic and clerical departments.

With 13 so-called "second cluster" contracts settled generally in line with the $2 to $3 weekly pattern and fringe issues varying with local conditions, CWA reported five more contracts pending.

The strike situation was highlighted last week by news of settlement of the 59-day Indiana Bell shut-down by 7,000 CWA members when the company gave up its demand for the right to fire strikers at will and agreed to arbitrate suspension of 20 members it alleged were guilty of "misconduct" during the walkout.

The company had prolonged the strike for nearly two weeks after agreement was reached on economic issues by insisting on a completely free hand in firings. Wage gains and other contract changes followed the settlements won from other Bell units, with pay boosts ranging from $1.50 to $4 in traffic and $2 to $7 in plant jobs.

Indiana strikers received full service credit for the time they were out, and workers whose vacations were scheduled during the strike will be paid for their time.

A one-day walkout by 7000 CWA members in Virginia ended a four-month stalemate in negotiations with the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co. with a tentative agreement providing wage increases of $1.50 to $2.50 a week.

The agreement was made with CWA members in the District of Columbia and nearby Virginia communities. Indications were the same settlement pattern would result in contracts for CWA members in the rest of Virginia and for 4300 members in Maryland.

The Long Arm Of The Law—

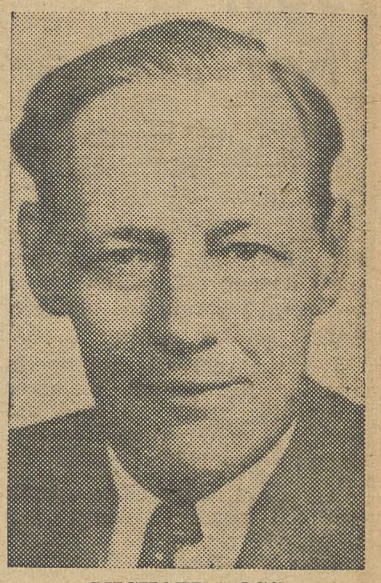
Time was when cops used to beat people on the picket line. Now they marry them.

Pert, red-haired CWA member Margaret Brabham and Patrolman Carey Bennett first met July 22, when the long Indiana telephone strike began.

And as it ended the pretty telephone company clerk assigned to picket duty in Indianapolis and the patrolman assigned to preserve peace on her picket line during the Indiana Bell strike were on their honeymoon in Ohio.

Victor Reuther Gets New CIO Assignment

VICTOR REUTHER



MICHAEL ROSS

VICTOR REUTHER, for the past two years director of the CIO's European Office in Paris, has returned to Washington to become an assistant to his brother, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

He will divide assignment with Robert Oliver, who has been an assistant to President Reuther since last December.

At the same time, it was announced that Michael Ross, director of international affairs for the CIO, will leave for Europe Sept. 30. Ross will serve as substitute CIO representative at meetings of the executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, succeeding Victor Reuther in this post.

IN VIEW of the growth of the ICFTU during the past four years, and the effectiveness of the international trade secretariats, it is expected that greater emphasis will be placed on integrating the CIO's work in Europe and other overseas areas with these international organizations.

The decision for Ross to spend a greater portion of his time abroad was taken at a recent conference attended by President Reuther and Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee.

Victor Reuther, formerly education director of the CIO Auto Workers, will serve in a number of capacities on assignment by the CIO president.

BOTH he and Ross will be in Europe early next month, and together with Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey and Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers, will attend hometown memorial ceremonies for the late Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood on Oct. 10-11.

Carey, Ross and Victor Reuther will discuss the CIO plans with Sec.-Gen. J. H. Oldenbroek of the ICFTU in Brussels next month.

In a letter to Oldenbroek, President Reuther wrote that CIO intends "to continue to do everything possible to further stimulate this growing international labor solidarity and we are eager . . . to avoid uncoordinated and duplicating activity."

CHAIRMAN Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee, discussing the administrative changes, said:

"I want to welcome Vic Reuther back to America and to the official family of the CIO in Washington. He has done a grand job in Paris as CIO European representative and I know that he will be of tremendous assistance to the CIO president in his new assignments.

"His departure from Paris does not, of course, represent any lessening of CIO's interest in overseas labor activities.

"Michael Ross is well known and respected by hundreds of trade union officials throughout Europe. In his future liaison work with the ICFTU, the various international trade secretariats and unions throughout Europe, the CIO's director of international affairs will be in a position to maintain close connections with our union brothers in other countries.

"The CIO can feel pleased that in both Brother Reuther as CIO European representative and in Dir. Ross of the International co-Vanzetti defense, and later in the organization of unemployed workers. On the West Coast, he had been on the staffs of the CIO Textile Workers and Playthings Workers.

CIO Urges Ike To Keep Hospitals Open

THE CIO has called on Pres. Eisenhower to include in his next budget message to Congress a "strong request" for funds to keep the merchant marine hospitals open.

Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby of the Health, Education & Welfare Dept., recently acknowledged that she had received two recommendations from the Bureau of the Budget that the remaining marine hospitals be closed as an "economy" measure.

She said that she was studying closing the hospitals but pointed out that they are used by many agencies of the government, and aid in medical research.

"CONGRESS itself has mandated the continuation of this fine program," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wrote Pres. Eisenhower.

"The proud and honorable history of 155 years of this great service has meant much to our nation because it has made a valuable contribution to the creation and maintenance of an efficient U. S. Merchant Marine.

"Should the proposed closing of a century and a half of truly great service become an accomplished fact, these serious results will ensue:

1. "Our merchant seamen would be deprived of proper health care;

2. "Operations of U. S. Merchant ships would be seriously hampered, and

3. "Intolerable load would overtax local medical and health facilities in seaport areas. As a result of this the health and well-being of the general public in these areas will be endangered."

Reuther also wrote a letter to Martin P. Durkin before his resignation of Secretary of the Labor. That letter also protested the proposed closing of the hospitals and pointed out since 1940, 13 merchant marine hospitals providing 1915 beds had been closed.

The CIO Maritime Committee several weeks ago began a campaign to save the hospitals. In furthering that campaign, Reuther wrote a letter to CIO affiliates urging that they ask the President to call for sufficient funds for the hospitals.

TYPICAL of the protests sent to Washington was a letter from the California CIO Council to Budget Dir. Joseph Dodge:

"The accident frequency rate for marine transportation sharply points out the urgent need for the continuation of these services," wrote John A. Despol, the Council's secretary-treasurer.

Give A Buck To PAC

Standby Job Plan Asked In Nebraska

THE NEBRASKA CIO Council called on Gov. Robert B. Crosby to develop a public works program to be put into effect if unemployment should become widespread in the state.

In a resolution passed at the recent Omaha convention, the Governor was asked to appoint a committee composed of representatives of agriculture, business and organized labor to draft a stand-by program.

The Nebraskans also went on record as favoring a unified regional management agency to direct flood control in the Missouri Valley.

The delegates elected James C. Harris of the Packinghouse Workers in Omaha chairman, and Elvin O. Wait of the Communications Workers in Lincoln vice-chairman.

20,000 At Allis-Chalmers Gain Under New UAW Pact

THE SECOND major agreement on contract revisions in the agricultural implement industry has been signed between the CIO Auto Workers and Allis-Chalmers, providing for shifts in the cost-of-living wage clause.

The settlement follows the pattern set earlier in a pact between the UAW-CIO and John Deere & Co.

Dir. Pat Greathouse of the UAW-CIO Agricultural Implement Dept. said there are some differences in percentage figures in the two agreements because of the higher number of hourly-rated employes at Allis-Chalmers, but that the dollars-and-cents values of the settlements are substantially the same.

"And the settlement is comparable to the earlier one with General Motors in the automobile industry," Greathouse said.

Some 20,000 Allis-Chalmers workers in six plants are covered by the revisions. The units are located in West Allis and La Crosse, Wis., Terre Haute, Ind., Gadsden, Ala., Springfield, Ohio, and Pittsburgh, Pa.

UAW-CIO negotiations brought a major change in computing cost-of-living increases under the Allis-Chalmers contract. The new figures follow the General Motors formula of a 1c adjustment when the Bureau of Labor Statistics' new consumers' price index moves upward .6 points.

An average of 17c an hour, which had been computed into the cost-of-living "float," has now been frozen into the base pay rates. This includes restoration of a 2c cut effected in June.

Other revisions include an annual improvement factor increase averaging 5.1c per hour and an increase in the pension for retired workers to $137.50 per month.

Ramuglia Of California CIO Dies

WEST COAST unionists last week mourned the death of Anthony Ramuglia, veteran labor organizer and education and research director of the CIO-California Industrial Union Council.

Ramuglia died of a heart attack while at a CIO Auto Workers regional summer school at California Hot Springs, near Bakersfield. The week before, he had assisted in a State CIO summer school at the same place. He was about 60.

Ramuglia has been an early organizer for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in the Boston area.

A message from John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president and director of organizations and councils, and Carl A. McPeak, assistant director of councils, said:

" 'Tony,' as he was affectionately known, was one of those dedicated trade unionists who worked tirelessly and with fervor on behalf of working men and women."

How To Get That PAC Buck—

Just Don't Take 'No' For An Answer

GEORGE ZEIGLER of CIO Rubber Workers Local 77 in Barberton, O., won't take "no" for an answer.

No one says no to Zeigler—and makes it stick—when he makes his rounds for PAC contributions.

For the last two years, he has had a 100% record for the 124 members in his plant—a record that can't be topped.

"And we know that, in addition, our URW members in the plant get out and vote 100%," Zeigler said.

"I just made up my mind it would be 100%, and when someone said no the first time, I kept going back and explaining until he finally said yes," Zeigler answered.

Any one want to try to tie Zeigler's record as a champ buck collector?

TWUA Asks Pay Hike In Southern Mills

THE CIO Textile Workers last week called on southern cotton-rayon textile mills to raise the wages of their workers who have not had an increase since 1950.

Pres. Emil Rieve released a resolution adopted by the union's executive council which pointed out that living costs have risen 10.5% since the previous southern increase. The resolution said that southern textile wages were "50c an hour below the average for all manufacturing workers in the country."

The resolution said that by refusing a wage increase and "bitterly resisting" workers' efforts to win wage increases themselves, southern textile employers have prepared the ground for "the seeds of depression."

The TWUA executive council charged that the refusal to raise wages has been in the face of a 34% profit increase in the first six months of 1953, "a profit margin at the comfortable rate of 10% on sales and a substantial backlog or orders for the future."

THE resolution noted that although southern textile workers have been "the principal sufferers from this intolerable wage freeze, our whole economy has been affected. Textile workers inevitably become poorer customers not only for the goods they produce but for food, housing, automobiles and all other commodities."

Reminding southern industrialists they had promised to take care of their workers' problems, the resolution said unless they granted an increase, "their fulsome claim to be the workers' guardians will be exposed forever as empty pretense."

Alabama Puts Halter On State Aides

ALABAMA legislators hit out at organized labor for the second time this year with the passage of a bill depriving state employes who join unions of merit system benefits.

The bill, which was signed into law by Gov. Gordon Persons, followed approval of a so-called "right-to-work" bill banning a union shop contract as "an illegal combination or conspiracy.

Although fought bitterly by organized labor in Alabama, the merit system employes bill was passed by the Legislature during the final day of the 1953 session.

THE LEGISLATION provides merit system benefits will be taken away if employes maintain active membership in unions or if they join unions. They also lose their employment and reemployment rights.

Labor spokesmen called the measure a "restriction of personal privileges." They argued that the provisions are so stringent as to amount to a ban on union membership.

School teachers and certain workers at the state docks at Mobile were exempted in the bill authored by Rep. Emory Solomon of Headland. He said the law was written to prevent strikes against the state.

UAW Member Named

Miss Gwendolyn Welsh, 22, a member of the CIO Auto Workers Pontiac Local 596, has been named by Gov. Mennen Williams to Michigan's youth advisory council.

Stop Disaster On The Farm, Says Minnesota CIO Parley

CIO's CONCRETE concern for the twin problems of community health and a slipping farm economy was clearly demonstrated last week in St. Paul, Minn.

There the 330 delegates to the 16th annual convention of the Minnesota State CIO Council heard speakers describe both problems in detail. Immediately, the delegates acted to throw CIO support into both battles.

Robert Olson, president of the Waseca County Farm Bureau, told the record turnout of delegates that if Administration farm policies continue, "we shall again see the unemployed walking our streets in our cities and towns looking for work and finding none. If the blight of financial insecurity is allowed to rest on agriculture's home today, it will surely move on to labor's and industry's homes tomorrow."

OLSON recalled Pres. Eisenhower's farm campaign promises and scornfully quoted Sec. of Agriculture Benson's Wisconsin speech of last week. Benson pledged he "would not stand idly by and watch farmers put through the wringer."

The Minnesota CIO, with a long record of cooperation with progressive farm groups, roundly condemned Administration policies in a resolution adopted unanimously. The delegates pledged to support "every effort of the farm population to forestall the coming (farm) disaster by throwing the full strength of the unions in back of legislation to help the farmers."

The convention voted to continue the work of its Farm Relations Committee, which last year sponsored an essay contest for 4-H members, which brought an estimated 15,000 entries.

ON THE PROBLEM of community health, the delegates heard speakers from the Two Harbors Community Health Center and Hospital describe a vicious campaign directed against this co-operative health center.

Today the co-op has 3600 members—two thirds of the population of Two Harbors and vicinity. The hospital, condemned as a firetrap, must be replaced and the co-op has begun a campaign to raise $700,000 to build a new health center.

The doctors' lobby stepped up its attack and is barring the center's staff of fully qualified doctors from the St. Louis County Medical Society.

Meanwhile, the co-op's fight goes on. As a result of last week's action, it has the full backing of the Minnesota CIO, which said, "we recognize, in the fight of organized medicine against the Two Harbors plan, a threat to the rights of all of us."

Pledging full CIO aid to the co-ops fight, the delegates launched a campaign to raise $13,000 to aid in the battle.

Humphrey accused the Administration of striving to "toughen the Taft-Hartley Act against unions" by packing the National Labor Relations Board "and interpreting out of existence whatever protection for unions" remain under T-H.

In other convention actions, the delegates changed the constitution to provide that the president be a full-time, paid officer, reflecting the growing duties and responsibilities of the state CIO. Robert Hess of the Chemical Workers was re-elected president to serve a two-year term Sec.-Treas. Rod Jacobson was elected last year to a two-year term.—A.Z.

300,000 New Members—

Riffe Tells CIO Gains To 2 State Conventions

By ED LASHMAN

DON'T BELIEVE the newspaper reports that the CIO is falling apart, CIO Executive Vice-Pres. John V. Riffe cautioned delegates to the Minnesota CIO Council Convention.

"They are just not true," Riffe said. "Today the CIO is the strongest it has ever been in its history.

"Today the CIO has more dues-paying members and more money in its treasury than we have ever had.

"During the last year, the CIO membership grew by 300,000 and it is continuing to grow.

"And that doesn't indicate to me that CIO is falling apart."

IN A PLEA for a strong, unified CIO, dedicated to the task of organizing the unorganized, Riffe, the convention's chief speaker, told the applauding delegates:

"The way we can best pay tribute to Philip Murray and Allan Haywood—our two great leaders whose memory we cherish—is to continue to build this organization to which they devoted their lives. A strong, united, CIO will mean that America's workers will continue to march down the road toward progress."

CIO EXECUTIVE Vice-Pres. John V. Riffe told delegates to the 15th Missouri CIO Convention in St. Louis that "the CIO is stronger than it ever has been before and has increased its membership by 300,000 in the last year."

Citing NLRB figures, Riffe said that CIO had participated in nearly 2200 labor board elections in the year ending July 31, and had won more than half of them. Further gains have come through consent recognitions.

Referring to the "no-raiding agreement" between the CIO and the AFL which has been approved by the executive boards of both bodies, Riffe predicted that the AFL's national convention also meeting in St. Louis, would approve the document "as a first necessary step toward labor unity."

FEATURED speaker of the second-day session of the convention was Vice-Pres. John W. Livingston, CIO Auto Workers, who said "nothing more eloquently describes the Eisenhower Administration's failure to live up to its sugar-coated promises to the workingman than the recent resignation of Martin Durkin, as Secretary of Labor.

"Early in the year it was clear to many of us that Martin Durkin's role, as planned by the Administration, was window dressing," Livingston charged. "But the political strategy failed to reckon with one important consideration — the honesty and integrity of Martin Durkin."

Livingston further assailed the Republican administration for "stacking the National Labor Relations Board against labor, crippling the Wage and Hour Division through budget slashes and withholding funds necessary for efficient operation of the Labor Dept."

Hubert Dalton, of the Steelworkers, was elected the new president of the Missouri Council, succeeding Harold Edwards, Steelworkers sub-regional director, retiring after nine years in office.

You And Your Money—

'Fight To The Finish' Pledged By Sen. Humphrey On Sales Tax

AS LEADING Republicans disagreed among themselves over prospects for a national sales tax, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) last week pledged a "fight to the finish" against any such levy in the coming session of Congress.

"If the Administration tries to make good its pledge of reducing income and corporation taxes by shifting more of the burden of government onto the backs of small taxpayers, they'll get the battle of their lives," Humphrey told the Minnesota State CIO convention.

Humphrey pointed out that a sales tax is "completely contrary to the ability-to-pay principle, which should be the major criterion of a tax." He said it would fall heaviest on those in lowest income brackets and discriminate against growing families.

What GOP Is Planning

His colleague, Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.) discounted chances of a sales tax and accused Democrats of "throwing up straw men." But Rep. Mason (R. Ill.), a high-ranking member of the House Ways and Means Committee, said he has heard "on good authority" that Pres. Eisenhower is "about ready" to ask for a national retail sales tax of 5%.

Mason said that, as he understands it, the proposal would replace existing excise taxes—except those on liquor, beef, wine and tobacco—and is expected to raise $5 billion. Experts estimate that the government will lose exactly that amount of income annually when the excess profits tax and higher income tax rates expire Jan. 1

Mason said he would oppose the sales tax proposal but would introduce as a counter-measure a bill calling for an 8% manufacturer's excise tax. About the only difference between the two, critics say, is that the manufacturer's excise would be collected at the factory—and then passed on in retail stores to the consumer.

Fuel was added to speculation about the President's tax plans when he told a Republican political rally in Boston that no sacrifice —including high taxes—is too great to bear to support adequate national defenses against atomic attack.

Next day, however, Sec. of Treas. George M. Humphrey told the American Bankers Association that the Administration is still determined to let the excess profits tax expire and the individual tax cuts become effective as scheduled. He admitted that he is "considering" a national sales tax to offset this loss in revenue.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

AFTER SEVERAL months of price increases recently, some prices are beginning to come down a little. Several appliance manufacturers have reduced prices of such items as gas ranges and electric irons.

But most important, for the millions of families hoping to buy homes, including many of those fast outgrowing post-war four-room "economy houses," the steady rise in the cost of building is leveling out, and even declining a little, for the first time in over three years. A house you could buy for $10,000 in early 1950 before Korea, had risen to $11,700 by the end of 1952, and the cost of building it rose this past summer to an all-time high of $12,200.

SUITS: Despite lower costs of wool, men's suits cost a little more this year. Some manufacturers haven't actually raised prices because the disappearance of the vest they used to give you with a suit has enabled them to absorb the hike. But one type of suit is going down in price: the blends of worsted and Dacron.

BEEF: The Agriculture Dept. and the cattle industry are putting on a big drive to get the public to eat more beef. To some extent the cattlemen seem to have gored their own bull. They're having trouble marketing beef, since in the years of high beef prices people got accustomed to smaller portions. The people have the right dope. A quarter-pound of lean meat per person is adequate nutritionally. We like beef for its flavor, but people have learned that can be contrived by blending a little meat with other foods.

If you buy right, you can take advantage of the present heavy supplies of grass-fed cattle to lighten your food bills this fall. Grass-fed cattle generally fall into the lower-priced "Good" grade rather than the costlier Prime or Choice. This fall the big money-savers are chuck, bottom round, heel of round, short-ribs, plate and brisket. Hamburger is another money-saver this fall as butchers grind up the less-tender grass-fed beef. Flank steak is always a good buy; it's all meat.

But alternate your beef eating with the other good values this fall: fish and cheddar cheese. Frozen fish is in heavy supply.

GAS RANGES: If you're in the market for a range, compare prices carefully. Some manufacturers have raised them recently, others have left them alone, and at least one (Florence) has reduced them. (Florence also makes the Sears, Roebuck ranges.)

Be sure any gas range you buy has the Blue Star seal of the American Gas Association, which is an assurance of minimum satisfactory construction, insulation and safety. Better-quality ranges have the "CP" seal (Certified Performance).

262,000 Pounds Of Filthy Food

A total of 262,000 pounds of filthy or decomposed food products, including grains, butter, eggs, seafood, poultry, fruits and vegetables, was seized by U. S. Food & Drug Administration agents last month because of violations of the Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act.

Five drug shipments and two lots of medical devices were seized on charges of false and misleading curative claims.

World Of Labor—

'More Work, Less Pay' Edict Issued By E. German Reds

THE "MORE WORK and less pay" program which touched off last June's worker demonstrations throughout East Germany has been revived by the Communist puppet government in the Soviet zone.

A speedup program for "a serious increase work productivity," no wage increases and implied wage cuts was announced by Walter Ulbricht, No. One East German Communist leader.

Ulbricht announced increased work norms—the same action which was the immediate cause of the recent labor uprising.

The coal miners appeared to be the first target of the new Communist order, as the puppet government began a "show trial" of eight mine officials.

West Berlin

In West Berlin, Mayor Ernest Reuter has been promised additional U. S. aid if the West German government can work out proposals for reducing unemployment now numbering some 225,000.

Reuter told Eisenhower that "the reduction of the number of unemployed is an urgent political and moral concern of the entire free world." He said jobs for another 50,000 to 100,000 Berliners would be "yet another decisive victory" against communsim.

Anti-Semitism

The Communist anti-Semitic campaign has been revived in East Germany and three other Soviet satellites, according to a report of the American Jewish Committee.

"Hundreds" of Jews were reported to have been jailed in recent race-baiting outbreaks behind the Iron Curtain.

A pattern of purges, arrests and lengthy prison terms was reported from East Germany, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Romania.

Pakistan

CIO's Maritime Committee, headed by Joseph Curran, president of the CIO Maritime Union, sent fraternal greetings to the founding conference of the Pakistan Seafarers' Federation meeting in Karachi.

The cabled message wished the seamen "success in your struggle to increase your rights and living standards through free trade unionism as we have done in America."

ICFTU

The ICFTU's Second Asian Regional Conference will be held in Tokyo this week, with Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek reporting for the world free labor federations. Issues before the Tokyo meeting include trade union rights, wage policy and improvement of living standards, and trade union finances and organization.

ILO

The demands of labor for improved wages, working conditions and social security under the Schuman Plan have had a first response. The High Authority of the European Coal & Steel Community and the Intl. Labor Organization have entered into an agreement for detailed collaboration on labor questions, "with a view to economic expansion, development of employment and raising the standard of living in Europe."

Is The High Cost Of Living Hurting?

A Lorain worker of Hungarian descent sent $100 to a relative in the old country to buy some shoes. Soon the relative returned the $100, saying in a letter:

Anti-Trust Bank Suit Tossed Out

THE GOVERNMENT'S six-year - old anti - trust suit against the top 17 investment banking houses in Wall Street was dismissed last week by Federal Judge Harold R. Medina.

In an opinion more than 100 pages long, Medina said he had come to the "settled conviction" that no conspiracy among Wall Street banking houses to monopolize the securities market had been proved.

Since the government failed to show that a combination took place, "the monopoly charges fall of their own weight." Medina ruled.

THE GOVERNMENT, accusing the 17 banking firms and the association known as Investment Bankers of America with conspiracy to monopolize, filed its suit Oct. 30, 1947. Medina began hearing it Nov. 28, 1950 and the case against the IBA was dropped in 1951.

In dismissing the suit, Medina granted the defendant bankers' motions that this be done "with prejudice." This means that the anti-trust suit cannot be brought against the bankers again.

Shipbuilders Give In The Grand Style

Local 5, Quincy, Mass., recently put on two softball games, both featuring nationally famous pitcher Eddie Feigner, and a banquet and dance—and raised $2362 for the Cerebral Palsy Fund.

For the fifth consecutive year, Local 74 in Camden, N. J., broke its record in blood donations when the Red Cross bloodmobile came around. The local won a national award for its outstanding success in 1952 blood program.

ASSISTANT Sec. of Commerce Craig R. Sheaffer, a key figure in unsuccessful efforts to fire Dr. Allen V. Astin as Bureau of Standards director, became the second high official to quit the Eisenhower Administration in little more than a week.

Sheaffer dismissed Astin earlier in the year in a row over the merits of the battery additive, AD-X2. Astin has since been permanently reinstated by Secretary of Commerce Sinclair Weeks, who also transferred the Bureau of Standards out of Sheaffer's jurisdiction.

Sheaffer's letter of resignation gave no reason for leaving the department. Informed officials expressed their belief that Shaeffer's loss of control over the Bureau of Standards was a major factor in his decision to leave at this time.

He was confirmed for the Commerce position after assuring Senators he would not be influenced in his official duties by his personal views in support of the "millionaire's amendment" to the Constitution limiting income taxes to 25%.

As a pen manufacturer and former president of the company which bears his name, Sheaffer had run into trouble with the Federal Trade Commission in 1945. The commission ordered his firm and three other companies to cease using the word "lifetime" in their advertising. Sheaffer's company had been making a service charge for repair of pens they guaranteed for life.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

IF ANY OF YOU feel a bit low in your spirits about the future of our country, I'd suggest you spend a few days with the people of our CIO councils across the land.

It is most inspiring to meet and talk with the men and women who are carrying the message of CIO, turning policy into action in their states and local communities. The week end of the 19th, I had the opportunity to visit state conventions in St. Louis, Mo., and St. Paul, Minn.

Both conventions were led by an eager, business-like group of leaders who are a credit to CIO as well as to their home states.

In Missouri, I was particularly impressed by the work done by the council in improving their workmen's compensation laws, and in improving and liberalizing the unemployment benefits paid in that state. Wise and able leadership had seen the Council grow from 4700, only nine years ago, to some 50,000. Close cooperation between the various international unions, expressed through council leadership, has increased the prestige of the Missouri Council beyond even its gains in membership.

A feature of the Missouri meeting was a testimonial to Brother Hal Edwards, CIO Steelworkers, who stepped down from the council presidency, after nine years of notable work. It was a fine tribute to a fine man.

THE MINNESOTA COUNCIL reflected the same achievement of policy in action that characterized the Missouri group. I was particularly impressed with the concerted effort in Minnesota to achieve an understanding with our brothers on the farms.

I believe I have pointed out, in previous columns, the fact that there is much misunderstanding between labor and the farmer, and that this misunderstanding has often resulted in actions that are harmful to both groups—as for instance the passage of the so-called "right to work" bill in Alabama, passed almost exclusively at the insistence of representatives of rural areas.

The burden on the councils is increasing. Their importance to us is becoming increasingly clear each day. I know I speak the mind of Pres. Reuther when I say that we shall do everything in our power to build up the councils, to give them all the assistance within our power.

Speaking of Missouri and Minnesota, of course, I am mentioning councils which I have had the pleasure of visiting. There are so many others doing a similarly fine job.

ONE THING that strikes you is the upsurge of youthful leadership in the council groups. There have been many who wailed that as the old-timers retired there would be gaps in our organization. Yet the councils are proof that the CIO is still developing genuine leadership, leadership out of the mills, and plants, and factories.

The more I travel down this highway with the good people of the trade union movement, the more convinced I become that one of the greatest benefits we have gained is the chance for our own individual place in the sun, the opportunity for the worker, fresh from the production line, to step into positions of dignity and responsibility. As I say, it is most inspiring.

A word of praise must be said for the work of CIO Regional Dirs. Del Garst and Bob Davidson. Another pleasant feature of the trip was the chance to swap memories of the Mesabi Iron Range with Brother Earl Bestor of the Steelworkers union.

$100,000 Aid Fund Sought In Long Optical Strike

A $100,000 defense fund is being raised by Local 208 of the CIO Optical Workers, for members on strike at Lugene, Inc., and the Marine Optical Co.

Fourteen optical mechanics and dispensers have been on strike more than five months at Lugene, a New York City firm.

The walkout was precipitated by the firm which refused to bargain after the union won a New York Labor Board election by a vote of 13 to 2.

Peter F. Callery, the local's business representative, charged that the firm is paying $15 a week less than the existing minimums in industry in the city, although it is charging the public prices higher than the industry's usual rates.

Lugene's anti-union tactics have included arrests of some pickets. An attempt to bring scabs in at Marine Optical was stymied by strikers.

Some 100 members of Local 208 have been on strike for six months at Marine Optical Co., Roslindale, Mass., a Boston suburb. The firm has refused to arbitrate the issues which include a proposed wage increase, changes in seniority provisions, and fringe benefits.

12 Win Contest For URW Board

CIO Rubber Workers, at their recent Grand Rapids, Mich., convention, elected a slate of 12 General Executive Board members. The 12 successful candidates, out of a field of 17, were:

Edward Hester, Denver; Fred Winrich, Eau Claire, Wis.; Charles Gash, Detroit; William Stapleton, New Haven; James Davison, Arkon; E. K. Bowers, Gadsden; Jack Tools, Memphis; E. R. Elkins, Chicago; Frank Dorso, Akron; G. L. Lewis, Akron; Norman Allison, Toronto, and Warren Smith, Philadelphia.

'Government By Injunction' Hit By CIO In Coast Picketing Ban

It acted after Superior Court Judge Frank G. Swain issued a temporary restraining order barring all picketing by striking CIO Furniture Workers Local 1010 at the Virtue Bros. Mfg. Co. plant.

Judge Swain was quoted in Los Angeles newspapers as saying injunctions would be issued against unions "regardless of the merits of their position" in the event of any alleged mischief or violence.

Sec.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford of the Los Angeles Council said "the CIO is greatly disturbed by this statement, as it implies that all it will take for an employer to get an injunction against a union is to make allegations.

"Restraining orders will then come out with slot machine-like ease," Lunceford said. He added the judge's injunction "granted prohibitions that even the company did not request."

Lunceford firmly denied charges of violence on which the company based its injunction suit.

"Picketing has been peaceful," he said. "There has been no violence to any person and no mass picketing. Even the so-called charges made by the company are petty ones, such as the alleged scraping of a car."

Members of the UFWA local said their attorney was preparing papers to ask the court to modify the all-inclusive order.

Carey Named To Salary Study

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and president of the CIO Electrical Workers, has been appointed as labor representative to the Commission on Judicial and Congressional Salaries by Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon.

Collis Leads Guild Race For President

UNOFFICIAL and nearly complete returns in the CIO Newspaper Guild's presidential elections gave Joseph F. Collis of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., a 541 vote lead over incumbent Harry Martin of Memphis, Tenn.

Results from 75 out of 90 locals in the referendum balloting gave Collis 7391 votes to 6850 for Martin. Still outstanding also were ballots from some members in military service and at-large members, which will not be opened till Sept. 30.

Six vice-presidents-at-large were conceded winners in a field of 10 candidates. They were: Roberta Bailey, Philadelphia; Ed Easton, Jr., New York; Paul A. Freye, Sacramento; Ed Marciniak, Chicago; Wm. M. Ware, Cleveland, and Felix Wold, Detroit.

In the only two regional contests, Adolph Rahm of St. Louis defeated Harold Klessig of Milwaukee by nearly three to one and Al Dipman of San Francisco defeated George Meenes of Los Angeles by two to one. A referendum on putting a mandatory dues schedules into effect in all locals was defeated six to one.

900 To Get $100 Back Pay

EACH OF 900 workers will receive an average of $100 in back pay under a new contract which the CIO Textile Workers have signed with Bauer & Black, Chicago. Total increase will be some $100,000.

In most cases the 9.5c an hour average increase is retroactive to Mar. 15, and another increase expected to amount to 2.5c an hour will come due Sept. 28, it was announced by Earl T. McGrew, manager of the TWUA's Chicago Joint Board.

The additional wage boost is provided under an improved cost-of-living escalator clause which gives a 1c an hour movement for each .6 point change in the government's new cost-of-living index. Included the cost-of-living advance, the raises received by some skilled workers will amount to 28.5c an hour.

GOP Reverses Policies—

Rough Times Ahead For Public Under FTC

"Our laws against unfair and destructive pricing practices, as well as other practices leading to monopoly must be fearlessly, impartially and energetically maintained and enforced."

By MILTON PLUMB

ROUGH TIMES appear to be ahead for consumers and small businessmen, as a new era begins for the Federal Trade Commission, the people's chief governmental weapon against monopoly and unfair business practices.

Stephen J. Spingarn, FTC's most outspoken defender of the public interest, ended his term as commissioner Sept. 25. This week his desk is being taken over by an Eisenhower-appointed successor, John W. Gwynne, once an ultra-right wing Republican congressman from Iowa.

Pro-Monopoly Records

With Gwynne on the commission, GOP members are in the majority for the first time in almost two decades.

What's more important than the commissioners' party labels, however, is that only one remaining member of the five-man board has worked vigorously to protect consumers' and small businessmen's interests. All four other commissioners have pro-monopoly records.

And no matter how clearly the people may vote against monopoly in the 1954, 1956, 1958 and 1960 elections, the reactionary make-up of the FTC won't be affected. Without deaths or resignations, it will take at least nine years to restore a strongly pro-consumer majority.

Republican control of the FTC will continue at least until September 1959 because of the times that the present commissioners' seven-year terms expire. It won't be until 1962, however, that a new Fair Deal Administration, if elected, can replace a majority of the appointments of the Eisenhower period and wipe out the commission's newly acquired pro-big-business complexion.

Meanwhile, by refusing to enforce anti-monopoly laws or interpreting them in favor of the big fellow, the FTC can cause incalculable harm to the American economy. Hence, the long-term revamping of the FTC eventually may prove to be the single most damaging result of the Eisenhower victory last November.

Still secret figures recently submitted to the commission show that economic concentration—which is what FTC was set up to fight—is rapidly on the increase.

Policies Reversed

Actually, although Democrats held a three-to-two majority until now, Republicans succeeded in reversing long-established FTC policies earlier this year when the President named Edward F. Howrey, a corporation lawyer who argued many cases against the commission, to be of its head.

Immediately, by one-vote margins previous FTC stands opposing moves to wreck the Robinson-Patman Act's provisions for fair competition were repudiated. Formerly, Commissioner John Carson, whom Howrey replaced, had regularly voted with Spingarn and Commissioner James M. Mead to support the liberal position opposing monopoly.

Recent decisions, with Mead and Spingarn dissenting, have moved toward legalizing the monopoly-favored system of basing point pricing and upholding the so-called "good faith" loophole in anti-price-fixing laws. Commissioner Albert A. Carretta, Virginia Democrat, joined the Republican members in voting against consumers' interests.

Where Gwynne Stands

With Gwynne voting in the future, the FTC's anti-consumer and pro-monopoly decisions are almost certain to be more one-sided. An Iowa newspaperman familiar with Gwynne's 14-year record in Congress prior to his defeat in 1948 recently described him as so reactionary that "he regards the Chicago Tribune as a left-wing newspaper."

In the 80th Congress, Gwynne was credited by The CIO News Voting Record with only one "right" vote on 16 key issues. Significantly, he voted to override the President's veto of the Reed-Bulwinkle bill weakening the anti-trust laws which as an FTC member he now is supposed to enforce.

Under Howrey's chairmanship the FTC has undergone a drastic administrative revamping. The pattern established is one of heavy curtailment of the commission's anti-monopoly, consumer-protection and fair trade practices programs.

Funds Whacked

The excuse given is "economy," Congress cut FTC funds only $125,000 below last year's appropriations but Howrey's delay in issuing "reduction-in-force" notices means that about 50 employes are being fired to make up the deficit. While the staff is being cut, however, Howrey is doubling top brass.

For example, FTC's executive director previously served also as secretary in charge of the administration bureau. Howrey made these two jobs and replaced the incumbent with two Republicans, one being Alex Akerman, the only GOP member of the Florida Legislature.

While this top-level duplication goes on, there has been what Spingarn calls "unusually heavy mortality among the economists, especially our ablest and most experienced men."

Among the first four people Howery fired were William Johnson and Roy Prewitt, economists with 18 and 12 years of service, who both worked on the international oil cartel report which resulted in government action against five major oil firms. The others were Irene Till, a 15-year employe specializing in patents, and Earl Graham, who worked on the report exposing the cartel in copper and other anti-merger studies.

Work Increasing

Further evidence of Howery's bias was his lopping off of one-third of the anti-monopoly trial staff. The appropriations cut makes necessary an average reduction of not more than 6% but this 30-man staff has had eight members discharged and two transferred to other units.

When the cuts are completed, the commission will have about 600 employes—15% less than it had in 1918!

Meanwhile, the number of business firms the FTC must regulate has increased from 2 million to 4 million, and advertising which the commission must keep free from falsehood is a $7 billion business today as compared with about $250 million when the agency was set up.

And Congress has passed act after act giving the commission heavy new responsibilities but providing no additional staff.

'The Most Competent Are Being Fired'

Sen. Magnusen (D. Wash.) has asked the new Republican chairman of the Federal Trade Commission to explain why he's fired career employes who were vigorous fighters of improper business practices.

"It appears that the most aggressively competent employes are being terminated," Magnuson said.

Small Businessmen Get Frozen Out From Trade Study

The freezing-out of a representative of small business from the 121 appointees to the Advisory Committee to the Senate Banking Committee to Study Expansion of International Trade was protested last week by George J. Burger, vice president of the National Federation of Independent Business.

"Small business of this nation has a tremendous stake in the overall program that will be adopted under international trade," Burger said. "No one can speak for small business except small business itself."

He urged Chairman Capehart (R. Ind.) to give immediate recognition to small business by naming one of its spokesmen to his committee.

FTC Okehs Misleading 'Free' Offers

LATEST reversal of long-standing Federal Trade Commission policies came Sept. 18 when the commission overturned its 1948 ruling that it is unfair and deceptive advertising to offer a "free" article if the gift depends on the purchase of another item.

The new FTC policy will permit firms which give items without charge to purchasers of other merchandise to describe them as "free" provided this is done "honestly" and "not as a device for deceiving the public."

Retiring Commissioner Stephen J. Spingarn filed the only dissent, although Commissioner James M. Mead took no part in the policy reversal.

Spingarn contended that the practice violates both the original FTC Act as well as the Wheeler-Lea Act of 1938, which prohibits fraudulent advertising.

Monopoly's Men Dominate Anti-Trust Study

By Labor Press Associated

PARALLELING its investigating moves in several fields, the Eisenhower Administration has moved to "improve" the anti-trust laws—through a study commission consisting chiefly of foes of the anti-trust laws.

Public housing was intrusted to a foe of public housing; social security is being studied by a foe of social security; the Federal Trade Commission is headed by a man who has made a career of defending corporations hauled up before the FTC.

And now Atty. Gen. Brownell has named as co-chairman of a committee to make an "impartial" study of anti-trust laws S. Chesterfield Oppenheim, professor of law at the Univ. of Michigan.

Rep. Wright Patman (D. Tex.), co-author of the Robinson-Patman Act, declares Oppenheim is on record in favor of emasculating the anti-trust laws. Patman asked Brownell, "Is the welfare of the American public to be sold out to big business interests?"

The committee has 57 members, but unlike the famous Heinz "57 varieties" there seems to be very little variety. Here are some of the members and their backgrounds:

John W. Davis, distinguished corporation lawyer, an adviser for American Telephone & Telegraph and Western Electric. Both are now in court fighting anti-trust charges.

Edward F. Howrey, chairman of the FTC, who has represented big corporations for years.

William Simon, former lobbyist who wrote an article for a leading law review saying that the FTC should be abolished.

Gilbert H. Montague, New York attorney, who has opposed legislation that would plug the loopholes in the Clayton anti-trust act.

Thomas Austern, with a law firm representing Standard Oil of New Jersey, also involved in a cartel suit, and Smith Barney Co., an investment house, also in court in an anti-trust case.

Bruce Bromley, whose law firm represents the investment house of Kuhn-Loeb, also in court on anti-trust charges.

Of the 57 committee members, more than 40 are members of giant law firms, which of course represent giant corporations. As Rep. Patman wrote to Brownell, "It becomes obvious that the good name of the Justice Dept. is being sought as a cloak to shield the evil intentions of those who would destroy many of the anti-trust law gains that have been built up through the years."

'Bonny Fighters Both—' That's the story of the long years of service of Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood to the trade union movement in the U. S. and throughout the world. It's a description of a British unionist friend, voiced as CIO leaders were on their way to the British isles to dedicate hometown memorial plaques to the late CIO president and executive vice president. Harry Lewis Raul, Washington sculptor, created the memorial tables of Murray (above) and Haywood (at right). For story on the memorial ceremonies, see Page 2.

Britain Remembers 'Bonny Fighters Both'

By C. H. HARTWELL

IN BLANTYRE and Barnsley, British trade unionists are making ready to welcome CIO leaders arriving the weekend of Oct. 10 and 11 for commemoration ceremonies honoring CIO's late Pres. Philip Murray and late Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

To both towns the arrival of the group of Americans will be an event in itself, for neither is normally on the visiting list for tourists of any nationality. The dust of antiquity on a cathedral city is one thing. Coal grit on a mining town is quite another. No guidebook superlative can disguise the difference.

Thus, among the 17,000 inhabitants of three villages that go to make up the township of Blantyre and the 75,000 who live in Barnsley, a friendly curiosity is already aroused by the promised arrival of Winthrop Aldrich, U. S. Ambassador to the Court of St. James, and leaders of the CIO.

SIR WILLIAM LAWTHER, president of the British Mineworkers Union, will preside. Sir Vincent Tewson, executive head of the Trades Union Congress, and other notable figures on the trade union scene will be present with close relatives of Murray and Haywood.

J. H. Oldenbroek, secretary-general of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, is expected to return from a special mission to Japan in time to be present at the unveiling of plaques to the memory of the two renowned American labor leaders.

None of the visitors will find the people of these mining towns given to ostentatious ancestor worship, though they will reveal subdued pride that the locally born men have earned more than brief mention in history books and have figured notably in records of the labor movement.

Blantyre, in the county of Lanark, is less than 10 miles from Glasgow, Britain's second biggest city, spread along the banks of the Clyde where many fierce struggles for trade union rights have been fought and won.

But it is of men and events well within living memory that Blantyre and Barnsley will be thinking in these next few weeks.

The house where Murray was born still stands in the shadow of the slag-heaps 'round which he played as a boy. It soon will be demolished and replaced by a modern working class home as part of a rehousing drive begun in 1945 by the party Keir Hardie once led and which grew to rule Britain's six first strenuous years following World War II. The plaque in Murray's honor, therefore, will find its permanent place in the hall of the Miner's Welfare Institute in his native village.

The Haywood plaque will be displayed in the auditorium of the Yorkshire Miners' headquarters.

While talking to Harry Read recently about arrangements for the dedication ceremonies, Tewson recalled that when on union business in Europe, the cheerful, courageous Haywood rarely failed to revisit his boyhood home for reminiscent talks with men who were boys when he was a boy.

"SEVERAL attempts were made," he added, "to persuade Philip Murray to come to Britain. I know he would have loved to do so, but whenever the opportunity seemed to arise some onerous task at home for the CIO or his own union intervened to prevent him from making the journey.

"He and Haywood were bonny fighters both, and British workers know their great achievements will stand forever to their credit."

Mine workers, steel workers and the British TUC generally are proud to be associated with the ceremonies.

CIO Group On Way To Britain

Several CIO officials this week are en route to the British Isles to participate in commemorative services dedicating memorial plaques to the late Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood in Scotland and England on Oct. 10-11.

The tablets, executed by Harry Lewis Raul, Washington, D. C. sculptor, are of bronze and are 34 inches high and 26 inches wide.

Emil Rieve, president of the CIO Textile Workers and head of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation, will head the CIO group which includes Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers; CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey who is also president of the Electrical Workers; Victor G. Reuther, assistant to the CIO president; Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs; Harry Read, assistant to Carey; and members of the Murray and Haywood families.

The accompanying story about the scene of the ceremonies and the preparations under way is by C. H. (Bob) Hartwell, editor of Labour, the British Trades Union Congress magazine.

'Get On With The Job' Of T-H Changes, CIO Urges

THE CIO last week urged the Eisenhower Administration to "get on with the job" of enacting fundamental changes in the Taft-Hartley Act and warned:

CIO also said that the "19-point abortive message" on T-H —withdrawal of which prompted the resignation of former Sec. of Labor Martin Durkin—falls far short of the President's own promise to make the labor-management act "just and fair."

THE CIO comments were voiced by Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg in a letter to Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.).

Ives urged fellow Republican lawmakers "to toss politics out of the window in considering proposed changes in the Taft-Hartley Act."

"We of the CIO," Goldberg wrote, "fully agree that there should be a defenestration of politics in considering overdue improvements in Taft-Hartley." (The College Standard Dictionary defines defenestration as "the act of throwing out the window . . . ")

"The best way to take T-H out of politics," Golberg advised Ives, would be for Pres. Eisenhower to "keep his campaign promises rather than yield to this cabal" of big businessmen who forced the withdrawal of the White House message several weeks ago.

Of the 19 points contained in that message, Goldberg made plain that "the CIO was not consulted in the formulation of these proposals. We would not have concurred in them had we been."

In a detailed examination of the proposals (see adjoining story), Goldberg said the message "does not deal with a number of major problems which are fundamental to any real revision of the law.

The proposed amendments, he pointed out, do not even carry out the President's promise to allow economic strikers the right to vote in elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

Goldberg also pointed to other defects in the message concerning injunctions, state anti-labor laws, and employer intimidation of workers under the guise of free speech.

WHILE SUPPORTING Sec. Durkin's decision to resign, the CIO counsel added:

"It seems to us, however, that the basic issues involving T-H must not be obscured by the controversy attending Mr. Durkin's resignation. The real issue . . . is not whether the President 'misunderstood' Mr. Durkin, or vice versa.

"The real issue is whether Pres. Eisenhower and his team are keeping his solemn pledge to the American people realistically to amend T-H so as to make it a just, fair and decent law.

"It is the position of the CIO that to date this pledge has not been realized."

Steelworkers Renew Annual Wage Goal

By RAY PASNICK

INCREASED LAYOFFS in the steel industry are developing widespread support for the guaranteed annual wages, Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel, of the United Steelworkers, told a Dist. 31 conference of USA-CIO members in Chicago.

Abel told delegates representing 125,000 Steelworkers in the Chicago-Gary-Calumet area that 50,000 union members already have been laid off over the nation and that increased joblessness is expected in the industry because of Republican Administration policies cutting down on defense production.

"LAYOFFS anticipated by next spring, when this union begins its negotiations with basic steel companies, will serve to crystalize community and national sentiment behind the Steelworkers' demand for stabilized employment through a guaranteed annual wage," he explained.

The USA-CIO leader said the union's Wage Policy Committee would give careful thought and exercise sound judgment in drafting 1954 contract proposals by meeting much earlier than ever before.

In addition to annual wages, the Policy Committee will consider proposed improvements in existing pension, insurance and hospitalization agreements, Abel said.

Present contracts in basic steel expire on July 1, 1954. They provide for a 60-day period before expiration for the negotiation of a new agreement.

Abel said that out of 2330 signed contracts in the steel industry, 8% now contain a guaranteed annual wage clause. He added that 96% provide for union security and 94% contain social insurance coverage.

He also reported that 178 new local unions have been chartered by the USA-CIO since last September, now giving the union more than 2400 locals in all with a dues-paying membership of 1.2 million.

A RESOLUTION putting annual wages as the "number one demand in all future negotiations" was adopted by conference delegates after Dist. 31 Dir. Joseph Germano emphasized that the guaranteed annual wage would maintain a balanced economy and eliminate "boom and bust cycles."

Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of the Steelworkers predicted that the CIO at its convention in Cleveland would ratify the no-raiding agreement now approved by the AFL. He also expressed the belief that general acceptance of the agreement would lead to organic unity.

McDonald Calls Steel Wage Board

Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers last week announced a meeting of the Intl. Wage Policy Committee for Oct. 21-23. The 170-member committee will meet at the Commodore Hotel in New York City.

Ike's 19 T-H Points Far Short Of Need, Says CIO

The 19 proposed Taft-Hartley amendments contained in Pres. Eisenhower's message to Congress fall far short of necessary corrections, said CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg in his letter to Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.):

"THE MESSAGE does not, for example, eliminate the one-sided injunction in national emergency disputes. It does not even go as far, in this respect, as the proposal made by Sen. Taft in 1949 on this subject and falls far short of your own proposals to deal with these disputes along the lines laid down in the Railway Labor Act.

"The message, while recommending the elimination of the Taft-Hartley mandatory injunction, preserves the Act's other injunctions and thereby fails to restore the salutory provisions of the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

"The message does not correct the abuses which now exist under Taft-Hartley of employer intimidation of workers under the guise of free speech, notwithstanding that the record of the hearings before your committee indicates clearly that Sen. Taft, among others, recognized that such abuses existed and should be corrected.

"The message, while taking a welcome step in the direction of recognizing the paramount authority of the federal law in the field of labor relations affecting commerce, nevertheless inconsistently cuts it down in important respects and would overrule the decisions of the Supreme Court of the U. S. invalidating the state compulsory arbitration laws. This, despite Pres. Eisenhower's speech against compulsory arbitration.

"EVEN in the area where the message purports to realize what you deem to be a specific pledge of the President, namely, to permit economic strikers to vote, the message does not do so but merely postpones the date of an election in the event of an economic strike.

"In your interview you expressly state that you propose to sponsor changes in the boycott provisions of the law to legalize boycotts against struck goods. Your proposal justifiably goes beyond the changes proposed in the message which were drafted to benefit the building trades but not others.

"The message does not protect unions from harassing suits which the present act permits and which can only lead to weakening responsible unions rather than strengthening them.

"The proposed message does not meet many other problems in the law needing correction to which the representatives of labor unions, both AFL and CIO, called the attention of Congress during the recent hearings on Taft-Hartley revision."

IUE Is 'Over The Hump,' Moving Ahead

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

REPRESENTATIVES of IUE-CIO—whose contracts now cover 400,000 workers—met last week in Montreal, Canada, but their resolutions and speeches were pointed both toward Washington and the expanding electrical industry of the southern states.

In the course of a five-day session that brought 700 delegates to Montreal's Mount Royal Hotel, the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers gave strong indication that, after 46 months of activity and growth, it is well "over the hump" on the road to stability.

As Pres. James B. Carey pointed out in his keynote speech:

"Our young union has achieved almost miraculous gains for those we represent"—despite the opposition of craft unions and hostility from the Communist-dominated UE "and those employers who had reached a cozy relationship with the UE."

Victory Over Commies

Carey estimated that wage gains won by the IUE-CIO reach into the billions of dollars. But, he added, "what is equally important, beyond any money calculation, is the fact that we have freed hundreds of thousands of workers from the domination of the corrupt, Communist-controlled UE and have given those workers participation in our democratic brotherhood."

Reports to the convention indicated that the UE-expelled as Communist from the CIO in 1949, a day prior to the creation of the IUE-CIO is close to coming apart at the seams from the continuous impact of the CIO competition.

In their report, Carey and Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett pointed out that IUE had won 72 NLRB elections since the last convention, and that many locals had affiliated without need of using the Labor Board election machinery.

Organizing Tasks

IUE-CIO licked the Communist-dominated UE in 13 elections during the year; in nine cases UE pulled off the ballot before election; and in "numerous instances," UE withdrew from organizing campaigns as a result of failure to make headway against the CIO union. The IUE estimated that UE's membership is now less than 100,000 dues-payers.

In a number of Labor Board election victories during the year, IUE trounced its rival, and in addition beat down corporation opposition to win key strikes and organize new plants in a number of areas.

Because of those successes, perhaps, talk about the UE was less at this convention than others in years past; and greater emphasis turned on the need for organizing the rapidly growing number of plants that have migrated into the lower-pay areas from union centers in the North and Middle West.

Carey cited the strike of IUE members at the General Electric plant at Linton, Ind., where GE sought to impose a wage level running 50 to 60c an hour less than in similar plants 40 miles away.

Thousands Idled

The convention's resolution on organizing cited both the southern U. S. and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec as two regions where industry is rapidly expanding and must be met with strengthened union organizing campaigns.

The IUE said thousands of its members had been made idle as a result of a southward trend in the electrical industry, to areas where there is "bitter opposition" to unions through campaigns financed by big business groups, so-called citizens associations and a variety of "fanatical union-hating" organizations.

Despite such opposition, the union said it is prepared to face these obstacles with intensive organizational work.

That the union is in a better condition to do this than ever before was clear from the annual financial report. It showed the union with assets of close to $400,000 — compared to near-deficit conditions a year earlier.

After some discussion, the delegates voted to increase per capita paid to the national office by 10c a month—from 90c to $1—in order to finance continued organizing programs.

"Men like McCarthy, McCarran, Jenner and Velde . . . are the best allies of the Communists," the convention said, "for these men do not aid but rather discredit and confuse the true anti-Communist movement."

The IUE legislative program called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and a wide range of social and economic progress measures. But the convention pointed out that gains made during the last 20 years may be lost if labor "fails to act effectively in politics in 1954."

Franco Deal Hit

An impressive memorial service honoring the memory of the late Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood was held during the first session.

Speaking on the foreign policy resolution, Pres. Carey had some words of sharp criticism for the Franco regime in Spain, which he says does not have the confidence of the people and was set up with the help of the armies of Hitler and Mussolini.

He expressed doubt that the newly-announced treaty setting up U. S. bases in Spain will strengthen the democratic forces in that country.

"I ask our country not to rely on Franco for the protection of democracy," Carey told the delegates. He noted that the leader of Spain's democratic Catholic trade unions is in exile and the unions must function on an underground basis.

UNDER TWIN FLAGS of U. S. and Canada, Leon Keyserling, former head of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, addresses CIO Electrical Workers convention in Montreal. He urged forward-looking policies to prevent a recession.

A DEMAND that the American people be told the truth about our hydrogen bomb, atom bomb and Air Force defenses was voiced at the CIO Electrical Workers convention by Sen. Symington (D. Mo.).

Symington, former assistant secretary of defense for air and before that the head of the Emerson Electric Co., received a warm and friendly ovation from the delegates.

"A totalitarian state can only live if its people are told lies," the Senator said. "And a democracy can live only if its people are told the truth."

Symington expressed concern that the recent $5 billion cut in air force appropriations is undermining the country's defense potential.

Other Speakers

The Missiouri Senator was one of a number of convention speakers. Others included former Vice Pres. Alben Barkley (see separate story); CIO Exec.-Vice Pres. John Riffe; Sen. George Aiken (R. Vt.), who urged speed in public development of the St. Lawrence Seaway System; Leon Keyserling, former head of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, who urged forward-looking economic policies to ward off any possible recession; Lester Granger of the National Urban League; Milton Gregg, Canadian minister of labor; and Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who had been scheduled to speak, was unable to appear as the result of a virus attack which kept him confined to his home.

Riffe Reports

John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president, said the CIO had assigned several organizers to the IUE.

"Not only are we going to continue that, but we are going to ask every other CIO union to help you wherever you have an organizing campaign or strike going," Riffe said.

Talking of the no-raiding agreement with the AFL, he said it should prove to be a tremendous success.

"The job the CIO and AFL must do is to organize the 50 million unorganized workers," Riffe said.

Resolutions Get Boiled Down By IUE Committee

IUE-CIO tried a new experiment in convention management, designed to ease the job of moving resolutions through the floor.

Instead of numerous resolutions covering each subject, the Resolutions Committee brought into two booklets, each covering policy statements on general subject matters.

The first report covered three subjects: Organizing, domestic policy and foreign policy. The second covered collective bargaining rights, legislation and political action. In addition a small number of special resolutions, dealing with strikes, union labels and miscellaneous matters, were mimeographed in the more traditional way.

ORGANIZING victories for the IUE-CIO in 72 NLRB elections in the past year were reported by Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett.

Why The Veep Got A Big Hand

DELEGATES at the CIO Electrical Workers convention had a chance last week to "Meet the Veep" in person.

Former Vice-Pres. Alben S. Barkley journeyed to Montreal to address the union meeting—and his proverbial good humor and serious-minded devotion to the problems of democracy quickly established him on a "Dear Alben" basis with the 700 delegates.

The "Veep" praised the IUE for its gains, and ridding a large share of the electrical industry of the menace of Communist infiltration.

Some high-lights of the Veep's humorful speech:

TAFT-HARTLEY: "It's an unfair law to labor that should never have been passed. I fought it every step of the way, I thought it should be repealed, and I still do."

POLITICAL PROMISES: "There's been some controversy (between the White House and former Labor Sec. Martin Durkin) as to what was said, before and after the election. When a political party makes a promise, it ought to keep its word. If it doesn't it's unworthy of the promise."

CREEPING SOCIALISM: "In 1908, I advocated federal aid to the states to build highways. And I was called a 'socialist.' In 1916, the Democratic party adopted that principle, and overnight I stopped being a 'socialist.' If it's going to be a choice between creeping socialsm and galloping paralysis, the American people won't choose paralysis."

FOREIGN AID: "Point Four has been cut down to what the newspapers call Point 2.5. If they keep whittling away at it, it may be cut down to Point One, and eventually down to Point Cipher."

TAXES: "I'm as anxious as any man to have my taxes reduced. But if it comes to a choice between money and liberty, I'll give up my money, little as it is."

Barkley was interrupted 17 times during his 40-minute speech. Afterwards he participated with IUE officers in ceremonies in presenting a charter to Local 761 at Louisville, in the Veep's home state of Kentucky.

Get On With The Job

Now that the immediate furor over the resignation of Sec. of Labor Martin Durkin has receded, the fundamental question concerning the Eisenhower Administration and the Taft-Hartley Act remains unresolved.

That question, as CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur Goldberg suggested last week, is "whether Pres. Eisenhower and his team are keeping his solemn pledge to the American people realistically to amend Taft-Hartley so as to make it a just, fair and decent law."

And the answer, to date, is that the President has not kept that pledge.

Rather, the nation is faced with a situation, in Goldberg's words, in which "an industry-Cabinet cabal is playing special interest politics of the most partisan kind with Taft-Hartley."

"Justice and fairness" is what Pres. Eisenhower has promised in the nation's basic labor-management relations law. Neither would be achieved by the limited and inadequate 19 proposed amendments in the presidential message to Congress which was killed by the "industrial cabal," thus giving Mr. Durkin no alternative but to resign.

The 19 points do not even realize the President's own express desire to give economic strikers the right to vote in NLRB elections. By failing to deal with such basic questions as anti-union injunctions, the 19 points would leave intact the heart of Taft-Hartley—an act which, in the President's own words, is "union busting."

There are a few faint signs in Republican ranks that the Administration in the forthcoming session of Congress may finally act on Taft-Hartley. For instance, Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.) says it's high time for the GOP to "toss politics out of the window" in considering Taft-Hartley amendments.

CIO agrees. We believe Congress and the Administration should get on with the job. Labor's patience is not inexhaustible.

A Lesson To Learn

Government workers, whose morale, with good reason, has fallen to subterranean depths in recent months as the result of wholesale firings, dismissals and downgradings under the new Administration, can learn a lesson from what's taken place.

We think recent events affecting the civil service demonstrate that strong unions—and industrial ones at that—are the workers' only real protection against such practices, whether it be in the government service or out.

What is important to note about the "big business" Administration, which has ridden roughshod over provisions of the civil service laws, is that the very men who now are pushing federal workers around are the same men who once pushed workers around much the same way in their plants—until the workers formed a union and stopped them.

Mayor Reuter

With the death of Mayor Ernst Reuter of West Berlin, the free world and the labor movement everywhere lost a champion. A man of deep democratic convictions and vigorous leadership, he demonstrated that freedom and social progress are the strongest weapon against communism. The continued existence of free Berlin is a monument to Ernst Reuter's life.

Wishful Thinking

In Other Words—

The Shame Of The Slums

The 83rd Congress closed its eyes—and nose—at America's slums when it virtually killed off low-rent public housing funds. The problem remains, as described in this editorial on "The Shame of the Slums" from the American Journal of Public Health.

With an introductory quotation from Clarke Blake's report on "The Puerto Rican Problem in New York" (from the Reader's Digest), the editorial of the Journal of Public Health follows:

"I STEPPED INTO one of the dimly-lit, narrow hallways off Madison Ave. and knocked at the door. At first glance, the place looked like a jumbled storeroom for second-hand beds.

"Squeezed into a 15- by 18-foot area were a three-quarter bed for the father and mother; a crib for the seven-year-old; a wooden double-decker where two small girls share the lower section, leaving a teen-age sister the upper; a roll-away for a boy 18; a bathtub; and a toilet set up in small clothes closet.

"Mrs. Cruz cooks on a tiny gas range. At meal-time, three of the family draw up to a small table—they have only three chairs—while the other four sit on the beds, plates on laps, or eat standing up. Dishes dry on a board laid across the end of the bathtub. And this is typical."

Worse Than In Europe

These conditions were observed in New York City in the year 1952. In a recent inspection drive in Manhattan, about one in eight was a cellar dwelling.

There are today worse slums in certain of the Puerto Rican areas of Harlem than can be found in any city of northwestern Europe—conditions far worse than those from which our Puerto Rican immigrants have come; for the slums of San Juan have at least sunlight and fresh air.

Harlem presents New York's most serious problem, but a recent grand jury study in Brooklyn has revealed conditions almost as grave in that borough; and it is doubtful if any city of considerable size in the United States does not offer comparable situations.

What should be done about such conditions as these which disgrace the cities of the most prosperous country in the world?

The first obvious answer is to enforce our housing laws; remodel or vacate such substandard dwellings as those which have been described; and both in Brooklyn and Manhattan active movements are now in progress for the condemnation of unsafe and unsanitary dwellings and for rehabilitation based on comprehensive block-by-block inspections.

It would be a great mistake, however, if the city were lulled with the hope that such procedures alone will solve the problem. If the city were to purchase 100,000 quonset huts and were to set them up in Central Park, it would be possible to clean up the most menacing slum and sible to clean up the most menacing slums.

The Real Problem Of Housing

The slum dweller is the real problem, not the slum. The basic inescapable fact is that a substantial part of our urban population cannot pay for decent housing.

In a city like New York, private capital cannot possibly build and maintain decent housing for less than $30 per room per month. No family of a size requiring a three-room apartment can afford to pay such a rent on a family income of less than $5000 a year.

It is true that gouging landlords are, in some instances, obtaining huge incomes from subdivided tenements and cellar dwellings. To expect, however, the private landlords to be able to meet the housing needs of the $2000-income families with children is a fantastic dream. The submerged one-tenth of the population of New York and of other large cities, who have incomes of $2000 or less, can pay only $30 per month for a dwelling unit.

It was for this very reason that our federally-subsidized low-rent housing program was initiated. The far more extensive development of this program is an essential precedent to the elimination of the slum dwelling; yet the entire basis of our low-rent housing program is now under attack.

We hope that public-health workers all over the country will bear in mind that provisions of decent low-rent housing must parallel legal condemnation of dangerous and insanitary housing and will use their full influence to see that the 83rd Congress takes adequate steps to continue the public housing program. In this way—and only in this way—can the dark shadows of the slum be eliminated from the American scene.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE REAL SIGNIFICANCE of the appointment of Gov. Earl Warren of California as Chief Justice lies in a largely overlooked fact: the "liberalization" of the Supreme Court, achieved in a desperate political battle by Franklin D. Roosevelt, has been largely undone.

What Warren does as Chief Justice, therefore, is infinitely more important than the fact that he enjoys a reservoir of good will and respect among people of many groups and parties.

Harry Truman's most serious failure as President was his curious blindness to the delicate function of the Supreme Court as final arbiter of even political disputes.

His four successive appointees—Harold Burton, Tom Clark, Sherman Minton and Chief Justice Fred Vinson—were far below the caliber of most Roosevelt appointees—Hugo Black, William O. Douglas, Stanley F. Reed, Robert Jackson, Felix Frankfurter, and the late Frank Murphy and Wiley Rutledge.

These Roosevelt appointees were not "rubber stamps." Frankfurter quickly revealed himself as fundamentally a conservative. Jackson and Black became involved in a bitter personal feud. Douglas and Reed, even Murphy and Rutledge, disagreed in cases.

'Rose By Any Other Name'

Democratic lawmakers quickly punctured Pres. Eisenhower's press conference comment that while the Administration would not ask for a direct federal retail sales tax, it wasn't ruling out a move for a general manufacturers' excise tax.

Such an excise tax, said Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.), would be "the lowest and basest and most reprehensible kind of sales tax."

And Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) added: "Call a rose by any other name—it smells the same."

But they were men of stature, all essentially modern minded, and aware that in old Chief Justice Marshall's fine phrase, the judges "must never forget that it is a Constitution we are expounding."

The written Constitution of a democracy must be a living document. It must be reinterpreted according to the needs of each generation and in the light of changing concepts.

This can be illustrated by a question the justices asked last June, when they ordered further briefs and arguments on the pending cases asking them to outlaw school segregation.

The Hardest Task

Even if it was not the original intent of the authors of the 14th Amendment to abolish school segregation, the judges asked, can the Court "in the light of present conditions" now find that the 14th Amendment requires abolition?

The hardest trick is not to "liberalize" the Supreme Court but to keep it liberalized. Men grow older, secure in their lifetime position. They decide cases from briefs and the oral arguments of deferential lawyers, far from the heat and passion of everyday life. Mr. Justice Jackson, writing on "judicial supremacy" before he went on the bench, called the Court always "the last generation's check upon the present."

The Roosevelt liberalization was thoughtlessly thrown away before its usefulness had ended, before its work was done.

The new Chief Justice is a Republican. One hopes that he will bring to his tasks the spirit of Republicans like Oliver Wendall Holmes and Harlan Stone, who preceded him. There is an eminent GOP tradition anchored like a rock on the doctrines of civil liberties and the rights of man, and Holmes and Stone were its great judicial exponents.

Warren would reinvigorate the Court if he should infuse it once more, from his new position of great power, with the dignity and moral stature than Holmes and Stone gave it.

The President Didn't Impress

Well, it was nice to have Ike back in Washington a little while for a news conference—his first in 10 weeks. The President, however, didn't impress many reporters with his categorical declaration that the Treasury has produced a study definitely opposed to a federal retail sales tax.

A couple of questions showed that Mr. Eisenhower didn't mean that the Treasury was opposed to a manufacturers' excise tax, which is just another name for a retail sales tax, except that the rate pyramids as extra costs are passed through wholesalers and jobbers and the ultimate consumer foots the whole bill.

The President, whose party promised to bring taxes down and balance the budget, pointblank refused to answer another question about whether he expected the Treasury eventually to decide that more revenue, less revenue or "about the same" would be needed. Studies were still continuing, he said.

★—An Agriculture Dept. official, a holdover from the former days, joyously relates that when Sec. Ezra Taft Benson's "new team" came in the immediate announced objectives was to "cut out all this crazy stuff" that Roosevelt and Truman had been doing. "Then one thing they had to do was something that no private banker in his right mind would do—lend money on wheat stored on open ground, not only in the Southwest but even in Northern states, with winter coming on." Not enough storage bins.

Economic Outlook Says—

Consumers Need Shot In The Arm To Prevent Economic Headaches

UNLESS CONSUMER income rises rapidly as defense spending tapers off, "unemployment and idle factories will be inevitable."

That's the warning of the CIO Economic Outlook in a new issue titled "Strengthen the Economy's Consumer Base."

The benefits of any reduction in business taxes—for example, the end of the excess profits tax early next year—must be passed on to consumers in the form of lower prices instead of being used to raise profits, the Outlook said.

Wage earners also must be given a greater share of profits resulting from increased productivity, it added.

"If the economy is not to be distorted by imbalanced incomes—high profits and inadequate consumer buying power—the buying power of wages and salaries must not merely catch up with past productivity increases. It must forge ahead," the Outlook said.

'Trickle-Down' Theory Fails

Pointing out that liquid family savings are now smaller than in 1945, the review said that the increased consumer spending needed to prevent a depression depends upon current personal incomes in the period ahead to a greater extent than in the years immediately after World War II. Consumer credit, it said, has been "stretched to the point where any further substantial increases in spending can be based only on rising personal incomes."

The Outlook criticized the so-called "trickle-down" theory held by many business economists that prosperity depends mainly on high profits and business investment.

"The trickle-down theorists are wrong," it said, "not because business income and investment are completely unimportant, but rather because they place sole emphasis on the small, top-part of the economic pyramid which depends for its prosperity upon the well-being of the great mass of consumers at the economic pyramid's base. It is the consumption base of the economy that sets the tone, in the long run, for the economy as a whole."

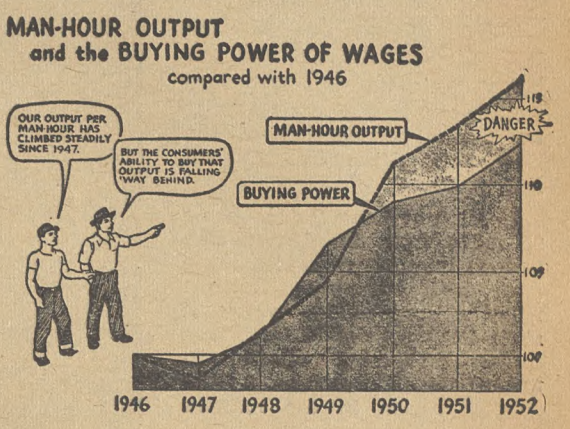
Buying Power Vital

Business spending for new non-farm plant and equipment during 1946-49 accounted for an average of about 10% of the economy's total output of goods and services and is "obviously an important factor in the economy," the Outlook said.

Consumer spending, which from 1946 to 1949 accounted for an average of 69% of total production, is clearly much more important in shaping general economic activity, the Outlook said. It is "the major factor in the economy—not the only one, but, by far, the largest. And in the long-run, business spending rests on consumer markets."

The review disputed the contention of "trickle-down" economists that business invests in new plant and equipment simply because it has available funds, and that this spending automatically continues if profits are high.

"Goods and services are produced for sale. When buying is increasing and production is rolling ahead, business firms invest in new plant and equipment to replace worn-out capital and to expand to meet the demands of the growing market," it said. "If buying slows down, the production of goods and services will drop off, too."



The Outlook said buying power of wages and salaries generally has failed to rise as rapidly as the economy's increasing productivity since 1946 and before. Although workers in manufacturing industries where union organization is effective have improved their buying power slightly since Korea, others have not caught up with post-Korean living costs. In many cases, there was a decline in buying power despite small wage boosts in certain industries.

"Failure by business to share the fruits of industrial progress with other groups can create economic conditions—excessively high profits and insufficient consumer buying power—that make full employment impossible in the long run," the Outlook warned.

Price Reductions Doubted

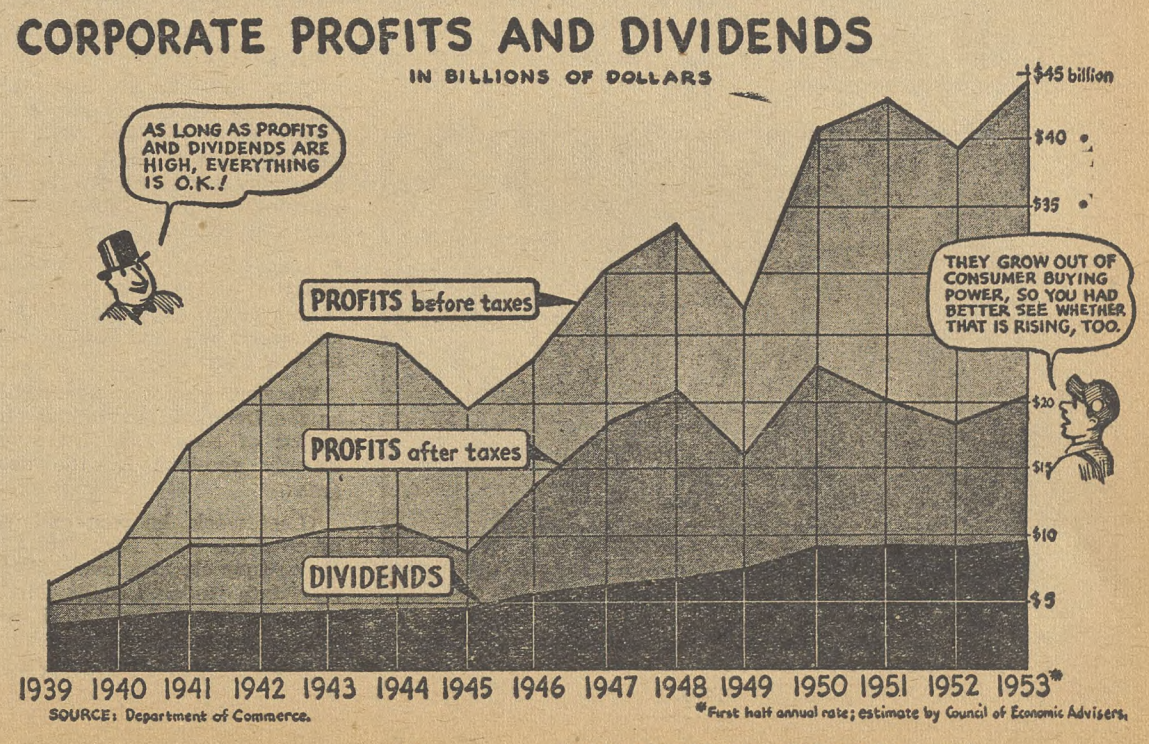
Monopolistic and administered price arrangements in most parts of the economy make it unlikely that price reductions will occur to any great degree, the Outlook believes, although rising productivity makes it fully possible for industry to reduce prices—thus sharing the fruits of increasing man-hour output with consumers.

"Wage and salary increases, based on increasing productivity" are therefore needed "to improve the buying power of many millions of families." Despite the high employment since 1942, "there is still a long way to go to meet the basic needs of decent housing, food, clothing, education and recreation," the CIO said.

It pointed out that about 14 million consumer units out of a total of 53 million earned after-tax incomes of under $2000 in 1952 and over 10 million others earned between $2000 and $3000 after taxes.

At the same time, in the first six months of 1953 the annual rate of total corporate profits before taxes was at an all-time peak of $44.5 billion, and in the first quarter, the after-taxes rate of return on net worth increased to 10.7%.

"Increased buying power of wage and salary earners and assured annual incomes represent actions by private groups in the economy to help achieve the necessary rising level of consumer spending for the maintenance of full employment," the Outlook said.



Potofsky Urges Talks With Russ—

N.Y. CIO Scores GOP 'Give-Away' Record

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

REPUBLICAN Administrations in Washington and Albany came under heavy fire from speeches and resolutions at the annual convention of the New York State CIO Council last week.

Meeting at Long Beach—some 25 miles from Manhattan—the several hundred delegates made clear their resentment against many actions of the years-old state GOP policies of Gov. Tom Dewey and the big business attitude of the eight-month-old GOP Administration in the nation's capital.

"The record to date in Washington is not encouraging," said Pres. Louis Hollander in his report to the convention. Noting that the Council had earlier sounded warnings against "gigantic give-aways" of natural resources, "take-aways" of New Deal-Fair Deal social programs and unpalatable tax programs, Hollander added:

"It is little satisfaction to be able to say that these charges and warnings have been substantiated by the acts and pronouncements in Washington" during recent months.

Legislature Rapped

Hollander, turning his attention to Empire State matters, charged that the New York Legislature in 1953 "compiled a record of abject service to greedy interests at the expense of the people of the state."

Big real estate interests were a major beneficiary, he said, through weakening of state rent control laws to permit increases of 15% and more at the expense of some two million families.

Furthermore, he said, the Dewey Administration proposals on New York City financial policies were a "brazen demonstration of sacrificing the interests of the many to satisfy the demands of the few."

To meet the problems, the Council set up a $100,000 statewide educational project to finance radio and TV programs and pamphlets during the next 10 months.

A major point of attack, at the three-day convention, was Hughes-Brees unemployment insurance changes passed by the Legislature in 1951. In setting up individual employer funds, rather than a general state-wide fund, and in making it more difficult for workers to receive benefits, the Hughes-Brees program has proven "discriminatory, unjust and injurious," the Council charged.

Other resolutions pledged support to the strike of the CIO Electrical Workers against the Arma Corp. in Nassau County and Brooklyn, which was settled shortly thereafter, and the continuing walkout at the big Hearn's department store in New York City.

The Council also scored "ruthless raiding forays" carried on by the AFL Teamsters against the CIO Brewery Workers, and placed its entire strength against raids by the Teamsters or any other union on CIO affiliates.

Pres. Hollander and Sec-Treas. Harold Garno were re-elected by acclamation to their eleventh successive terms, and were sworn into office by Pres. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers, one of a number of leading CIO officials who addressed the meetings.

Most of the visiting speakers concentrated their attention on the need for labor to rally its forces against the increasingly reactionary trend of the national Administration and the GOP-controlled Congress.

Pledging support to the CIO in such organizing drives, the steel union president also pledged the support of the USA-CIO to assure that "when unity comes," smaller union will not be gobbled up or torn apart in the unitying process.

Hailing the no-raiding pact with the AFL, McDonald noted that when futile raiding comes to a halt, great organizing benefits should follow. The steel union, he pointed out, has raised wages from 66c an hour in 1936 to $2.32 at present.

He praised the CIO Council for its legislative work, and suggested that in the states and cities, greater emphasis should be placed on winning labor's gains.

Rieve Warns On '54

Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers scored "fumbling and failures" by the GOP in Washington, but he warned against complacency in expecting defeat for the Republicans either next year or in 1956.

"It's all very well to say the people were fooled in 1952" by the glamour of General Ike, Rieve said. "It has been said that the people will wake up when the signs of a depression begin to appear. Frankly, I hope we do not have to wait until then . . ."

AMERICA would do well to re-evalue the nation's foreign policy, both as a result of the truce in Korea and long-range developments in Europe, Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky, of the CIO International Affairs Committee, told delegates to the New York State CIO convention last week.

Potofsky, who heads the CIO Clothing Workers, based his call for changes in both domestic and foreign policy on observations during visits to a number of European countries this summer.

"Freedom-loving people loath communism," Potofsky said. "But loathing communism does not eliminate it. It is here as a hard disturbing fact. We will have to deal with it, without appeasement, but we will have to deal with it.

"The alternative may be atomic war and the destruction of our civilization."

'Tough And Tricky'

The CIO official conceded that negotiating with the Soviet Union is a "tough and tricky" problem. But, he added:

"There are no international conflicts which cannot be resolved by negotiation. Negotiation is not appeasement . . . If we are resolved to deal with other in terms of human dignity, have regard for their problems as well as our own, I think we can make progress toward peace.

"This may call for co-existence with nations whose philosophies we abhor. It may mean dealing with them as equals even though we hate everything they stand for . . .

"In labor's own history, we had our struggles with die-hards who would not negotiate nor arbitrate. But finally we did manage to get them to sit down and negotiate.

Suicide Danger

"Some of our giant corporations who deal with us still don't like us—let's not fool ourselves about that. Yet we live together."

Communism, the clothing union official said, is "no friend of labor. It is aggressive and belligerent; it exploits and enslaves; it deprives human beings of their individual rights, freedom and dignity."

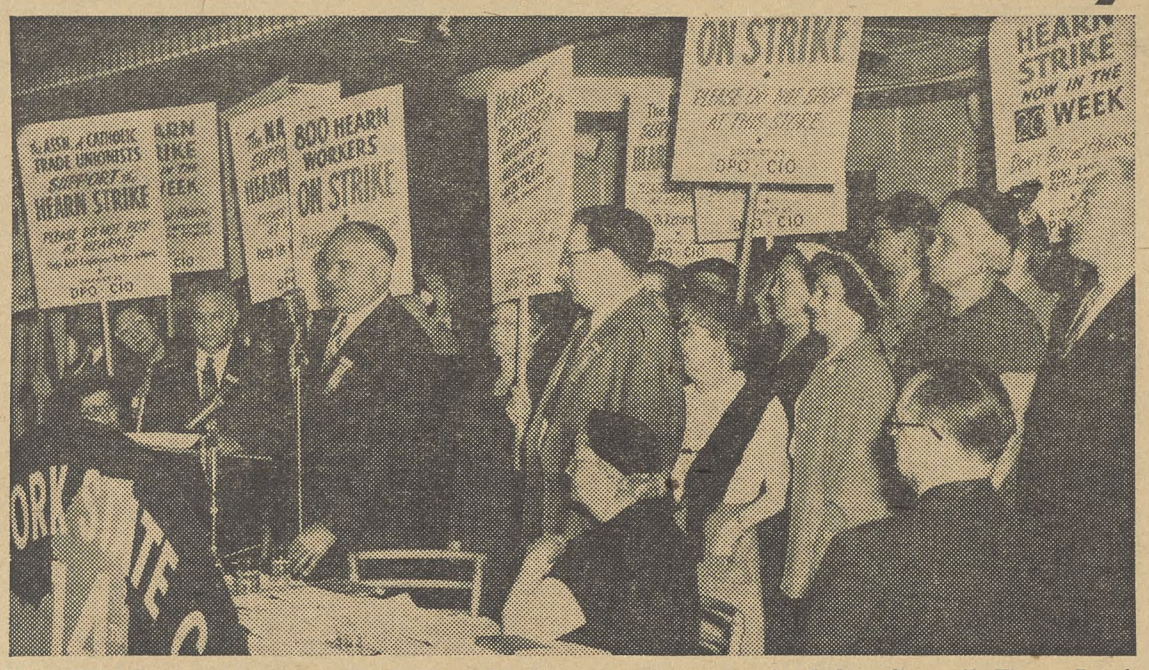
Pointing to the unpleasant fact that one-half the world is under Communist domination, Potofsky declared:

"We wish it were not so, but there it is. Does any man in his right mind believe that we can shoot it out of existence? In these days of atom and hydrogen bombs, such notions are nothing short of suicide."

ICFTU Work Hailed

In a review of CIO's stand for measures to help strengthen the free world, Potofsky noted that the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions is "the strongest anti-communist force in the free world"—in large part because its stands not only against totalitarianism but also for higher living standards and greater democracy for the people."

The Marshall Plan, he added, was a noble effort which helped many nations; but in France and Italy, he said, it also had the effect of helping the rich become richer and the great majority of the people to become poorer and disillusioned.



SOLIDARITY and support of New York CIO behind CIO Distributive Workers in long strike against Hearn's department store was voiced by Council Pres. Louis Hollander (center) after demonstration by DPO members at Long Beach convention.

'Unholy Alliance' On Power Rapped

What sort of a "power honeymoon" should there be at Niagara Falls, whose electric power potentials are even more important, if less romantic, than the scenery?

Rep. Roosevelt suggested to the New York State CIO that the "power honeymoon" should be the result of a "legitimate union" between the people with the government. It shouldn't, he added, be an "unholy alliance" between the government and the private utilities.

FDR Jr., Young Bob Wagner Cheered By New York CIO

- Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., whose name has been mentioned as a possible candidate for governor in 1954, attacked give-away programs of the Washington and Albany GOP Administrations.

- Robert Wagner, Jr., son of the Senator who sponsored labor's magna charta, the Wagner Act, lashed out at Republican policies in New York City.

Wagner, who won nomination as the Democratic candidate for mayor of New York City, was warmly received by the delegates.

(Last week, he won endorsement of the New York City CIO Council for election, over Liberal candidate Rudolph Halley, independent Mayor Impelliteri, and Republican Harold Riegelman.)

Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers, who heads the City CIO Council, warmly praised Wagner in a speech to the state meeting. He criticized the GOP candidate as a strike-breaker in the 1939 taxi strike, and said he is the "big business candidate."

CIO Gold Miners In Ontario Dig In For A Long Battle

MORE THAN 4000 striking gold miners last week were digging in for what may be a winter-long fight in the sub-Arctic mine camps of far northern Ontario and Quebec.

As the walkout neared its third month, the strikers—members of the CIO Steelworkers—set up winterized picket tents.

The union is spending $40,000 a week to provide groceries for the strikers in the Preston East Dome, Hallnor, Boulan Reef and Delnite Mines in the northern Ontario area near Timmins, and at the Noranda Mines in northwestern Quebec.

Gower Markle, welfare and education director of the Steelworkers in the area, said that the expenditure would reach between $80,000 and $85,000 weekly when 2600 workers at the Hollinger and McIntyre mines become eligible for union welfare in a week.

With the assistance of Howard Conquergood, welfare director of the Canadian Congress of Labor, who was loaned to the steel union, a smooth-running organization has been set up.

Some 300 men have been organized into a detail to cut and transport wood to the homes of the strikers.

SOME 1500 pickets are on duty at 17 points extending over 60 miles. The strike organization includes a recreation department, which provides nightly movies, holds dances and card parties, organizes tournaments for the pickets, and stages a weekly show using union talent. A mess kitchen provides meals for up to 3000.

"The departure of employes is one of the risks management will have to take," Conquergood said.

"Unfortunately, the men most likely to leave are the most skilled workers."

It is apparent that the mine owners, sparked by R. Y. Murdoch, an officer in a score of mining properties and one of the most powerful industrialists in Canada, do not want a fair deal with the steel union.

The gold miners are seeking basic union aims, decent wages, the 40-hour week, the checkoff as the minimum form of union security, and a pension and health insurance plan.

The miners' average hourly earnings last Apr. 1, according to Canadian government figures, were $1.34 an hour, compared to $1.68 in iron and steel mills. Noranda has a basic hiring rate of but $1.05.

Steel Local Gives $200 A Week

Striking northern Ontario gold miners have been guaranteed $200 a week for the duration of their strike by fellow CIO Steelworkers in Local 2471, Windsor, Ont.

The local's executive board pledged the weekly payment and called on all Windsor area union locals to support the walkout.

Help Urged For Striking Gold Miners

A NATIONAL strike appeal on behalf of 4000 striking gold miners in Northern Quebec and Ontario, members of the CIO Steelworkers, was sent to all affiliates of the Canadian Congress of Labor by CCL Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald.

In announcing the appeal, MacDonald said "the CCL regards this strike at Timmins and Noranda as a key battle against anti-union employers."

The CCL official cited Canadian government figures showing "the depressed conditions under which these miners have been working." The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported that the average hourly rate in gold mining as of June 1 was $1.34 an hour, while it was $1.70 per hour in other metal mining.

"In Ontario the basic gold wage is $1.10 an hour and at Noranda it is $1.05," MacDonald said.

A 48-hour work week at Noranda and almost all the Ontario gold mines, compared to a 45.9-hour average in gold mining and 43.4 hours in others metal mining, is another strike issue.

He's Hep On T-H—

Metcalf, New House Labor Group Member, Once Was CIO Legal Aide

WHEN THE House Labor Committee finally gets around next session to trying to rewrite and clarify the Taft-Hartley Act, it will be fortunate in having as one of its members a man widely recognized as one of the country's best legal minds.

He is Rep. Metcalf (D. Mont.), who came to Congress last January from a distinguished career as the youngest supreme court justice in his state's history.

What's equally important for the job at hand, he had gone to Montana's highest bench after years of practical experience as one of the West's outstanding labor lawyers. And four of those years, from 1938 until he volunteered for Army service in 1941, he was attorney for the Montana State CIO Council.

REP. LEE METCALF
Montanan once CIO aide

A LIBERAL by conviction, Metcalf's record during his first session in the House was in the progressive tradition established by his state's two outstanding Democratic Senators, Murray and Mansfield. He represents the first Montana district, the seat Mansfield held until elevated to the Senate.

Descended from pioneers, Metcalf was born at Stevensville, Mont., in 1911. He worked his way through a degree in history and economics at Stanford and another degree in law from Montana State Univ. in 1936.

Immediately entering politics, he was elected to the Montana Legislature that fall. In 1937 he was appointed assistant attorney general of the state, serving until his return to private practice.

As legal adviser for the Montana CIO, Metcalf came to know first hand the problems labor faces. Besides handling the council's cases, he also represented local unions in wage-hour and Wagner Act litigations.

IN THOSE DAYS, the Mine Workers were part of the CIO and one of his major campaigns before the legislature was for protective measures against silicosis, an occupational diesease of mining. Through the council, he also became familiar with the problems of other CIO internationals, including the Newspaper Guild and the Oil and Woodworkers unions.

Rejecting a commission, he entered the army after Pearl Harbor as an enlisted man and rose from the ranks to a commissioned tank destroyer officer. He participated in the Normandy invasion, the central France campaigns and the Battle of the Bulge.

A battle casualty, he came back to be one of the first allies in Germany, where he was assigned the task of establishing the first occupation court and police system.

RELEASED from duty in April 1946, he ran for the post of supreme court justice that fall and was elected with labor's support.

The opinions he wrote for the Montana court won him fame in judicial circles.

Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.), of the House Labor Committee, who has said one of his aims is to try to make the complicated Taft-Hartley law "clear and simpler," will find Metcalf an invaluable aide in such an effort. —M.P

Pennsylvania Councils Map Community, PAC Projects

The meeting, called by Reg. Dir. George Craig, was the first of a series planned in Pennsylvania to coordinate activities of CIO councils in that state.

McPeak, urging the delegates to pay special attention to political legislative and community affairs affecting labor, said:

"Participation in public life and action is not only beneficial, but it is the duty of every CIO council."

OTHER speakers besides McPeak and Craig, who also chaired the meeting, were Harry Boyer, president, Pennsylvania CIO Council; Charles Ferguson, of the Pennsylvania CIO Community Services Committee; Tilford Dudley, assistant director of National CIO-PAC; Al Zack, assistant publicity director for National CIO, and Mayor John Mullin of Clairton, Pa.

Future meetings, Craig said, would bring together delegates from the other CIO councils in Pennsylvania. There are 33 city CIO groups in that state.

$1 Million In Pension Boost Won At Ford

RETIRED Ford Motor Co. employes will be receive an additional $1 million in pensions payments under a revised pension agreement negotiated by the CIO Auto Workers, the union estimated last week.

The pact, which was signed last spring, raised maximum monthly payments from $125 to $137.50 effective June 1. Retroactive payments totalling $256,485 have been approved by the board administering the pension fund, according to Ken Bannon, director of the UAW-CIO National Ford Dept.

HE SAID that in the next year the revised schedule of benefits will bring another $741,600 to the 5000 retired workers affected. Pension payments to those who have been receiving checks from the fund will be increased $38,800 monthly. Another $23,000 will go to workers with fewer years of service credits who previously received only Social Security payments.

The UAW-CIO also obtained additional hospitalization and medical insurance benefits for retired Ford employes with more than 10 years of service under a revision of the Blue Cross-Blue Shield program.

Big Farm Operators Drive For Legal Okeh On Wetbacks

BIG FARM operators in California and the southwestern states are turning the heat on Uncle Sam, trying to get the Justice Dept. to put a stamp of legal approval on the thousands of illegal Mexican "wetback" laborers pouring across the U. S. border.

An estimated 1.3 million Mexican workers illegally crossed the border so far this year, and a record 105,000 were nabbed by the border patrol during August, according to Labor Press Associated.

THE CAMPAIGN for more use of low-wage migrant labor is taking two forms:

1. An out-in-the-open demand that the Justice Dept. gave "dual purpose" immigration identity cards to all illegal migrants, and that they be allowed to remain indefinitely in the U. S. so long as they are employed.

2. An attack by an American Farm Bureau Federation upon the legal entry of Mexican farm workers under a U. S.-Mexico treaty. Under this treaty, Mexican workers legally admitted are guaranteed better wages, housing and conditions than afforded to American farm workers.

They're Collecting Coming and Going

Cold-blooded farm labor contractors are collecting coming and going in the "trade" of smuggling wetback laborers into the U. S., according to California Atty. Gen. Edmund G. Brown.

He said the contractors charge each Mexican worker from $100 to $125 to smuggle him in, and then charge the farmers $25 a head.

Brown said the migrant problem in California "has grown into a grave social problem, involving murder, prostitution, robbery, and a gigantic illegal narcotic infiltration."

California Republican Reps. Wilson and Utt have urged Vice Pres. Nixon—a former California GOP congressman—to intercede with the Justice Dept. to give more leeway for the wetbacks. (The name "wetback" originated in Texas, for migrants who swam or waded the Rio Grande. It applies to the whole southern border.)

The Justice Dept. has shown some interest in enforcing immigration laws since Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell, on a recent vacation trip to the Southwest got his eyes opened on the wetback situation.

So now the big farm interests are claiming "labor shortages" and urging the Eisenhower Administration to soften up on enforcement. Actually, the last session of the GOP 83rd Congress drastically cut border patrol funds.

RECENETLY Utt and B. A. Harrigan agricultural commissioner from California's wealthy Imperial Valley (which adjoins the border), said Immigration Service agents should be concentrated along the frontier. They objected to any roundup of wetbacks on the farms.

The Farm Bureau's Mexican labor advisory committee, meantime, was meeting with the Justice Dept. and claiming that the present treaty program for legal importation of farm workers—which gives some consideration to fair wage and working standards—was a failure.

According to LPA, the border patrol has drastically stepped up its check for wetbacks. During August, the latest month for which figures are available, an all-time record of 105,529 illegal migrants were arrested. The figure for 1953 to date is 697,000, an increase of 67% over last year.

Since for every wetback caught, another sneaks in, LPA estimates that the wetback total to date for this year is a least 1.3 million.

THIS HUGE traffic not only holds down farm labor standards directly. It also harms unionized workers in the food processing industry—for example, the big Local 78, CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers Union, in California and Arizona.

Recently farm operators in the Imperial Valley have been using what LIU 78 calls "cheap foreign slave labor" and a new field packing system to handle lettuce crops, displacing hundreds of CIO packingshed workers from their jobs.

New U. S. Power Policy Perils Jobs, Oregon CIO Warned

That's what the Oregon State CIO Council convention, meeting in Klamath Falls, was told by Chairman Albert C. Ullman of the Idaho-Oregon Hells Canyon Association.

Ullman bitterly condemned the new GOP policy—which undercuts public power programs and favors private utilities—as "abdication to selfish monopolists."

"The people of the Pacific Northwest," he said, "should rise up in righteous wrath at this political and economic sell-out of the region.

Touching on the issue of the Hells Canyon high-level dam—which CIO supports — Ullman warned: "Give the Snake River to private monopoly and watch the high Snake Valley rates flow downstream to the lower Columbia."

Meantime, a prediction that cost of power to consumers would be higher as a result of the new power policy was voiced by Assistant Sec. of Interior Fred G. Aandahl. In a speech to the Missouri Basin Inter-Agency Committee at Fargo, N. D., Aandahl noted that the government can sell power cheaper than privately-owned utilities.

Super-Carrier Award For Bay State Asked

WITH SHIP building at its lowest ebb in two years, the CIO Shipbuilding Workers is campaigning to have the Navy allocate construction of a $209 million supercarrier to Bethlehem's Fore River, Mass., yard.

IUMSWA Pres. John J. Grogan warned Pres. Eisenhower that the industry's decline "has been felt by the skilled workmen who earn their daily bread in a craft dating back in American history more than three centuries."

"THE FORE River yard" he wrote, "is famous for its contribution of Navy design and development of aircraft carriers, and it is an ironic fact that today it is this construction yard which is without a single order for Navy work after two Navy destroyers and one fleet oiler leave its ways."

Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) also was joining in the campaign to have the supercarrier contract go to Fore River. His office said last week Kennedy told the Navy that the allocation of the contract to the yard would give employment to 5000 workers for three years.

MEANWHILE, IUMSWA scored gains for East and West Coast workers. At the Quigley Ship Yard, Inc., where the union recently won a five-to-one victory in a National Labor Relations Board election, a contract brought wage increases ranging from 7c to 60c an hour.

The new pact also provides eight holidays and four days' annual sick leave with pay, paid vacations of from one to three weeks based on length of service, a free $1000 life insurance policy, and Blue Cross and Blue Shield coverage with the firm paying 60% of the cost.

On the West Coast, Local 9 at Long Beach, Calif., won an employer payment of 7.5c an hour into the jointly administered health and welfare fund, 3c an hour general wage increase, and employer-furnished tools or payment in lieu thereof to mechanics at Bethlehem, Todd and Marine Solvent yards.

GOP Firing Of Housing Aide Rapped

SOME 50 labor, housing, business and education leaders last week urged Pres. Eisenhower to halt the firing of Dr. Frank S. Horne from his post with the Federal Housing & Home Finance Agency.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and George L-P Weaver, chairman and director respectively of the CIO Civil Rights Committee, were among those who protested the dismissal of Dr. Horne in a letter to the President.

The group charged that the sole reason for removing Dr. Horne from his non-political technical job was to pay a political debt to Joseph R. Ray, who is expected to succeed him.

Arma Strike Is Settled

THE TWO-MONTH strike of 4000 CIO Electrical Workers at the Arma Corp. plants at Nassau County and Brooklyn, N. Y., last week won reinstatement of 138 workers and a new, improved contract.

The two-year pact provides an across-the-board 9c hourly wage increase, incorporation of a 13c hourly cost-of-living increase in the basic wage structure, and raising the minimum wage by 20c to $1.42 an hour.

The independent Arma Engineers' Association, which respected the IUE picket lines won a 2.5% wage increase and the union shop.

The Little Red Cloud That Cried . . .

THE CUSTOMERS who patronized the state-owned haberdashery Arnold Mendes managed in Johvi, in Soviet-dominated Estonia, had one plaintive cry.

"Buttons, buttons who's got the buttons?" they demanded. Arnold didn't. And he couldn't get enough of them from the state-run factory to satisfy the demand. Being a good shopkeeper, the shortage grieved him.

So when he heard that political gramophone records were a drug on the market in Russia, he reacted with the typical ingenuity of one of his Yankee contemporaries. He made a trip to Leningrad and bought a lot of Stalin's recorded political speeches. They're a drug on the market now. Back he went to Johvi, melted them down and moulded them into buttons.

Everybody was happy. Business boomed so that Mendes went back to Leningrad for more records and hired more help to turn them into buttons.

Then the inevitable happened, according to the Estonian Communist newspaper Rahva Haal. An informer denounced him for "embezzlement and speculation." Now poor Arnold is in jail.

Labor's World—

ICFTU Protests U. S. Pact With Franco Harms West

STRONG OBJECTIONS and "feelings of deep repugnance" to the new U. S. military-economic agreement with Franco Spain were voiced last week by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Protesting the agreement, the ICFTU predicted it would "inflict serious moral and political damage on the comity of nations united in the defense of freedom and democracy."

Under the agreement, announced recently in Madrid and Washington, the U. S. has leased Spanish military bases and in return granted economic aid to the Franco dictatorship. Pres. Eisenhower has called it a "quid pro quo" arrangement.

"Any apparent strategic advantage" resulting from the agreement will be "far outweighed in the struggle against totalitarianism," the ICFTU charged, as the inevitable result of association "with a blood-stained dictator."

The agreement, it continued, could not be justified on an economic ground, asking this question: "Can the American taxpayer lightly contemplate the pouring of financial aid into the pockets of a corrupt dictatorship which recognizes no democratic right of control by its own people?"

Germany

Mass arrests and purges of workers in Soviet-occupied East Germany are continuing, according to reports from West Berlin.

More than 1800 workers are reported to have been arrested as "saboteurs and enemy agents" and paraded at show trials in factories in the Soviet Zone. They are charged with participation in the June 17 worker demonstrations against Communist speed-up orders, which recently were reinstated.

Commenting on the sweeping death and prison sentences already imposed on German workers, the ICFTU said "the ruthless persecution of thousands of workers for organizing the uprising and for taking part in it proves that the revolt was spontaneous, and that the workers themselves took matters into their own hands."

Italy

Led by two democratic union federations affiliated with the ICFTU, millions of Italian workers staged a 24-hour protest general strike in an effort to gain long-needed wage increases.

An estimated five to six million workers participated in the one-day factory shutdown, which was almost completely effective. Participating were unions of the CISL and the UIL, both ICFTU affiliates, as well as the Communist-led CIGL.

Afterwards, the Confederation of Italian Industrialists voiced a flat "no" to wage boosts. CISL Sec.-Gen. Giulio Pastore warned:

"We only ask to negotiate and to negotiate immediately. But if our good will and sense of responsibility should be mistaken for weakness, the fight will go on with greater determination than before."

What Happened To The Old School Tie?

Cricket, the playing fields of Eton and all that were dragged into the recent convention of the British Trade Union Congress.

Uncricket conduct should be put on the unfair labor practices list, protested one delegate, explaining:

"During the last test match (cricket) this chap goes out in the dinner hour and, sitting in the cafe, he gets to watching the match on television. Naturally, he got mixed up with it and forgot to come back on time.

"Well, he had a bit of difference with his boss and was sacked for 'misconduct.' What a charge to make against a man in connection with the traditional sport of the country.

"His boss could go to the test match every day but he wouldn't be accused of misconduct."

Georgia CIO Hears Plea For 'Brick-by-Brick' Organizing

By ED LASHMAN

"CIO WON'T stop until every southern worker is organized." That's what CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told cheering delegates and guests of the 14th annual Georgia CIO convention meeting in Savannah.

Recalling the early days of struggle in his own Auto Workers union, Reuther told the Georgians: "the great, strong unions of CIO didn't come into being overnight. These organizations were built brick by brick just as you are building CIO in the South."

Attacking the kind of economic thinking that leads to depression, Reuther said "our big problem is to match our purchasing power with our productive power."

"AMERICA NEEDS two and a half million homes a year to wipe out slums and a minimum of 345,000 school rooms, "Reuther said. He pointed out that the total spending in the U. S. last year for all forms of education was "less than the cost of World War II for one week."

To raise the social security benefits for every couple over 65 years old up to $200 a month for one year would cost less than the last war did for 10 days, Reuther said.

He called for increased political activity and said "politics is the housekeeping job of democracy. To get an icebox full of good food, you need a ballot box full of good votes."

AT A BANQUET held in Savannah's Hellenic Center some 300 Georgia CIO members heard Claude Pepper, former Democratic Senator from Florida, predict that "the South is moving into economic and political leadership of the nation."

Pointing up a chronological history of southern problems, Pepper said that from the time of Franklin Roosevelt's election to the presidency, "the South began to come into industrial and economic maturity."

The Georgians took action on a full slate of resolutions dealing with state and national legislation, chief among which were calls for increased social security benefits at the national level and increased employment security benefits at the state level.

Other convention speakers were Boyd Payton, director of southern organizing for the CIO Textile Workers, and Daniel Powell, Southern PAC Director.

W. H. Crawford, Director of Dist. 35 of the CIO Steelworkers, was re-elected president of the Georgia Council. Vice-presidents are W. A. Montague of the Auto Workers; R. E. Starnes, Steelworkers; W. M. Russell, Textile Workers; and J. M. Moore, Communications Workers. A. O. McKinney of the Packinghouse Workers was re-elected treasurer.

These Southern Cops Reversed Their Role

County police met CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther at the Savannah, Ga., airport. But it wasn't the usual reason southern police have had for meeting CIO officials.

Their job was to escort him into town, not out of it. CIO telephone workers had made arrangements so Reuther, who was slated to open the Georgia convention, wouldn't be held up in traffic.

'Give The United Way'— CIO Backs Chest Drives

GIVE THE united way, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said last week in pledging full CIO cooperation in helping local Community Chests reach their goals.

Reuther issued the statement as Pres. Eisenhower opened the drive aimed at raising $280 million in communities throughout the U. S.

In a letter to H. J. Heinz II, president of the Community Chests and Councils of America, Reuther said in part:

"THE 1953 campaigns of the Community Chests and Councils of America again bring into sharp focus the indispensable work of the nation's voluntary health and welfare agencies.

"It is in this knowledge that I am happy to add my personal and official endorsement of the 1953 united community campaigns. Again, as in the past, all CIO members will be urged to give their full cooperation in helping local Community Chests and other united drives to go "over the top" by substantial amounts.

"It is the desire of our membership to participate not only financially but also in terms of board and committee memberships, and in any other capacity in which we as citizens can strengthen the work of voluntary health and welfare agencies and the vital services they provide."

HST To Get '53 Hillman Service Award

FORMER President Harry S. Truman will receive the $1000 annual Award for Meritorious Public Service from the Sidney Hillman Foundation.

The presentation will be made at a dinner in his honor at the Hotel Statler in St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 8.

Truman is expected to make a major address on domestic affairs which will be broadcast over the ABC network at 10:35 p.m. EST. The speech will also be carried locally in St. Louis over station KMOX at 8:30 p.m.

THE Sidney Hillman Foundation was created by labor and industry to perpetuate the ideals of the late union leader in labor-management relations, race relations, social welfare and world peace. Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the foundation and Hillman's successor as president of ACWA, will preside at the ceremony.

Mayor Reuter Of Free Berlin Dies

CIO JOINED the free labor world last week in mourning the sudden death of Mayor Ernst Reuter of free Berlin.

Reuter, who was 64, died of a heart attack after a brief case of bronchitis.

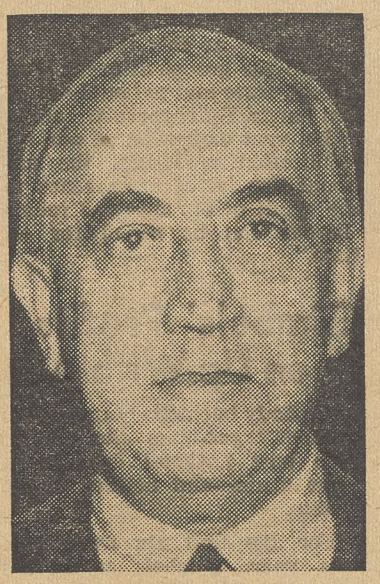
The West Berlin mayor, long a bitter foe of the Communists, was a vigorous leader for European unity, freedom and social progress.

LAST SPRING Reuter came to the U. S. to address the international convention of the CIO Auto Workers. And the UAW-CIO delegates voted a $5000 contribution to help provide relief for Soviet Zone refugees who fled to West Berlin.

A statement by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said:

"The untimely death of Ernst Reuter has brought deep mourning to the entire free world.

"During these perilous postwar years, he has symbolized by his strong, courageous and democratic leadership the determination of the German people to rewin their place of high respect in the world community of nations.



MAYOR ERNST REUTER

"In his outpost of freedom, located behind the Iron Curtain itself, he has kept alive against overwhelming odds the fire of liberty and human dignity as a torch of eternal hope for his unfortunate compatriots under the Communist yoke.

"THE CONTRAST between the conditions he helped to realize in free Berlin and those on the other side of the Iron Curtain is the best monument I can think of to this man whose life has meant so much to all of the people of the democratic world and to those who long to join it."

Reuther also sent a personal message of condolences to Mayor Reuter's widow.

Victor G. Reuther, assistant to the CIO president, was to attend services for Mayor Reuter in Berlin last Saturday.

CIO-CSC Names Advisory Unit Of Health, Welfare Leaders

THE 18,000-member army of CIO community services volunteers is going to get some expert advice, from a score of the nation's leaders in health and welfare fields.

Formation of a CIO Community Services Health & Welfare Advisory Committee was announced by CIO-CSC Chairman Joseph A. Beirne. He also is president of the Communications Workers and a CIO vice president.

Beirne said the advisory group will enable CSC to develop a closer working relationship with leaders in the social work profession.

"The assistance of such a committee," he said, "could easily lead to more effective action on behalf of many CSC programs that would be of inestimable value to millions of Americans."

BEIRNE also reported on the growth of community services in CIO councils and local unions as "an action program, as a service program, and as a bread-and-butter program."

He estimated there are now some 18,000 CIO union counsellors in about 100 communities. Union counselling classes are under way continuously. And there are some 15,000 CIO union men and women serving on boards and committees of thousands of union agencies.

Two current CSC goals are to aid the development of federated, united fund drives instead of competeting local charitable campaigns and to gain greater labor and consumer representation on Blue Cross hospital insurance boards.

Dr. R. M. Atwater, executive secretary of the American Public Health Association; C. W. Blackburn, general director of the Family Service Association of America; Ralph Blanchard, executive director of the Community Chests and Councils of America; R. E. Bondy, director of the National Social Welfare Assembly; Dr. Thomas D. Dublin, executive director of the National Health Council; Lester B. Granger, executive director of the National Urban League; Kenneth D. Johnson, dean of the Columbia Univ. School of Social Work; and

Rev. J. J. Lennon, assistant secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Charities; H. L. Lurie, executive director of the Council of Jewish Federations & Welfare Funds; W. F. Maxwell, consultant to the Community Chests Councils; W. F. Meyer, Jr., national industrial program secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association; and

Potofsky Named To Brandeis Post

Reuther Calls Neglect Of Disabled National Scandal

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week called for ending "the national scandal of indifference to the needs of our disabled fellow workers."

He said the needs of the handicapped could be met by "cooperative effort and a vast expansion of our rehabilitation resources."

His plea for action was contained in a statement issued on the eve of the observance of National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week this week.

The week was started with a kick-off dinner Oct. 3 at Washington sponsored by the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped. CIO's views were to be presented by Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe.

SEN. KILGORE (D. W. Va.), Senate sponsor of the week, was the featured speaker. Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers was a member of the arrangements committee.

"In less than the time it takes to read this statement, a member of the CIO—in a steel or textile mill, in a rubber or auto plant, in an oil refinery or public utility—will suffer a disabling work injury, perhaps a permanent one," Reuther said.

He said that in 1952 more than two million Americans were injured while at work.

"Techniques of physical and vocational rehabilitation," Reuther continued, "are already far advanced and improve each day. The fact that thousands of the so-called handicapped have proved to be qualified workers clearly shows what rehabilitation and community cooperation in job placement can achieve.

"BUT WE have barely scratched the surface of the great human reservoir of disabled who are asking America for a chance. The ninth annual observance of National Employ the Handicapped Week should help dramatize to the entire nation the great responsibility which we have not yet met.

"Each day of every week of every year, each one of us must be working at this task. Public and private groups at every level —local, state and national—must join hands. By cooperative effort and a vast expansion of our rehabilitation resources, the national scandal of indifference to the needs of our disabled fellow citizens can be ended for all time."

Local Rent Unit Hit By CIO Aide

Failure of local rent advisory groups to prevent skyrocketing rents since federal ceilings were killed was charged by Al Jordan, CIO member of the Cincinnati Fair Rent Committee, in resigning from the group.

Jordan, a CIO Steelworkers staff representative and Cincinnati CIO Council board member, said the rent unit is "in the hands of the real estate group and has failed to block many cases of excessive rent boosts."

Gimbels' Profits Keep Up With Ads

"Nobody but nobody undersells Gimbels," proclaim the ads of the big national department store chain—and neither do its profits.

For the first six months of this year, Gimbels upped its sales by only .5% but earnings leaped 170%, according to Labor Press Associated. For a 12-month period, sales actually dropped but profits climbed 52% after taxes.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

THIS DEPARTMENT'S recent report on high markups by some credit jewelers, and the steep list prices on many watches compared to their small wholesale cost, has drawn complaints from jewelers, trade associations and manufacturers.

Some of the jewelers argue it is not fair to pick on them alone, because the installment furniture stores also charge high markups. They also point out that legitimate jewelers do not exact the full list price on goods carrying manufacturers' exaggerated price tags, and that the high cost of selling on credit must be considered. For example, H. G. Davis, a jeweler in Berea, O., writes:

"If you have any sense of fair play I would appreciate you publishing the other side. There is no question that certain of us jewelers are gougers, but your treatise was only about 10% truth . . . You picked up a chiseler's sheet and used it to your advantage. The legitimate jeweler does not buy from these outfits. Nor does he mark up goods as you have pointed out. In our store, for example, the only 100% markup item is costume jewelry and we are stuck with half of it at the end of the season. Legitimate watches such as Hamilton usually carry a 40% discount to us. You also forgot to point out that the watch prices include the tax . . . You neglected to mention that electric clocks, fountain pens, religious articles and a host of other items are all 40% off to us . . ."

Meat Prices Under Study

The Agriculture Dept. last week began investigating the meat "price spread"—the gap between declining cattle prices received by stockmen and continuing high retail meat prices for housewives.

The inquiry was ordered by Sec. Ezra Taft Benson and will be carried out by Agriculture Dept. economists.

ANSWER: Our article specifically warned that it is the credit jewelers and canvassers specializing in installment sales, not the legitimate jewelers, who charge the full price for watches and jewelry that carry exaggerated list prices. The American National Retail Jewelers Assn. itself has criticized the "practice of certain suppliers of pre-ticketing articles with grossly exaggerated retail prices."

Undoubtedly it costs a retailer more to sell on time than for cash. This is true in the furniture business too, where stores specializing in installments frequently charge 20% more on the average than stores that sell primarily for cash but arrange time payments when desired.

There are two valuable shopping lessons we can all learn from this controversy over jewelry prices:

1. List prices or pre-printed price tags on merchandise mean very little, not only on many brands of watches and jewelry, but on many other goods. The mattress trade, for example, is notorious for using exaggerated "list prices." The only way to make sure of fair value is to compare prices at several stores on the same item.

2. Be especially wary of stores that stress easy credit rather than the price of the merchandise itself.

The manager of a credit clothing store once explained to me how he was able to sell cheap clothing at high prices. The chain for which he worked would take dresses that cost $10 at wholesale and mark them up to $20. Even the fanciest Fifth Ave. or Wilshire Blvd. stores would charge only about $20 for such a dress, while a typical department store would charge about $17, a neighborhood specialty shop about $16 and a cash-and-carry chain store about $15.

But the credit store was able to get away with charging $20 because it permitted the customer to pay only $1 a week. So the customer didn't think of it as a $20 dress, but a "dollar-a-week-dress" which of course sounds like very little.

Since wage-earners are led into paying such steep markups for merchandise, naturally unions tend to think about getting discounts for their members to protect the buying power of their wages.

CIO Volunteers Check Slums

IN THE WAKE of a Chicago tenement fire which killed 18 persons, CIO unionists have begun their own investigation of fire, health and safety rules on the South Side of the nation's second city.

He said some 100 volunteers have offered to check violations in their own apartment buildings and those of their neighbors. Complaints from tenants will be taken to the PAC district office and relayed to City Hall housing authorities.

A coroner's jury looked into the cause of the holocaust and brought out laxity in city building inspections and in Municipal Court handling of violations of city building ordinances.

The tenement fire was still another reminder of the action of the GOP 83rd Congress in killing off almost all funds for construction of low-rent public housing and slum clearance programs.

Mayor Kennelly of Chicago said the area of the tenement fire "was condemned but clearance of the slums was blocked by the federal government."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

HERE, IN MONTREAL, one of the oldest cties in North America, one of the youngest unions in CIO—the Electrical Workers—has had a vigorous and hard-hitting convention.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett tells me that more than 700 delegates were in attendance. Yet it was only four years ago that the heavy burden of organization was placed on IUE Pres. Jim Carey and the other leaders of this youthful group. Four years ago, our late CIO Pres. Philip Murray chartered IUE and gave them the tremendous responsibility of breaking the grip of the Communist-dominated UE. They were equally charged with the job of organizing and bettering the living standards of tens of thousands of workers in the nation's electrical industry.

Within those four year, IUE has brought the benefits of trade unionism to 400,000 workers. As I addressed the assembled delegates, I could not help but be deeply impressed by the sense of dedication which they brought with them to their convention. They had truly set an organizational pace which other CIO unions must applaud. And beyond mere strength in numbers, they have achieved standards in wages and working conditions that should make them genuinely proud of their efforts.

IT SEEMS TO ME that the growth and maturity which has been achieved by IUE shows once again the basic truth that is in the trade union message. Certainly, no one gave any help to IUE outside the union ranks. In spite of the fact IUE was dedicated to freeing hundreds of thousands of workers from the grip of a bunch of Communists, employers fought just as bitterly, as they have always done.

The leadership of IUE took a positive stand. They put their best efforts into winning decent conditions and standards for their membership, and then they took their true victories before the workers. They organized on the basis of their record, and the record was a good one.

In the past year, IUE has seen workers in 72 different NLRB elections decide to organize unions within its international structure. In many other cases, workers have decided, without going through the NLRB process, to affiliate with IUE.

But IUE is not sitting back and resting. Like all of CIO, their leadership and their membership have pledged themselves to still greater organizational efforts.

IUE'S CONVENTION is a gathering of youth, well salted with experienced trade unionists. Just as I found in traveling to the state council conventions, we of CIO have no fear of a lack of leadership developing out of the rank-and-file. The young men and women, from the plants and mills and factories, are making their way towards the responsibilities of leadership. The entire nation, the millions of workers who are still denied the benefits of trade unionism, can take heart from this fact.

I must say that IUE's convention was one of the most stirring I have ever attended. Some professional mourners speak reverently of the past achievements of CIO, as though they were in another age. Perhaps, in a way, they are right. Perhaps we are entering a new age. But it's also possible that we're beginning to see the new ways in which workers can roll the union on.

Better Pension Deal And 10% Pay Hike Asked By Shoe Union

SOME 2000 CIO Shoe Workers will stress improved pensions and a 10% wage increase as their major demands in negotiations for a new contract with Florsheim Shoe Co., Chicago.

The present contract expires Oct. 31. The demands, unanimously approved by the USWA-CIO members employed at the Chicago plant, follow closely the union's aims in negotiations with the International Shoe Co. at St. Louis.

USWA-CIO has extended the present contract with Intl. Shoe which expired Sept. 30, until Oct. 31. During the opening negotiations the firm made no monetary offer, and negotiations will be resumed Oct. 19. USWA-CIO represents the workers at 28 of the company's plants.

AFL Ratifies No-Raid Pact

CIO ratification of the agreement will come before the 15th CIO convention, to open Nov. 16 in Cleveland.

The agreement was drafted after the CIO and AFL early this year renewed negotiations toward labor unity, and the no-raid pact has been hailed as a "first step" toward amalgamation.

The AFL also approved a plan to end jurisdictional disputes with the federation, similar in principle to the CIO jurisdictional arbitration program set up two years ago.

The CIO-AFL no-raid agreement, subject to ratification by the CIO convention, would go into effect on Jan. 1 and run for one year. It would take effect in particular industries only as it was ratified by unions in the same field or jurisdiction.

CIO RUBBER Workers last week obtained a settlement with the last of the Big Four rubber companies when it signed an agreement with U. S. Rubber covering 35,000 employes in 19 plants.

URW-CIO last April obtained a revision of its five-year health agreement with U. S. Rubber, the biggest employer in the industry. With the agreement reached last week, it obtained a total package of 12c an hour, similar to the settlement reached with the other of the Big Four, Firestone, Goodrich and Goodyear.

The U. S. Rubber agreement, which was obtained under a wage re-opener, gives a 5c hourly across-the-board wage increase, a boost of pension minimums for $100 to $125 monthly to all who have retired since July 1, 1950, and a hike of the company-paid life insurance from $2000 to $3000.

Under the April agreement, which was the first of the revisions of the health agreements secured from the Big Four, the following benefits were obtained for workers and their dependents.

Hospitalization of 120 days, payment of all hospital charges, $3 a day for doctor's visit each day, $250 surgical fees and out-patient X-ray service for diagnostic purposes. The company bears the full cost.

At that time URW-CIO also won two weeks' vacation after three years of service and correction of some wage inequities.

In addition to settlements with all of the Big Four, agreements have been reached with a half-dozen of the big independent rubber companies. URW has yet to obtain settlements with 200 other smaller firms in the industry.

Collis Is Elected Guild President

Joseph F. Collis, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., last week was elected president of the CIO Newspaper Guild in a closely decided membership referendum. The final count was Collis, 7498; Harry Martin, incumbent, 7284.

UFWA Strikes Virginia Plant

MORE THAN 1000 members of the CIO Furniture Co., last week struck the American Furniture Co., Martinsville, Va., in an effort to get a first contract with the firm.

UFWA-CIO late in August won a National Labor Relations Board election at the plant—one of the biggest in the industry—by a vote of 719 to 255 for no union. Since then the firm has said "no" to the requests of the negotiating committee.

Union demands include a 6% increase in wages, which now average 99c an hour, and the checkoff.

By MILTON PLUMB

IF MASS unemployment becomes a serious U. S. problem in coming months, jobless workers are going to have a tougher time collecting their unemployment insurance benefits.

Throughout the nation—and particularly in big industrial states—public employment offices are being closed down. Approximately 200 have been shut to date.

ALMOST all states have already had to extend the waiting period for initial jobless benefit checks.

Layoffs running in many cases to hundreds of employes have been carried out in the staffs of all state employment offices. In the 48 state systems, some 2000 have already been fired and another 1000 are scheduled to go.

It's all the result of the deep slashes in Labor Dept. funds voted by the Republican 83rd Congress last session. The cut in personnel of employment offices averages 10% across the nation.

And it sets the stage—if the present layoff trend in auto, farm implement, metal-working and other industries should grow into a serious jobless crisis—for a nation-wide snafu on unemployment benefits.

AS THE OHIO CIO Council commented: "The whole process will get snarled up; checks will creep out to needy unemployed workers at a snail's pace; and everybody will be shouting bloody murder."

Unemployment insurance is on a state-by-state basis, but the federal government contributes funds to run the state systems, as distinct from actual payment of benefits.

Last session, Congress appropriated $192 million for operation of state unemployment insurance offices—$26 million below former Pres. Truman's estimate and $21 million less than Pres. Eisenhower's budget recommendation.

NEW JERSEY: The N. J. State Division of Employment Security has laid off 460 employes in the last month and may lay off 200 more. Ten local offices have been closed.

Harold G. Hoffman, state ES director, said that real "inconveniences" to job seekers and claimants will result. He pointed out that in some areas, the closing of offices means that unemployed now have to spend $1.16 just for round-trip bus transportation to the nearest center, where they must report regularly to stay eligible for payments.

Pres. Carl Holderman of the State CIO Council blamed the "critical situation" on the "irresponsible budget-slashing policies of the Republican-controlled 83rd Congress."

NEW YORK: Empire State's allotment of federal funds is $3.4 million less than last year. This means the loss of several hundred employes and the closing of many local offices, including even one in the highly industrialized Rochester area.

At its convention 10 days ago, the State CIO Council adopted a resolution condemning these and other reductions in Labor Dept. appropriations.

"The ruthless cuts imposed on the Labor Dept. will be paid for by the people of the nation and by communities many times over in social and economic costs," the resolution declared.

OHIO: The Bureau of Unemployment Compensation received $1.3 million less than even its "economy-minded" members thought necessary to run Ohio's program this year. Some 200 members of its staff have been laid off and 15 offices are slated to be closed.

Although the state at present has a relatively small unemployment load, the BUC is already snowed under with paper work. Two years ago, at the request of General Motors and others, the Ohio Legislature passed a law requiring the commission to send employers a constant running account of unemployed workers' activities.

MICHIGAN: Although Gov. G. Mennen Williams' (D.) full employment committee has just reported that Michigan's jobless now number 103,000 persons, ESC director Max Horton said that he's forced by the lack of funds to extend the waiting period between checks from the former one week to twice that time.

Meanwhile, the state central committee of Michigan Democrats took note of the job situation by pointing out that defense layoffs in Michigan have reduced purchasing power by $7 million a week. It pledged itself to work for unemployment compensation equal to 50% of wages lost through joblessness.

RHODE ISLAND: Some 50 workers have been laid off, although the state's employment offices are among the most overworked in the country due to many shutdowns throughout the New England area.

NORTH CAROLINA: Henry E. Kendall, chairman of the N. C. Employment Security Commission, said that the congressional cut requires his state to reduce expenses of the program by $418,000 this year. That means, he explained, the loss of over 100 employes and "reduction in all employment service activities."

Job Trend Shifting

The Bureau of Labor Statistics last week reported that non-farm employment in factories, shops and offices reached a record 49.4 million in August, but added these signs of a developing downturn in the employment picture:

- The usual end-of-summer seasonal gain in factory employment, after vacation shutdowns end, was less than usual—200,000 as compared with 740,000 a year ago.
- For the first time since 1945, non-farm employment now is no higher than in June. And area labor supply is running ahead of the demand.
- The usual seasonal increase in working hours and earnings also failed to develop. The mid-August figures were 40.5 hours and $1.77 an hour. The straight-time pay average also is stable.

CIO Aide Urges Hike In Jobless Benefits

STATE OFFICIALS who administer unemployment compensation were told last week they should try to realize what happens to unemployed workers forced to live on present benefits instead of fighting all federal efforts to improve them.

As members of the Interstate Conference of State Employment Security Agencies met at taxpayers' expense in plush Wentworth-by-the-Sea, Leonard Lesser, legal consultant to the CIO Auto Workers' Social Security Dept., reminded them of their responsibilities to the people picking up the tab for their expense accounts at the $15-a-day New Hampshire resort.

RECALLING the concern expressed by CIO spokesmen a year ago that the conference is "employer-oriented," Lesser said that although its leaders had since met with organized labor "no attempt was made to develop a program of action which would remove these criticisms."

"There has been no attempt," he added, "to secure labor's views or even to discuss mutual problems before action is taken on specific issues."

Lesser also pointed to recent "intemperate" testimony by Georgia State Administrator Marion Williamson as the representative of the Interstate Conference before the House Ways and Means Committee. He said these attacks on "all opponents of the Mason and Mills bills do little to engender confidence in the impartiality and fair-mindedness of the Conference."

Such actions, he declared, do not help to remove charges that the ICSESA is "a tool of reactionary and special-interest groups." AFL Pres. George Meany used those words last week in declining to participate in the conference.

ASKED to speak on the adequacy of present benefits, Lesser remarked that his topic would be "more descriptive" if stated as "Benefit Inadequacy."

"In no area can benefits be considered adequate for the great mass of workers covered by state unemployment compensation laws," he said. "Labor believes that for unemployment compensation to serve its function, it must, at the very least, provide benefits at a level which permits a worker and his family to maintain a reasonable and decent standard of living."

Jobless Pay Under Minimum Budget

Employment security officials had these figures pointed out to them last week to show what labor means when it says unemployment benefit payments are inadequate:

In October 1951, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said, $72.17 was needed weekly to maintain an average Detroit worker's family at a minimum level. At that time a minimum of $41 was required for food and housing alone.

Prices since have risen considerably, but the latter figure exceeds by nearly $10 the maximum benefit now payable in Michigan to a worker with two dependent children. And Michigan has the third highest average benefits in the country!

UPWA Gains 5c Pay Boost, Medical Plan

A PATTERN-setting agreement with Armour & Co. for a 5c hourly wage increase and a company-paid medical plan was reached by the CIO Packinghouse Workers and the AFL Amalgamated Meat Cutters & Butchers last week.

The settlement came after night-long joint negotiations with leaders of the two unions. The agreement calls for a straight 5c hourly across-the-board pay raise for 35,000 workers in Armour plants across the country.

Armour will also pay the full cost of a program providing employes and their dependents with hospitalization, medical and surgical benefits.

UNION SPOKESMEN estimated the money value of the medical plan at 4.5c an hour per worker.

A series of protest walkouts by union members in various cities had preceded the successful night-long negotiating session.

The agreement is expected to set the pattern for new contracts with the other three big packing companies, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson.

Contract negotiations began May 11 with Swift & Co. and July 1 with the other three members of the Big Four. Reluctance of the companies to come through with an acceptable offer on wages and fringe benefits had brought a strike hint.

A Mink Coat In Every Deep-Freeze

T. M. McCORMICK

WANT TO KNOW the cost of the GOP "give-away" of the coastal oil lands and other national resources?

It's a trillion dollars, estimates T. M. McCormick, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Oil Workers. And here's what it would buy:

"With one trillion dollars they could buy a $5000 mink coat for every woman over 21 years and a deep-freeze to keep it in and still have enough money left over to pay off the entire national debt."

Consequently, McCormick told the OWIU convention in Denver, the "mink coat and deep freeze" scandals of the Democrats were small potatoes compared with Republican give-aways of U. S. public resources to big business.

What It Takes —At Times

A noon-hour demonstration by thousands of CIO Packinghouse Workers at Swift's plant in Chicago's stockyards—paralleled by similar protest rallies in other major packing centers—was helping to bring the Big Four meat firms to terms on new wages and contract gains for the UPWA and the AFL Butchers. Last week the 9.5c package first reached at Armour's was extended to the Swift chain, where the CIO union represents some 19,000 workers in 27 plants. Terms include a 5c wage increase and company-paid hospital, surgical and medical benefits for workers and their families which will cost the employer 4.5c an hour for each employe. Cudahy earlier had agreed to abide by the initial settlements.

UAW Sets National Rally On Unemployment Peril

THE CIO Auto Workers last week announced the union will hold a national conference in Washington on Dec. 6-7 on the growing threat of unemployment.

UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey revealed plans for the conference in a speech at Brookfield, Ill., in which he charged the business-controlled Eisenhower Administration with indifference to the problems of the jobless.

Announcement of the conference followed a series of Bureau of Labor Statistics reports of signs of decreased employment ahead. In August factory hiring dropped 25% below the past World War II average.

The U. S. News & World Report last week predicted that the average unemployment figure for the first of 1954 will be 3.6 million, an increase of two million from the present number.

In his speech at a UAW local meeting in Brookfield, Mazey pointed out that some people think it might be a good thing to have five to 5.5 million unemployed.

"IT IS a crime to have unemployment when there are so many needs to be filled," he said. "If we took an inventory on the basic needs of the American people, it would give us work for 25 to 30 years."

Mazey called for greater political activity to change the picture in Washington, where, he said, there will be no democratic planning for needs "as long as we have an Administration that plans for profits."

The U. S. News & World Report said: "Factory jobs are expected to show the greatest decline in coming months. They may average 16.5 million for the first half of next year, compared with about 17.1 million now. This would account for nearly half of the probable job shrinkage.

"Hardest hit among factory workers will be those making durable goods such as steel, autos, machinery and weapons. Their output is slowing down already.

"The soft-goods industries, making such things as textiles, clothing, foods and paper, also are expected to employ fewer people next year."

Declining unemployment also was forecast by U. S. News & World Report in mining, construction, transportation, utilities, and wholesale and retail merchandising.

The magazine also reported greater unemployment compensation claims. New claims for 23,405 jobless were reported in Pennsylvania in the Sept. 12 week, compared with 13,144 a year ago.

MICHIGAN, where the auto industry is centered, "had almost half again as many claims as last year in the Sept. 12 week," said the magazine.

Slowdowns in farm machinery and metal fabricating boosted claims in Tennessee, and layoffs in textiles, shoes and garments increased the number of claimants in New England and some of the Southeastern seaboard states. The number of jobless compared to a year ago rose in some farm states, including Vermont, Minnesota and Kansas.

The UAW-CIO held a similar conference in January 1952 in Washington to call attention to unemployment resulting from conversion of peacetime operations to defense production.

IUE Gains 10c Boost In First Dumont Pact

THE CIO Electrical Workers have won a first contract with the Dumont television chain boosting the wages of 3000 employes by 10c an hour. The agreement covers five plants in New Jersey.

IUE-CIO also obtained back pay of approximately $35 for every worker under the pact with the firm, which resisted organization for a dozen years. The union won a National Labor Relations Board election last February and since has been negotiating with the firm.

THE agreement also provides plant wide seniority, plant wide transfer procedure, an increase of $500 in insurance benefits, three days off with pay during death in the worker's family, an overtime provision, grievance and arbitration machinery, and the union shop.

In an agreement with the Federal Television & Radio Corp., Nutley, N. J., IUE-CIO obtain several benefits for 4300 workers. These improvements include wage increases of 4c to 10c an hour, three weeks vacation after 10 years, three days off with pay for death in the family, increased insurance benefits, Blue Cross and Blue Shield coverage.

A three-month strike won increases of 13c to 37c an hour for 106 employes of the Maintenance Elevator Co., New York City. More than half of the workers got an increase of 25c or higher. Other contract features include two weeks' vacation after two years and automatic increases.

Guild Wins Strike At Seattle Times

More than 200 Guildsmen went on strike last July 16. All AFL craft unions at the plant respected the picket line, which speeded the Guild victory. The Guild also won an increase in maximum severance pay from 40 to 56 weeks.

Ore Boat Drive Gains As USA-CIO Signs Inland Pact

SIGNING of a contract covering Inland Steel Co.'s Great Lakes fleet is expected to speed the CIO Steelworkers' campaign to organize lake ore boat seamen.

The Inland contract provides increases of 8.5c to 13.5c an hour. Other benefits are 10 paid holidays, vacations up to three weeks for those with 15 years' service or more, a modified union shop, seniority protection and a grievance system.

Grievances will be handled by a chairman and two delegates on each ship under the contract which was negotiated for the union by a committee headed by Joseph Molony, director of USA-CIO Dist. 4. He also is chairman of the Lakes Seamen Organizing drive.

About 130 seamen, an average of 26 to a crew, are covered by the agreement. The Inland fleet seamen chose the USA-CIO to represent them in a National Labor Relations Board election last fall.

Negotiations are under way for a contract covering seamen of ships operated by the International Harvester Co., who elected the USA-CIO as their bargaining agent in a NLRB election last fall.

Mazey Backs Air Force Officer, Under Fire For His Family

EMIL MAZEY, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Auto Workers, has come to the defense of Lt. Milo J. Radulovich—the Air Force officer who is under fire because of his family.

As director of the UAW-CIO Veterans Dept., Mazey urged the Air Force to withdraw the proceedings now under way to cancel Radulovich's commission.

In a protest to Air Force Sec. Harold E. Talbott, Mazey pointed out that "the Air Force admits there is no question as to the loyalty of Lt. Radulovich but bases its action against him on the sole grounds that a reasonable doubt exists that he is a good security risk because he is the son of a man who rightfully thought that under the Constitution of the United States a citizen has the right to read papers and books with which he disagreed, as well as those with which he agreed, and that his sister has expressed her 'right of assembly.'"

RADULOVICH, a member of the Air Force Reserve, is currently a student at the Univ. of Michigan at Ann Arbor, a husband and the father of two children.

He was asked to resign his commission because his father was suspected of reading Communist newspapers published in his native Croatian tongue, and because his sister has allegedly participated in picket lines sponsored by allegedly Communist or Communist-front organizations.

In hearings conducted by the Air Force at Radulovich's request, he was denied the right of being confronted by his accusers and the press and public were excluded. Mazey charged that the hearing was a "star chamber" proceeding.

Vandercook Now On Voice Of America

CIO's Commentator John W. Vandercook, whose nightly broadcasts are aired over the ABC network, will soon have an international audience as well.

The U. S. Information Agency has requested and been granted the right to record and rebroadcast portions of the Vandercook scripts on Voice of America programs beamed abroad.

There will be no commercials on the broadcasts, but listeners all over the world will benefit from CIO's public service in sponsoring the Vandercook commentary.

Joint Rally Planned By Shoe Unions

A REPORT on negotiations with the International Shoe Co. will be given at a meeting of local leaders of the CIO Shoe Workers and the AFL Boot and Shoe Workers at a meeting at the Mark Twain Hotel, St. Louis, on Oct. 18.

Leaders from 51 locals of both unions at International Shoe plants throughout the U. S. will be present. Speakers will include USWA Pres. Russell Taylor; David Wilson and George Fecteau, USWA national directors for Missouri, Illinois and Arkansas, and for New Hampshire, respectively; John J. Mara and Ben Berk, president and regional director, respectively, of the AFL union.

USWA REPRESENTS workers at 28 of the firm's plants, and the AFL union speaks for employes at 18 other International Shoe plants. The demands of the two unions are almost uniform. USWA demands include a 15c hourly wage boost, increase of paid holidays from six to seven and raising the minimum wage from 75c to 90c an hour.

THE CIO Textile Workers last week renewed their long fight for a higher minimum wage for woolen and worsted workers employed on work done under government contracts.

The Walsh-Healey Act provides that the secretary of labor may set minimum wages for such work.

TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka wrote Acting Labor Sec. Lloyd Mashburn that it was "scandalous" that no action had been taken to increase the $1.05 hourly minimum.

CHUPKA recalled the TWUA had asked in November 1951 that the Walsh-Healey figure be raised to $1.265 an hour plus cost-of-living escalator. The late Labor Sec. Maurice J. Tobin set a compromise figure of $1.20, but his action was set aside by his successor, Martin P. Durkin, and new hearings were held last April. There has been no further action.

Chupka pointed out that the union had submitted evidence showing that 115,762 out of the 130,000 workers in the industry were employed in mills where $1.265 or more is the minimum wage.

"The substandard mills are threatening the lives of a majority of mills which are paying the standard union scale," he wrote. "Thus the purpose of the Walsh-Healey Act is being flouted by the secretary of labor's failure to act."

N. American Strike Voted

STRIKE authorization was voted overwhelmingly last week by CIO Auto Workers at the Columbus, O., and the Los Angeles, Calif., plants of North American Aviation, Inc. Any strike would involve 23,000 workers.

The strike vote followed a month's negotiations at the firm's main plant at Los Angeles during which the company made no offer. The present contract expires Oct. 22.

HST Urges 'Pro-Prosperity Program'

A STIRRING call for a "pro-prosperity program" to build a stronger America with ever higher living standards was sounded by former Pres. Harry S. Truman last week in a ringing challenge to the country's labor and liberal forces.

"We must continually generate new ideas to meet new problems," he warned in a speech at a dinner in St. Louis at which he accepted the $1000 annual award for meritorious public service of the Sidney Hillman Foundation.

"THE NEW IDEAS of one generation have never been enough for the tasks of the next generation.

"The New Freedom ideas of Woodrow Wilson were inadequate to meet the problems which confronted Franklin Roosevelt when he became president. The New Deal of Franklin Roosevelt did not meet all the problems which faced me when I was president.

"And the specific programs and policies of the Fair Deal will not be adequate to meet the problems of the future.

"There is a word of warning in this for the liberal and progressive forces in America. Those of us who believe in the limitless future of the American way of life cannot be content simply to defend the good things of the past.

"Twenty years ago, the goal of stopping a depression may have been sufficient. But it is not sufficient today. What we need now is far more than an anti-depression program.

"We need a pro-prosperity program.

"We must now strive for a continuously stable and a fully prosperous economy. We must provide more jobs each year as our population grows, and higher standards of living each year as our productivity increases."

GUESTS of honor in addition to the former President were Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.); John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president, and Mrs. Bessie Hillman, widow of the founder of the CIO Clothing Workers. ACMA-CIO established the foundation in cooperation with the men's clothing industry.

One of the speakers was Meyer Kerstenbaum, head of Hart, Schaffner & Marx. A member of the foundation's industry advisory board, he hailed the group on its selection of Truman for the award. He described himself as an independent Republican who does not often find a Republican to vote for.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, unable to attend because of business in Washington, sent a wire voicing his "respect, admiration and affection for the former President."

The former President called for a set of programs and policies geared to the 1950s—not to the 1930s or 1920s. He reminded liberals and progressives that "some of our own thinking may be out of date."

He warned that the "Old Guard of reactionaries, that never dies and never surrenders," is trying to overturn recent gains.

"We should resist their efforts with all our might," he declared, "because our country is today too strong, too full of opportunity and hope, to let it be ruined by a set of dismal blockheads who want to return to the days of McKinley."

A greater danger than the reactionary, Truman said, is "the one who wants to stand still."

"We live in a fast moving world today," he explained, "and if we try to stand still we shall only fall farther and farther behind.

"WE NOW hear that the government stands ready to use all its powers to counteract a depression, if our economy should begin to roll rapidly down hill. This represents a lot of progress, measured against 1929, when the government recognized no responsibility or ability to deal with a depression even after it has occurred.

"But the idea of trying to stop a depression after it gains headway is not good enough for us today. The government should be striving with all its might not only to maintain every bit of the prosperity we now have, but also to help us achieve more prosperity year by year."

The former President recalled that he was ridiculed when, in 1949, he predicted the U. S.

Army Manpower Chief Is Labor Dept. Head

A MILITARY MANPOWER expert and former management personnel executive was named by Pres. Eisenhower late last week as head of the Labor Dept. He is James P. Mitchell, who was serving as assistant Army secretary for manpower.

The new Labor secretary succeeds Martin P. Durkin, who quit the cabinet a month ago with denunciation of the Republican Administration for reneging on promised, limited amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act.

ALONG with announcing the Mitchell appointment, the President also announced the resignation of Lloyd P. Mashburn as Undersecretary of Labor. Mashburn, a former California AFL official, had served as acting head of the Labor Dept. since Durkin quit the cabinet to resume the presidency of the AFL plumbers.

Commenting on the cabinet appointment, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said:

"Mr. Mitchell enjoys a good reputation among the labor people who have dealt with him across the bargaining table and who have worked with him on labor-management and related problems.

"THE CIO will extend to Mitchell every cooperation in his efforts to carry out the purposes for which the Labor Dept. was established. However, the good will that Mitchell brings to the office will be of little value unless it is matched by support from the Administration and from Congress in terms of programs and policies and adequate budget . . .

"We hope that the President will carry out his campaign promises to strengthen the Labor Dept., and that the Republican congressional majority will discontinue its destructive efforts to emasculate the department and to weaken its various agencies in their efforts to protect the American workers."

The President told a press conference he had selected Mitchell, 52 and a Republican, because of his experience in the whole labor field. Mitchell was given a recess appointment, pending confirmation by the Senate in January.

DURING World War II, Mitchell was director of the Army Services Forces industrial personnel division. In post-war years, he was personnel and industrial director of R. H. Macy & Co. and later vice president of Bloomingdale Bros., big retail firms.

He also has been chairman of the National Retail Dry Goods Association employe relations committee and a member of the personnel advisory board of the 1948 Hoover Commission on government reorganization.

CIO Urges NLRB To Set New Rules On Craft Bargaining Units

THE CIO and its international unions called on the National Labor Relations Board last week to give "great weight" to a history of successful plantwide or industrywide bargaining in setting up any new policy on splitting craft groups from already existing units.

The CIO's views were given the board in a brief filed by General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg and the general counsels of CIO affiliates. Goldberg supplemented the document with oral testimony.

In addition, the brief held, the board's National Tube policy "should be unhesitatingly applied to all plants possessing the requisite characteristics."

Policy Explained

The National Tube policy, briefly, was to deny craft severance in integrated industries where there was a history of plantwide or industrywide bargaining, and where there was a community of interests between all workers in a plant.

It is on this basis that craft unions, to date, have not been allowed to carve up industrial union representation in basic steel and a few other industries.

Goldberg's brief made it clear the CIO does not ask the NLRB to espouse either industrial or craft unionism.

"We urge the board," it said, "to apply realistic criteria for determining appropriate bargaining units that will further union organization, collective bargaining and industrial peace. We urge the board to reject policies which will interfere with collective bargaining, foment industrial strife and encourage raiding."

Goldberg pointed out that the Wagner Act contains no guides to the board's determination of "appropriate units" of workers for collective bargaining, and the Taft-Hartley Act but few.

The policy the board has been following recently, Goldberg said, "is on the one hand destructive of industrial peace and stable bargaining relationships, and on the other, goes far beyond what is required for the legitimate protection of genuine craft groups."

The NLRB has extended bargaining severance to groups which are not crafts, he maintained, and its standards for such severance "are far too loose." Craft unions should be recognized, he continued, only when they represent genuine craftsmen, and not when they seek also to represent "a congeries of other groups."

They should not be recognized under any circumstances where there is a long history of plantwide bargaining, he added.

"We point out," Goldberg said, "that a long history of plantwide bargaining and an industry pattern of plantwide bargaining is the best indicator that an industry is peculiarly appropriate for plantwide bargaining.

"Such histories and patterns do not just happen: They exist because nearly all the workers and the managements, too, in an industry have some time ago determined that collective bargaining can be most effectively achieved on an industrial basis.

No New Mistakes

"The workers and the management in an industry, after all, are living with it and are therefore more familiar with wage patterns, working conditions, hours, hierarchical organization, tasks of workers, and operations than the board can ever be."

The CIO cautioned the board not to let its past mistakes serve as reasons for making new ones.

Goldberg appeared at a board hearing in Washington called as an outgrowth of a dispute among several AFL unions over representing either all production and maintenance employes of the American Potash & Chemical Corp., Trona, Calif., or various craft segments. Dist. 50 of the unaffiliated Mine Workers now represents the workers.

The board decided to re-examine and re-evaluate its policy on craft severances from long-established plantwide bargaining units. The CIO was called in as a friend of the court. So were the Chamber of Commerce, National Association of Manufacturers, Manufacturing Chemists Association and the AFL.

Steel PAC Drive Opens

THE CIO Steelworkers have begun the international union's PAC dollar drive, keynoted to USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald's description of political action as a "bread and butter" issue.

Steel Labor, the union's newspaper, said the reason for the greater interest is that the union members "know that the gains they have won can be nullified by bad legislation; that decisions made at the collective bargaining table can be altered by the actions of Congress, a state legislature or a city council."

A Pro-Prosperity Program

Last week the Sidney Hillman Foundation honored Harry S. Truman for his courage, vision and pioneering and a faith that never wavered in the plain people of the world.

In accepting that public service award, the former President demonstrated all those qualities anew.

Essentially, H. S. T. challenged Americans to "generate new ideas to meet new problems" of our nation—and that is a challenge to the labor movement and our friends and associates.

"The New Freedom, the New Deal, and the Fair Deal," he reminded us, "were all based upon new ideas to meet new problems. But the new ideas of one generation have never been enough for the tasks of the next generation."

Bittingly, the former President struck at "a set of dismal blockheads" who suggest that: A little depression might be okeh; four million unemployed wouldn't be so bad just as long as there weren't 15 million; the farmers should not be disturbed so long as there's no "undue disaster" (in Ezra Taft Benson's famous phrase); or that small businessmen shouldn't fear going broke in a small slump.

"What we now need is far more than an anti-depression program," Harry Truman emphasized. "We need a pro-prosperity program."

And in his plea for thinking and policies geared to the '50s, his vision of a fully prosperous and growing economy, and his proposals for "new goals for America," Harry Truman has set a course for the year ahead.

Heads In The Sand

H. S. T.'s bitter criticism of Old Guard reactionaries with their heads in the sand was pretty well demonstrated a few days earlier by Charles R. Sligh, Jr., president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

According to Mr. Sligh, nothing is wrong with the U. S. economy and it will remain strong and healthy so long as people are confident and optimistic. (Does that remind you of remarks back in 1929 and following?)

And then the NAM prexy condemned "prophets of doom"—including among them CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The facts don't bear out Mr. Sligh. There are doleful prophets—just take a look at current business magazines and bank reports, with their questions on "How far down will the recession go?" Some economic indicators—the drop in farm prices, the rising trend of unemployment, the decline in basic production as in steel—properly give cause for concern.

Just for the record, labor isn't predicting doom—it's propheysing an expanding America with "bread and freedom" so long as the nation (that means labor, farmers, business and government) has the strength and intelligence to act now to curb the danger of depression and build a pro-prosperity program.

A Good Vote

On the approach of United Nation's Day, it's worth recording that the long UN battle over the United Nations Intl. Children's Emergency Fund has at last been resolved. CIO long has supported the humanitarian work of UNICEF, and it's good to see that the UN now has established the agency on a permanent basis.

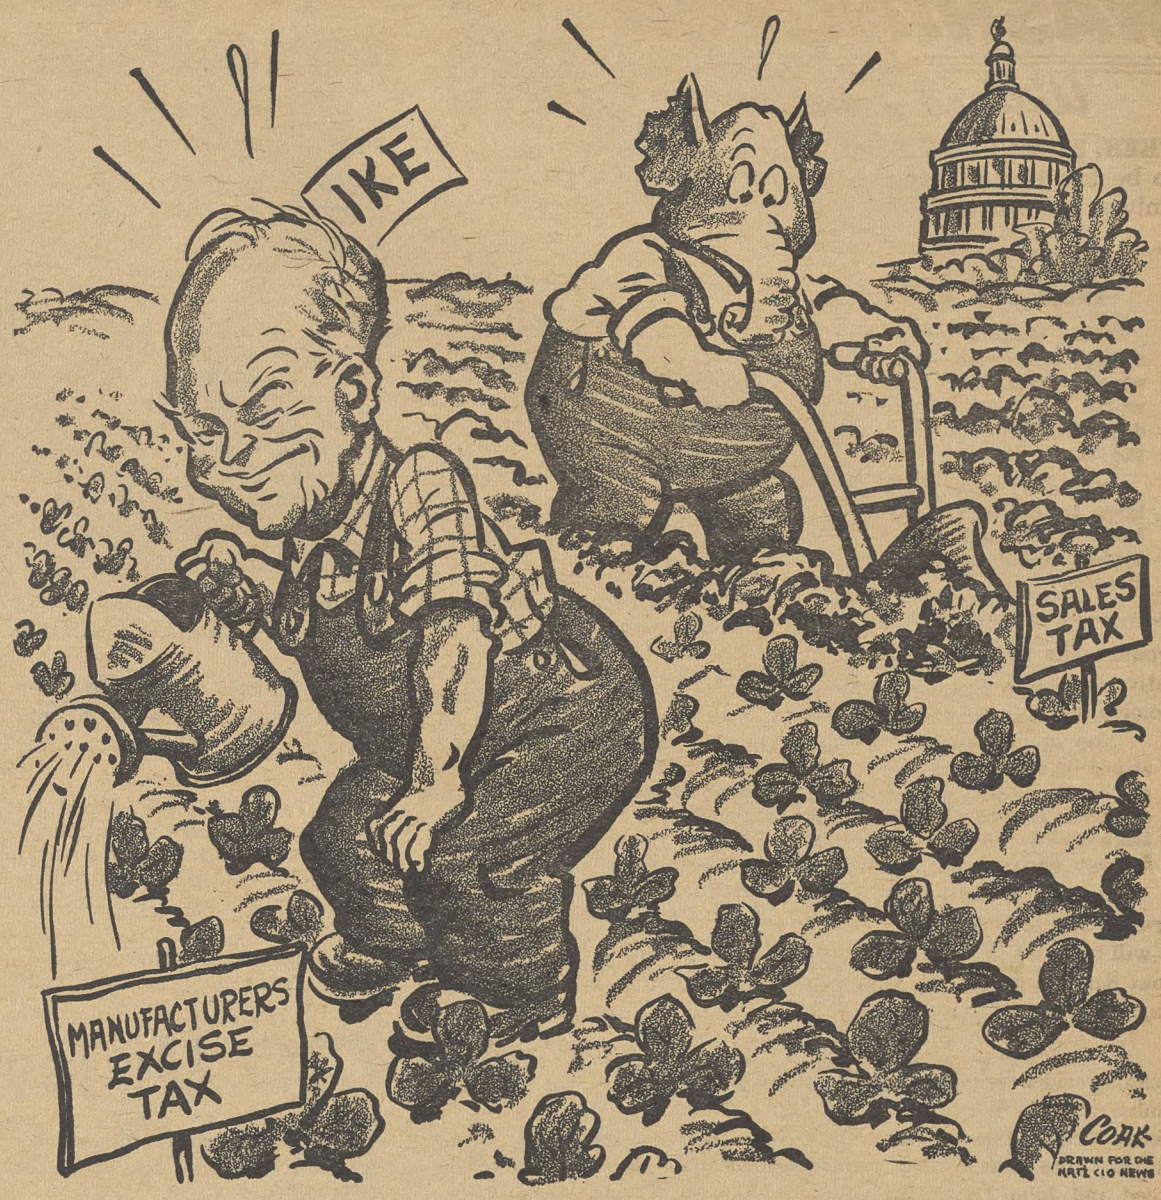
It All Looks Like Spinach To Us



In Other Words—

The Business Invasion Of Washington

Businessmen turned top government officials in GOP Washington have yet to learn you can't run the government the way you do a corporation, writes Cabell Philips in the current issue of Harper's Magazine. A digest of his article, "The Business Invasion of Washington," follows.

By CABELL PHILLIPS

THE REPUBLICANS won the election in 1952 but the victory belongs to Rotary International. Quietly but persistently the welfare state is being dismantled and the government is being rebuilt in the image of General Motors and the Chase National Bank, with philosophic overtones inspired by Herbert Hoover and Elbert Hubbard.

It represents a sharp rightward trend in economic and political outlook that conforms, almost by chapter and verse, to the conservative themes the Men of Rotary have been preaching for two decades. It is almost, in fact, the Managerial Revolution come to pass.

Men of Big Business, Big Finance and Big Law—men whose careers have been almost totally devoted to the creation and supervision of personal and corporate wealth—now dominate the planning and execution of national policy.

A Wider Outlook

Neither, of course, are businessmen strangers to government. Even under Roosevelt and Truman there was a well-beaten path between Wall St. and Constitution Ave., worn by such incorruptibly capitalist feet—some of them registered Republican—as those of Robert P. Kennedy, Averell Harriman, Joseph P. Kennedy, James Forrestal, Robert A. Lovett and a host of others.

They were no less dedicated to the institutions of free competitive enterprise than are the Humphreys, the Weekses, the Bensons and the Wilsons of the present Cabinet generation.

What does distinguish the two groups is a difference in the kind of intellectual equipment they brought to Washington with them. The former group had, on the whole, a more cosmopolitan background, a wider range of interests, and a little more plain savvy about what makes the 20th century world go round than their successors.

The present group, by and large, are men who have confined nearly all their mental energies up to now to a restricted channel; whose habit it has been to assess the state of the nation and the world in terms of their particular corporate interests. Defense Sec. Charles E. Wilson undoubtedly spoke from the heart when he told a Senate committee that he had always thought "what was good for General Motors would be good for the country."

3 Main Goals Indicated

Now that the businessmen, after 20 years of waiting, have their chance to govern, their performance to date suggests they are heading for three well-defined goals:

1. To reduce the size and cost of government. Budget Dir. Joseph M. Dodge is discovering some hard disparities between what the business men hope for and what it takes to run a government.

2. To narrow the functions of government. What may turn out to be the most drastic reform of the administration is the new Hoover Commission, with former Pres. Hoover again at the helm, to study not only the operations of government, but the functions of government as well.

3. To end government competition with private enterprise. For the first time in almost 40 years—40 years of stubborn policy of preserving the national domain for the benefit of all the people—the climate of Washington has changed to favor the exploitation of these resources for private benefits.

It would certainly be presumptuous to say that businessmen can't run a government. But it is true to say they can't run a government as they run a corporation.

Government is not business; many of its concepts are diametrically opposites of those of the board room and the market place. And that is where the businessmen are having their greatest difficulty in this transition, and where they will continue to have it until the hard lessons of necessity have been learned. Government is a service agency, not a profit-making agency.

The businessmen know pretty well what they want to do about government. But the job is not so simple as they had supposed. Their thinking about it has been confused by imbibing too freely of their own propaganda. What they have yet to learn is that politics is not the science of the market place but the art of the possible.

by Willard Shelton

PRES. EISENHOWER'S troubles with Congress seem likely to be tougher, rather than easier, in the next session. The knives are whetted, the schemers are at work, and it is terribly difficult to discover even in Eisenhower's Republican party any powerful leader who is, heart and soul, an Ikeman.

Out At First

One Washington Democratic wisecrack has been widely reported, but it's worth repeating. Said one disgruntled Dodger fan after the World Series:

On the one hand, there is Sen. Capehart (R., Ind.). Capehart was pro-Taft "before Chicago" last year, but he is now plotting to undermine the Eisenhower Senate leadership bequeathed by Taft to Sen. Knowland of California.

Capehart wants the GOP Senate Policy Committee expanded to include all legislative committee chairmen. This would make Knowland a mere errand boy for the powerful 15 legislative chairmen, the great majority of whom accepted Eisenhower's nomination only with reluctance.

On the other hand, the President cannot count on Knowland either. Knowland seems to think that his proper function is to act as Secretary of State. He came back from the Far East full of denunciations of India and Burma, violently opposed to negotiation with Soviet Russia, dead set against any Four Power conference such as Britain's Prime Minister Churchill advocates.

The official Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, can scarcely draw a secure breath for fear that his plans—whatever they may be—will be upset by a Knowland press conference. And Capehart thinks that Knowland ought to be "curbed" as "too close" to Ike.

Postponement Policy Continues

House Speaker Joseph Martin at least plays with the first Republican President elected in 20 years. Martin hasn't said anything to embarrass the White House. He worked hard to force through the excess profits tax extension. But Martin isn't running the Senate. It isn't sure that he can run the House next year, if Uncle Dan'l Reed and John Taber, the powerful tax and appropriations leaders, make another revolt.

Political professionals in the Eisenhower group think that their best program next year is to continue the policy of "government by postponement." That is, to handle only necessary legislation such as farm program and social security expansion, and kick everything else over until 1955.

But the federal debt, just announced as likely to be close to the ceiling after more heavy borrowings, will require attention.

Taxes will require attention. Certain corporation and excise levies will expire April 1, unless they are renewed, and Defense Sec. Wilson has abandoned his "economy" pose. He says we have to spend $40 billion for defense next year, rather than cut the $38 billion we are spending this year.

Ike Is Snappish

Mr. Eisenhower is bedeviled to "tell the people all" about the hydrogen bomb in a series of speeches called Operation Candor. He is bedeviled by other advisers warning him against it.

The President's temper, as he faces this array of troubles, is snappish. He almost blew up when, for the first time, he faced really sharp and hostile questions at a press conference.

The attitude of Washington newspapermen toward Mr. Eisenhower is unimportant. The President's attitude toward questions is very important—and he is showing extreme irritation.

A continued deterioration of relations could leave the President in the unhappy position of Herbert Hoover, more than 20 years ago, when press conferences are almost abandoned—and Hoover suffered.

★—This correspondent was sorry to see the departure of Mrs. India Edwards as director of women's activities for the Democratic National Committee. Mrs. Edwards has high principles, a genuine devotion to the best traditions of the New Deal, and excellent organizational skills.

Her successor, Mrs. Katie Louchheim, is also devoted to the New Deal tradition. She would make her biggest contribution if she should be able to restore the independent Women's Division, over which Mrs. Edwards once presided, and make it again a vigorous National Committee force.

★—Scott McLeod, the State Department's top policeman as security officer, also thinks it is his job to intimidate employes into giving to the District of Columbia Community Chest. He asked a report on anyone who didn't contribute generously, offered to lend a dollar from his own funds to anyone who was "sincerely strapped."

★—Republican senators are reluctant to apply for two vacant seats on the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee. Normally this would be considered a choice spot for aspiring junior senators; it is a "major" committee. But the two GOP senators most obviously eligible, John Sheman Cooper of Kentucky and Thomas H. Kuchel of California, face elections next year and show no desire to put themselves in the middle of a Taft-Hartley fight. The GOP leadership may have to "draft" members.

Behind The Headlines—

Now The Builders Want U. S. Aid; That's Not 'Creeping Socialism'

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

AMONG THE GUARDIANS of the Republic who have sounded the tocsin loudest against "creeping socialism" has been the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

In its fight on public housing, for example, it has managed to strangle many local projects by asking the local citizens, "Why should your taxes subsidize housing for someone else?"

But that was before NAREB came along with its "Build America Better" campaign, which it hails as the answer to urban blight and slums. For it now appears that NAREB scheme involves federal aid, and municipal aid. This, of course, is not "creeping socialism."

Fritz B. Burns, California realtor and builder, explained the campaign recently. The three steps, Burns explained are:

1. Strict enforcement of adequate and reasonable city ordinances that prohibit the use of dwellings that fall below local health, building, and sanitary standards, including demolition or removal of structures that cannot be made to conform to these standards.

2. Attraction of new construction on cleared or vacant sites in older city areas through the incentive of aecelerated depreciation for federal income tax purposes.

3. Systematic improvement of city schools, parks, streets and sewers in the areas where deterioration and neglect exist.

Step No. 1 is the so-called "Baltimore Plan" of slum clearance, highly touted by NAREB and other opponents of public housing.

Housing experts have branded this a phony and a smokescreen, for it makes no provision for housing those displaced when dwellings are torn down. Baltimore officials have admitted that it is no answer to the problem of slums.

Mayor Frank Zeidler of Milwaukee, after touring the "rehabilitated" areas of Baltimore, said that "it appears hardly more than an expanded, clean-up, paint-up program. It is insufficient to assure the elimination of slums." He added that the improvements seem to be "a surface treatment, but the buildings for the most part are still slum dwellings by reason of their age and obsolescence."

The plan does not add a single unit to housing capacity, so does nothing to ease overcrowding. G. Yates Cook, who was director of Baltimore's Housing Bureau when the plan was launched, admitted in 1950 that it was no substitute for low-cost public housing.

'Tax Bonanza' Lure

Burns' Point 2 would apply to slum housing "tax bonanza" lure of accelerated depreciation. This is the gimmick by which the federal government has handed out billions of dollars to defense and defense-connected industries in the way of savings on income taxes. So here is a case where NAREB favors a federal handout, but it is not "creeping socialism," because the hand-out would go to the landlords and builders, and not to those to be housed.

Burns' Point 3 also means the spending of tax money by municipalities, money the cities do not have. NAREB may cry that going to Uncle Sam is "creeping socialism," but the nation's mayors disagree, for in their 1953 conference they urged more federal funds for slum clearance and urban redevelopment.

In short, Burns is admitting that the job cannot be done by "America's productive free enterprise system," without tax aid from the cities and the federal government. When the advocates of public housing say so, that's socialism; when NAREB says so, that's "productive, free enterprise."

2 Senators Protest Bias Of Inquiry

Sens. Sparkman (D. Ala.) and Kefauver (D. Tenn.) have protested that Pres. Eisenhower's Advisory Committee on Public Housing is dominated by bankers, real estate men and builders opposed to public housing.

"I question the value of any study by such a group," Kefauver said, "but there is much yet to be done in public housing and I hope the facts will open the committee members' eyes."

Pointed Questions For Employers

Along with expected praise for the Taft-Hartley Act as a "good law," Chairman Guy Farmer of the National Labor Relations Board addressed nine pointed questions to employers last week on their responsibilities in collective bargaining. Here is an excerpt from his speech in Washington:

By GUY FARMER

IT IS NOT EASY to have successful labor relations. They cannot be plucked off a tree like a ripe apple and stored away in the cellar. There is no easy formula for success.

I have some difficulty in describing it, but I have no difficulty in recognizing a plant where collective bargaining and labor relations are working successfully, or, for that matter, where they are not.

If the boss is complaining about the union and the union about the boss, if the foremen are disgruntled and reluctant to take responsibility on grievances, if there are frequent work stoppages over seemingly inconsequential grievances, if contract negotiations bog down or stall over trival issues, if large numbers of grievances go all the way to arbitration, if the union grievance committee spends most of its time discussing grievances with the labor relations director, it doesn't take an expert to discern that somebody is falling down on the job.

Engage In Self-Analysis

If these things or any appreciable number of them are happening in your shop, it will be well to assess your labor relations to see if perhaps you are not altogether or partly to blame.

It might be worthwhile to engage in some self-analysis along these lines. You might ask yourself these questions:

1. Have I truly accepted the presence of union organization among my employes?
2. Have I truly accepted the principle and practice of collective bargaining?
3. Have I always attempted to meet the union half way and work out acceptable and fair compromises?
4. Have I paid enough attention to labor relations, and have I, within my own organization, picked the men and set up the right organization for handling labor relations?
5. Have I educated my foremen in labor relations, have I kept them informed, and have I given them sufficient responsibility and authority?
6. Do I have the right kind of grievance procedure to provide for orderly and speedy disposition of grievances and complaints?
7. Have I worked out and clarified with the union our respective areas of responsibility?
8. Have I kept pace, within sound economic limits, with my industry and locality in wages and employe benefits?
9. Do I provide a safe, clean, healthy place for my employes to work?

If you can answer these in the affirmative, then you can be safe in assuming that your labor relations are on a sound footing and have a better than fair chance to succeed.

"Prices sure have skyrocketed—I can remember 25 years ago when she was selling kisses for 50c."

'Point Four Is Being Quietly Murdered'

The Point Four program "is being quietly murdered," CIO News Commentator John W. Vandercook reported recently. Here is his review of Point Four's accomplishments, and what's happened to the agency, as digested from his CIO-sponsored newscast on ABC Radio:

By JOHN W. VANDERCOOK

THE FAMOUS—but not nearly famous enough—Point Four program, that scheme for helping others to help themselves, was imbedded in three paragraphs of Pres. Truman's inaugural address, back in 1949.

The substance of it was contained in these words:

"We must embark on a bold new program for making the benefits of our scientific advances and industrial progress available for the improvement and growth of underdeveloped areas."

That was neither the time nor the place to spell out what "underdeveloped areas" meant—and means. But the facts are staggering.

What Ails The World

Without stretching the definition, two-thirds of the world's present population of around 2.5 billion souls, live in them. Three of the globe's great continents—Asia, Africa and South America—can be justly said to be, for the most part, underdeveloped.

When we look for the reasons for what ails this planet of ours, there—staring us in the face if we only take the trouble to look—is one of the very biggest of them.

That state of underdevelopment is one reason why communism, which repels people who have known freedom and have had some degree of ordinary decency in their lives, seduces and attracts tens of millions of people who have never known freedom; who possess practically nothing.

The average per person income in the United States is now around $1600 a year. In Latin America, after averaging in all the big incomes, yearly earnings per capita work out at about $150 a year.

When you take that yardstick of purchasing power to south and southeast Asia the figure drops to about $40. Think of it—$40 a year.

The majority of the earth's primitive and semi-primitive people — the inhabitants of India's 400,000 villages, China's peasants, Latin America's barefoot peons —live by agriculture.

But they live so badly by it that most of them are perpetually undernourished, for their farming methods are unbelievably inefficient.

Where Point Four Helps

Health — and food producing. Those were the two areas of human need Point Four was primarily designed to help. It took an unimaginative Congress more than 20 months to get around to it. But, at last, the Technical Cooperation Administration was set up—and a modest sum was appropriated to start it off.

In the two fiscal years of '51 to '53, the TCA spent $276 millions in 35 different countries including places like Iraq and Egypt and Ecuador and Lebanon. And in every country there was a matching local contribution.

What we got for that money was probably per dollar, more liking, more solid and lasting respect for the best that America stands for than we could have bought for 10 times that sum in any other way.

In Persia, 9000 villages were sprayed with DDT, to get rid of malaria. In Indian villages, farmers were shown how to increase the yield of their land five times over. In Liberia, instruction was given on modern road building. In Indo-China, mothers have been shown how to keep their children from going blind with a 10c tube of aureomycin ointment.

The Only 'Handout'

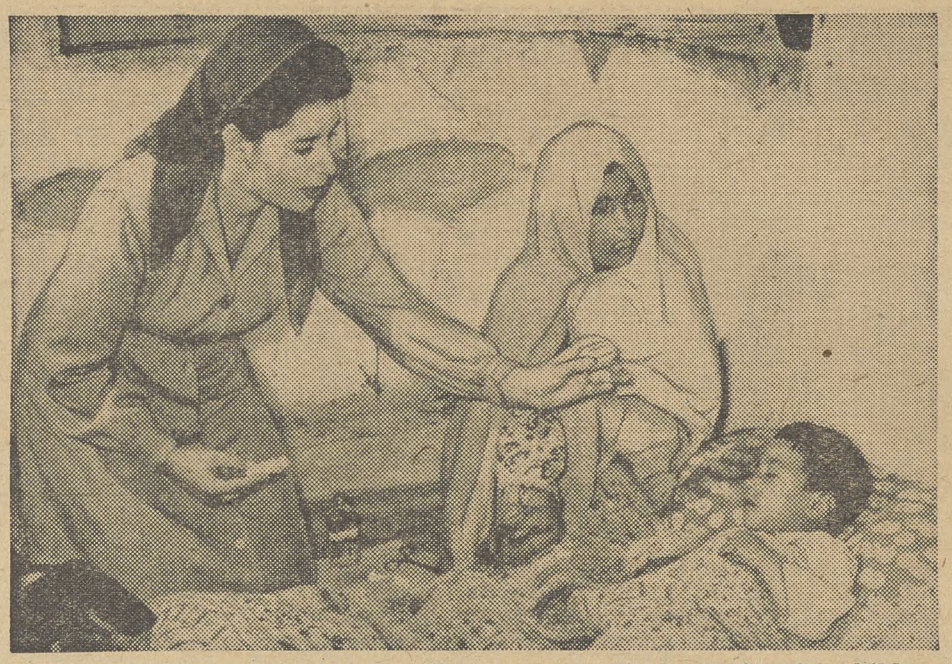
Examples like those could be multiplied by the thousand. Point Four—beyond any possible contradiction—has been one of the most constructive efforts in down-to-earth humanitarianism in all history. The only "handout"—that word the cruel of heart admire—has been knowledge and health.

What, then, is now happening to the Point Four program?

Apparently, it is being quietly murdered. One thing that has lately counted against it—it appears, as if that mattered—is that it was a Truman idea. And the new brooms must sweep clean. To change metaphors—it's the old business of throwing out the baby with the bathwater.

The Technical Cooperation Administration has had its name changed, and has been swallowed by the catch-all Foreign Operations Administration headed by Harold Stassen. More than a quarter of the Point Four administrative staff in Washington has already been fired. No one connected with it now doubts that the great plan's destruction is anything but "inevitable."

(Hear John W. Vandercook And The News, sponsored by CIO every week night on ABC Radio.)



MIDDLE EAST.—Point Four in Iran means medical care for sick children. Nurse Shafigheh Herovabadi from Point Four clinic in Robat Karim, Iran, gives penicillin to five-year-old Parviz, stricken with measles and pneumonia. The child's mother, Ozra, watches.

AFRICA.—Husky worker helps to dig drainage ditch from swamps, part of Point Four program in Liberia to curb malaria.

Optimist

Eric Johnston, veteran government official and chairman of the 10-man International Development Advisory Board, is optimistic on maintenance of the technical aid program. In contrast, Sen. Russell (D. Ga.) wants to kill off all foreign economic programs in the next Congress.

Knifing Of Point Four Protested

Church and veteran groups have joined with labor in protesting whittling away of the Point Four program by the Republican Administration.

The American Veterans Committee charged that the program is being scuttled, said the U. S. needs Point Four even more the nations where it operates.

"The fruits of three years of making ourselves good friends and neighbors," the AVC said, "are being tossed aside."

At the CIO Electrical Workers convention, former Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley said: "Point Four has been cut down to what the newspapers call Point 2.5. If they keep whittling away at it, it may be cut down to Point One, and eventually to Point Cipher."

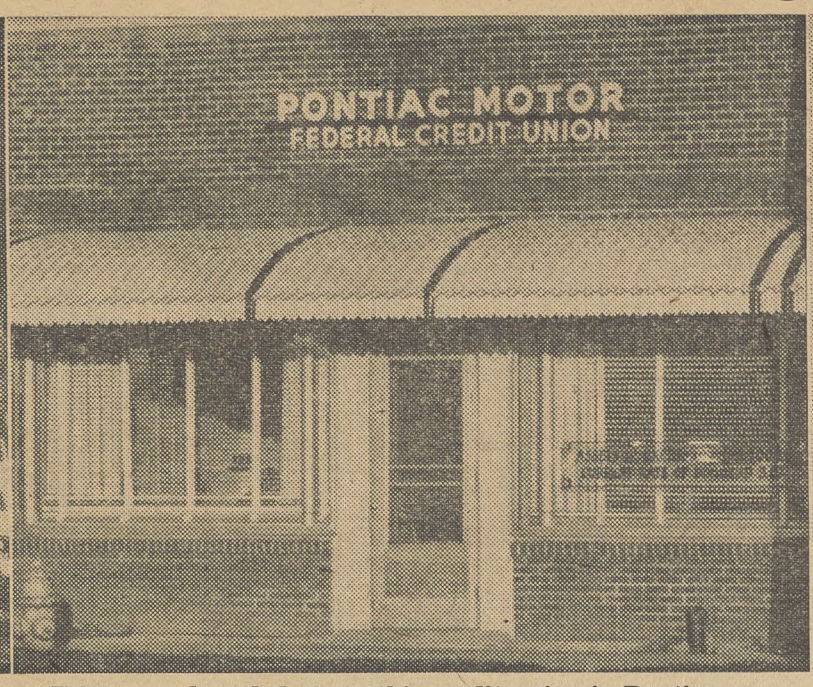
SOUTH AMERICA.—Through Point Four, U. S. and Bolivia are conducting new rural teachers training institute at Tarisata. Now false GOP "economy" perils Point Four just as its results are increasing.

Credit Unions Grow To A Big Boy Now

Workers like this boost credit unions.



UAW members belong to this credit union in Pontiac.

Credit unions aid farmers' security.

By FRED ROSS

THOUSANDS of CIO members will join in the observance of International Credit Union Day on Oct. 15.

For these CIO members are part of the eight-million member credit union movement in North America and belong to labor-sponsored credit unions.

The credit union idea is more than 100 years old, the first having been founded in 1848 by Mayor Frederick Wilhelm Raiffeisen of Flammersfeld, Germany.

The first credit union was formed because of the needs of a distressed people. German cities were crowded with the unemployed, who were thrown out of work by the industrial revolution. The country also was suffering from famine, resulting from a drought that destroyed two years' crops.

People were going into debt deeper and deeper by borrowing from money lenders. There seemed to be no way out of the vicious circle formed by high interest rates and hard times.

Basic Principle Followed

Acutely conscious of the mounting misery, Raiffeisen resolved he would do something to help the people. He suggested that Flammersfeld's citizens pool their savings and then lend money to each other at low rates of interest—the essence of the credit union idea.

Other features of the plan are basic to credit unions today. Reiffeisen ruled that only persons who belonged to credit unions could borrow from them, that loans would only be made for provident and productive reasons, and that a man's character was the most important security for his loan.

The credit union idea began spreading throughout the world. The idea was introduced in North America by Alphonse Desjardins, who in 1900 organized a credit union at Levis, Que.

Labor Has Big Role

Labor has a big interest in the credit union program. There are 734 credit unions in the U. S. organized and run by union members, 253 of them inspired by members of CIO locals.

Typical is the CIO Employees Federal Credit Union with 520 members who work at the National CIO headquarters and CIO international union offices in Washington, and for the CIO Organizing Committee in the South.

As of Aug. 31, the total worth of the union was $183,378.91 and the personal loans outstanding aggregated $138,102.

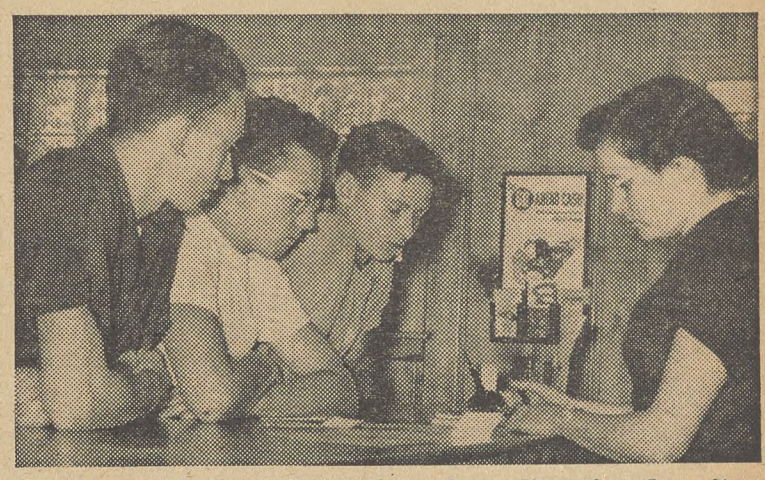
Desjardins also started the first credit union in the U. S.—at Manchester, N. H., in 1909.

But the real father of credit unions in this country was a Boston merchant, Edward A. Filene. Prominent in the world of business and philanthropy, Filene learned about credit unions on a trip to India.

The same year that Desjardins set up the Ste. Marie Parish Credit Union in Manchester, Filene urged the passage of a credit union law in Massachusetts.

He worked ceaselessly for the credit union movement, spending a great part of his personal fortune for this purpose. In 1921 he set up a bureau to promote credit unions, get credit union laws exacted and set up a permanent national association.

By 1934 he could point to a nationwide credit union movement in the U. S. with more than 3000 unions and 750,000 members. The movement was ready to stand on its own feet that year when credit union leaders from all parts of the country formed the Credit Union National Association (CUNA).



Young people learn thrift through credit union deposits.

Democratic election of officers is the rule among credit unions.

CIO Protests Growers' Moves To Weaken Migrant Treaty

CIO SPOKESMEN have entered a protest against efforts of "suitcase farmers and the Southern California Chamber of Commerce" to gut the wage standards and working conditions set by a U. S.-Mexico treaty dealing with Mexican immigrant farm workers.

They are also protesting the open border and "border recruitment" plans these same groups are pushing to take advantage of the substantially lower wages paid to so-called "wetbacks"—illegal Mexican immigrant workers who are pouring across the U. S. border at the rate of about 1.5 million a year.

Nicholas C. Dragon, CIO representative in Arizona, and Herbert McCreedy, CIO representative in Michigan, who are members of the sub-committee on Mexican labor of the Bureau of Employment Security's Labor Committee, warned that "unless these problems are properly dealth with by the government, relations with our good neighbor Mexico are going to deteriorate dangerously."

POINTING out that the wage levels and working conditions set in the treaty for Mexican nationals have vastly improved the status of U. S. farm workers, Dragon and McCreedy said that weakening its provisions would drive thousands of American workers from the farms "because they cannot compete with the slave-labor wages of 25c to 35c an hour paid to illegal immigrants."

Under the terms of the treaty some 200,000 legal immigrants who come in each year are paid rates ranging from 50c to 70c an hour. They also get such fringe benefits as good housing, subsistence pay and insurance on the job.

"The average 'wetback' earns about half those rates," Dragon said, "and the camps in which he is forced to live are filthier than the worst city slums."

Dragon defined a "suitcase farmer" as "a retired doctor or dentist who has put all the money he didn't pay in income taxes into a small cotton farming operation in the southwest. Because he is trying to operate his farm on an uneconomic basis, he can't compete with the association farmer who operates profitably while paying the legal wage limit and maintaining decent conditions in his labor camps."

Dragon said that when U. S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell "blundered into the situation this year and talked to people who knew the problem," he ordered strict enforcement of border regulations. "But then pressure was brought to bear by Vice Pres. Nixon when growers complained that their crops would rot unless they could use 'wetback' labor, and the border patrol was called off.

THE CIO members of the Mexican labor subcommittee are supporting the position of the Mexican government in maintaining the present standards in the treaty, which expires Dec. 31. And they are protesting to the Justice Dept. about lax enforcement of border regulations, "which allows the growers to use 'wetbacks' to pressure for a downward revision of wages and working conditions," Dragon said.

Dragon and McCreedy also emphasized that the mass immigration of Mexican workers has posed a problem in industrial areas of the southwest.

"The illegal immigrant is deported if he participates in a strike," Dragon said, "and the CIO Clothing Workers have already run into trouble organizing plants when 'wetbacks' have been brought in to scab."

School Fund Issue Defeated In Pittsburgh

A LAST-MINUTE pressure campaign by powerful Pittsburgh real estate interests last week defeated a school tax increase which had been supported by Pittsburgh CIO unions.

In the special election at which only a third of the city's 350,000 voters cast ballots, the proposal to increase taxes an average 2c a day failed by a four-to-one margin.

During the final days of campaigning tenants were threatened with sharp rent increases if the tax passed. The real estate interests' propaganda promised that, if the tax were defeated, the State Legislature would be forced to appropriate funds to continue the school program.

It was the first time in 12 years that a school tax increase had been sought. Failure of the tax measure will mean a sharp cut in many school services, including kindergartens, night schools, manual training and sewing classes, plus a reduction in the teaching force.

SPOKESMEN for 85,000 members of the CIO Clothing Workers living in the New York City area last week endorsed Robert F. Wagner, Jr., for mayor.

Wagner is a son of the late U. S. Sen. Robert F. Wagner, father of the Wagner Act, and for many years was his father's secretary. He won the Democratic nomination for mayor in the primary election and has the CIO Council endorsement.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the ACWA announced the endorsement after a meeting of union representatives at which the issues and the personalities were discussed exhaustively.

"Bob Wagner, Jr., is easily the most qualified candidate for mayor in the present campaign," he said. "I am satisfied he will give us a clean and efficient local government.

"The Democratic candidate is a truly liberal candidate and labor can support him in good conscience. Like us, he is concerned with more and better schools, more hospitals, adequate transportation services for millions of New York citizens.

"Equally important, we are determined, locally, to overcome the present trend to reaction, in 1953, '54 and '56. The election of Bob Wagner will help reverse that trend.

CIO Councils In Action

With this issue, The CIO News begins publication of "CIO Councils In Action," a regular feature digesting the activities of CIO state and local industrial union councils, based on reports to the CIO Organization and Councils Dept.—The Editor.

A "PAYOFF" to real estate and banking interests is charged by the Akron CIO Council, fighting the threatened eviction of 2000 tenants from low-rent public housing units in and near the rubber center.

Dodo Bird

Thanks to protests by the New Jersey State CIO Council, all discriminatory designations of race or color will be eliminated from all state fishing and hunting licenses and applications.

Decision of the State Div. of Fish and Game was announced by Arthur Chapin, State CIO Council civil rights director.

Washington officials have ordered 480 public housing units closed, effective in February. The Council's housing committee links former Akron Mayor Charles E. Slusser, now a U. S. housing official, to the action.

Mid-winter evictions may force rent boosts as high as 100% in the Akron area, warned the committee. CIO said the eviction program will:

"Permit them to raise rents anywhere from 25 to 100% because of the terrific pressure for rental units that will follow serving of the eviction notices.

"Permit banks and real estate companies with new homes to sell to bolster a badly sagging real estate market and continue to ask exorbitant prices for this new housing."

- Connecticut State CIO has awarded six Philip Murray Scholarships, honoring the late CIO president, to six Univ. of Connecticut students. Award winners are members or children of members of CIO unions. In granting the awards totalling $1000, the Council said "the price tags should be removed from educational opportunity."
- Lake County, Ind., Council went to the Central States Fair in Crown Point, distributing more than 10,000 pamphlets to fair visitors. Labor radio program, "News and Views," also was broadcast from the CIO booth.
- New Jersey State CIO has urged Gov. Driscoll to withdraw the hasty appointment of Dr. John P. Milligan as director of the State Division Against Discrimination. Council Pres. Carl Holderman protested the appointment was "rammed through" the State Civil Rights Commission, suggested that Dr. Harold A. Lett, acting director, was better qualified for the post.
- Greater Los Angeles CIO Council is going to court in a final effort to regain Los Angeles CIO Building from pro-Communist unions expelled some years ago. Sec.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford said the long-pending suit will be brought to trial in Superior Court next February. He charged expelled unions reneged on agreement for an out-of-court settlement.
- Texas State CIO and local councils are beginning an intensive poll tax campaign to qualify voters. The Houston Council sponsored a Labor Day "Voice of Roosevelt" broadcast. Dallas Council was host to local newspapermen at a special press dinner.
- Wisconsin State CIO soon will begin a bi-weekly public service radio program dealing with political and legislative issues.

With the balloting 13 months away, the Michigan CIO Council's political action committee met at Port Huron to prepare for an intensive campaign.

August Scholle, Council president, said early and intensive planning was necessary "to combat General Motors' obvious attempt to add the governor's office to its 'majority holding' in the Republican-dominated state Legislature.

"Only a Democratic governor (G. Mennan Williams) with veto power has been able to keep GM from completely taking over the State," Scholle continued. "Political action on the state level has assumed even greater importance today because of the Eisenhower's Administration's avowed purpose of relegating present federal functions to the states."

The committee approved Scholle's plan to hold a series of 19 meetings within the next five months. These include a two-day week-end conference of city and county CIO councils and one-day meetings for each of the State's 18 congressional districts.

In addition to the race for governor and State legislative seats, contests will be held for the post now held by Sen. Ferguson (R.) and for all the seats in the House.

Thimmes To Aid Housing Study

James G. Thimmes, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, has been appointed a member of the Subcommittee on Housing for Low-Income Families just named by the Advisory Committee on Government Housing Policies and Programs.

Thimmes, who is also vice president of the CIO Steelworkers, is a member of the full Advisory Committee.

MEMORIAL AWARD.—Citation for "unflagging devotion to the CIO movement in Virginia" was presented by CIO Rep. E. B. Pugh to Hazel Compton at Virginia CIO convention. She's recording secretary of Textile Workers Local 1162 and Blue Ridge CIO Council in Lynchburg.

Labor's World—

CIO Free Labor Fund Gifts Help Unionists Overseas

FROM MARSEILLES to Malaya, free trade union organizers soon will be getting funds, literature and resources to help build the labor movement—thanks to contributors to the CIO Free World Labor Fund.

That is the report of Victor Reuther, until recently CIO European representative and now assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

In the French metal working industry, an organizing drive is making real headway, with mimeograph machines, typewriters and supplies provided through contributions to the fund.

In West Africa and in India, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions is being aided by the fund in operating training schools for union organizers—in the largest unorganized area in the world.

UNICEF

The General Assembly of the United Nations has voted unanimously to continue the UN Intl. Children's Emergency Fund on a permanent basis following two days of debate during which 25 delegates praised its work in aiding 70 million children in 69 countries.

The assembly changed the name to the UN Children's Fund, but decided to keep the old set of initials—UNICEF—because they are so well known. The agency administers relief and helps establish long-range programs for child welfare.

ICFTU

Charles Levinson of the CIO European Office in Paris participated in a full-length ICFTU inquiry on measures to attain full employment.

The ICFTU study, ordered at the recent world congress in Stockholm, deals with wage-price, investment, productivity, and consumer income policies necessary for full employment.

When the ICFTU project was adopted, CIO Pres. Reuther said it would back up the drive of several CIO unions for the guaranteed annual wage.

Scholarships

For CIO members interested in the international labor movement and desirous of studying abroad, the American Labor Education Service, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y., has published a booklet, "Labor Scholarships Abroad," detailing the facts about various scholarships for study in other countries which are open to U. S. workers. Single copies are free; in quantity, 10c per copy.

Transport

The Liberian freighter Riviera, which was tied up in Portland, Ore., for 12 months last year when it ran afoul of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation campaign against substandard ships, recently had more trouble in Europe.

Dutch dock workers, alerted by the ITF, refused to unload 3000 tons of cargo at Rotterdam. The ship was then tied up for two days at Hamburg, Germany, and left for an unannounced port only after its name was changed to Effie.

ILO

Sweden is the first nation to ratify the comprehensive social security treaty adopted by the 1952 conference of the Intl. Labor Organization and setting forth minimum social security standards for all participating nations.

French Commies Lay Some Eggs

The French Communist Party laid a series of eggs last week to herald the reconvening of the National Assembly.

First it called a 24-hour strike in nationalized industries in order to stage a demonstration protesting Premier Laniel's economic policies. Nobody paid any attention.

Then it canceled the general strike order and called for a four-hour shutdown in the nationalized gas and electric industries. Nobody paid any attention to that, either, so it proclaimed a "massive" demonstration march on the Assembly. Fewer than 100 demonstrators showed up.

Virginia CIO Meets—

Beirne Dissects GOP 'Change' As Price Boosts, Give-Aways

By ED LASHMAN

"THE CHANGE you ordered last November has caused you to spend more money and get fewer things for it."

That's the way Joseph A. Beirne, president of the CIO Communications Workers, summed up the record of the Republican Administration in a speech to 300 delegates at the 13th annual Virginia CIO convention meeting in Roanoke.

Citing increased interest rates, power and oil give-aways, an 8% boost in long distance telephone rates, elimination of rent control, scuttling of housing programs and a generally increased cost of living, the CWA president reminded the group "these changes came about because we thought our trade unionism stopped when we paid our dues."

He charged that we are being "softened up by experts predicting a recession," and said the reason is "to cause fear to creep into the hearts of men and women and to make them worried about their jobs."

PAC DIR. Jack Kroll, the convention's other major speaker, quipped that "if Labor Sec. Durkin is replaced by another millionaire, there'll be more money in the Cabinet than in the Treasury."

Kroll also warned the Virginians about a possible manufacturers' excise tax which he termed "a sugar-coated sales tax." He pointed out that a tax of 5% at the manufacturers' level would cost consumers "at least 7% by the time manufacturers', wholesalers' and retailers' profits are figured on top of it."

Speaking of Virginia's low percentage of voters—31% of the electorate in 1952 compared the national figure of 63%—Kroll said, "If you let George do your voting for you, he'll vote for George's interest, not yours."

The delegates from 13 international unions, one LIU and four councils, who represented some 35,000 members in Virginia, also heard from two of Virginia's three gubernatorial candidates. Democrat Thomas B. Stanley refused the invitation, but Republican Ted Dalton and Independent Howard Carwile both made appearances. Other CIO speakers were Nat. Rep. Fred Pieper, representing Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, and Reg. Dir. Paul Christopher.

Hazel Compton, recording secretary of the Blue Ridge CIO Council and of TWUA Local 1162 in Lynchburg, won the Virginia CIO Memorial Award for outstanding services to the CIO in the state.

Lawrence H. Marine of the Steelworkers staff in Roanoke was elected president; Julian Carper of the Textile Workers in Front Royal was elected to newly created position of full-time executive vice president; and James H. Boyette of the Auto Workers staff in Suffolk was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Big CIO Canal Zone Local Begins Organizing Drive

AN ALL-OUT drive to enlist the unorganized among the non-citizen employes of the Canal Zone as members of the CIO Government Employees in Panama was begun at the third annual convention of Local 900-GCEOC.

Some 5000 of the 18,500 workers eligible are now in the union. Local 900 has succeeded in obtaining a 7c general pay increase, but local rate workers in the Zone are still miserably paid, with a minimum wage of 41c an hour.

GUEST speaker at the convention was the Rev. John A. Doyle, C.M., who gave a stirring address pointing out that the U. S. government has a moral obligation to better working conditions of Panamanians employed in the Canal Zone.

Ed K. Welsh, CIO representative in the Zone for the past three years, and Lloyd P. Vaughan, who has succeeded him as CIO director there, also addressed Local 900's convention.

The union has endorsed the program of Pres. Jose A. Remon of the Republic of Panama calling for an end of segregation and discrimination in wages and working conditions of non-American citizens.

Pres. Remon stated, in recent negotiations between representatives of the U. S. and Panama, that Panamanian citizens should be accorded the same treatment with respect to wages and working conditions as U. S. Rate employes in the Zone.

Last week, Pres. Eisenhower, in a joint statement issued with Remon, agreed that the United States would take appropriate measures to give full effect to the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment to the citizens of Panama employed in the Zone.

Northwest USA Aide Backs Hells Canyon On Job Issue

SUPPORT for the high-level federal power dam at Hells Canyon as essential to industrial development and job expansion in the Pacific Northwest has been voiced by spokesmen for 10,000 CIO Steelworkers in the area.

The USA-CIO likewise condemned the "give-away" proposal—favored by high Eisenhower Administration officials—to turn the Hells Canyon power site over to the Idaho Power Co.

Objections to the proposal, on which hearings are being held in Washington, were voiced by Otto Orr, sub-district director, Dist. 38, USA-CIO, and W. C. Meyer and E. M. Spencer, presidents of Steelworkers Locals 338 and 329 respectively.

Orr said "the need in the Northwest is for a federally constructed Hells Canyon high-level dam which will produce maximum power for industrial use."

"The Northwest has great water power resources and if developed along safe and sane lines will afford sufficient power to expand and to maintain an industrial expansion," Orr said. "If left to private power, the Grand Coulee would never have been built, along with many other dams which were built by the federal government.

"These dams are paying for themselves and will cease to be any expense whatever to the federal government. The various federal dams built in this Northwest have been a boon to industry and to the employment of hundreds of thousands of its citizens."

In Washington, Pres. James G. Patton of the National Farmers Union told the FPC that construction of three low dams in Hells Canyon as proposed by Idaho Power would be a "scandalous waste of potential resources." He added that power could be produced at half the cost by one high dam formerly backed by the Bureau of Reclamation.

Council Aids Auto Strike In Wisconsin

THE WISCONSIN CIO Council last week was marshalling support for the strike of 400 CIO Auto Workers at the Yates-American Machine Co. plant at Beloit.

The walkout began after the firm refused to grant an 8% wage increase. The company claimed poverty, but refused to let union auditors look at its books.

Pickets were on 24-hour duty at the seven gates of the concern, which makes woodworking machines and radiators, and production was halted. Harvey Kitzman, director of UAW Region 10, praised the cooperation of the Wisconsin CIO Council and Beloit CIO locals at a meeting of the workers.

"This strike is the price we pay for not voting a government sympathetic to the workingman." he said.

Optical Firm Under Fire

THE CIO Optical Workers have begun a Don't Buy Bausch & Lomb campaign. Following a long history of stormy relations with the firm which makes eye glasses and their parts, the union is on strike against the $75 million corporation in St. Louis.

UOIWA-CIO Pres. Thomas E. Andert last week asked union members to refuse to buy glasses or safety goggles made by the company, insist on the union label or certificate on glasses bought by them and ask their optometrist or oculist not to send work to the firm which has offices throughout the U. S.

You And Your Money—

U. S. Figures Support CIO Plea To Expand Consumer Income

NEW EVIDENCE that America's millions of low and middle-income families need expanded consumer buying power if the nation is to avoid depression is available in a recently reported survey by the Commerce Dept.

The survey shows that well over half of all families dependent upon wages or salaries earned each year less than the $4218 which the Labor Dept. says is necessary for a "modest-but-adequate" living standard for an urban family of four.

The Commerce Dept. survey, conducted in 1951, covered 40.4 million families. Of these, 31.5 million families had incomes composed entirely of wages and salaries.

Below 'Adequate' Standards

The average annual income of these families was $3650—almost $600 below the Labor Dept's estimate for a "modest-but-adequate" living. And the average is almost $400 below the similar wage earner budget of the Heller Committee of the Univ. of California—an estimate which hasn't been brought up to date since 1949.

The Commerce Dept. figures (see adjoining table) underscore CIO's arguments for expanding consumer buying power, as voiced in the recent CIO economic study on "Maintaining Prosperity" and the latest issue of the Economic Outlook.

The U. S. figures show that over 25% of all families receive less than $2500 a year, over 33.3% less than $3000, and over two-thirds less than $5000.

Another Commerce Dept. report showed that private industry payrolls are dropping off. The figure for August was at the rate of $167.1 billion a year, down by $6 billion from the previous month. The decline centered in durable goods manufacturing.

Total personal income dropped in August to an annual rate of $287 billion.

Pointing to the need for expanding family buying power, the latest Outlook warned that "if consumer spending fails to rise rapidly as defense spending slackens, unemployment and idle factories will be inevitable. Substantial increases in consumer buying power—particularly of low- and middle-income families who spend all or almost all of their incomes—must occur if the required rises in consumer spending are to take place."

Income Breakdown

Here are the Commerce Dept. figures on the spread of annual income among 31.5 million families of wage and salary earners:

Income	Percent of Families
Under $500	5.0%
$500 to $999	4.1%
$1000 to $1499	4.2%
$1500 to $1999	5.9%
$2000 to $2499	8.3%
$2500 to $2999	8.7%
$3000 to $3499	10.8%
$3500 to $3999	10.3%
$4000 to $4499	9.5%
$4500 to $4999	6.5%
$5000 to $5999	11.0%
$6000 to $6999	6.7%
$7000 to $9999	7.0%
$10,000 to $14,999	1.6%

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

HOUSE TRAILERS: "My wife and I would appreciate advice on buying a house trailer."—D. E. M., Claremont, N. H.

Answer: Generally trailers fall into two types: California manufacturers build fine trailers, but don't insulate them as thoroughly for the milder Pacific climate, as do the Eastern makers.

Your Buying Questions Answered

Trailer experts consider aluminum the most durable trailer shell, with masonite next and homasote third. The latter two provide excellent insulation but simply require more frequent repainting, caulking and general upkeep. The smaller trailers not only cost less for the total price, but also cost less per square foot.

As trailers get larger the price pyramids because of more lavish decoration and equipment. It's best to invest your money in actual trailer quality than eye-catching decor which you could add yourself.

You can cut the cost of a trailer to one-half or less by picking up a used one. As with a used car, you can often get a better price from a private owner than a dealer, especially if you're willing to do some reconditioning yourself. But in buying a used trailer, make sure there are no leaks.

Incidentally, readers interested in a small trailer for touring, rather than as a home, may want to know about the small shell developed by the Cree Trailer and Boat Co., of Marcellus, Mich., which is not towed but fits on to a half or three-quarter ton pickup truck between the side boards. These shells are only six feet wide, and eight or ten feet long, but are compact and can sleep a small family. They cost $700-$1000, depending on size and equipment.

Answer: Gas heaters are more economical to operate. Also, you can get away with a smaller storage tank if gas-fired, because a gas-heated tank has a faster recovery rate; that is, the water heats up faster. With an automatic washer you should have at least a 50-gallon tank for maximum washing efficiency.

DEFROSTERS: "I would like to buy the attachment for self defrosting a refrigerator but I have heard many different views on it. Recently one of the fellows from the company came over to fix something and I asked him. He told me that unless the refrigerator is built with a self-defroster it won't work well. He said that if I attach one now, while the refrigerator is defrosting the food in the freezer will thaw out and spoil. Yet I heard other people say it works out all right."—Mrs. A. R., Uniondale, N. Y.

Answer: The modern refrigerators with built-in defrosting mechanisms are one of the most welcome developments yet, although very expensive. The refrigerator serviceman accurately voiced the chief objection to the portable defrosters you can buy for attaching to any refrigerator. They generally take 2.5 hours to 5 hours to defrost every night, which means that frozen foods in the freezing compartment have a chance to thaw out.

When re-frozen, their quality and flavor may be affected, the U. S. Bureau of Home Economics points out. In contrast, the built-in defrosters in new refrigerators operate for generally only 7-20 minutes, several times a day. They also have mechanisms to evaporate the collected frost water.

Tips For Good Health Plan Told In New Report To Unions

EVERY YEAR industrial workers lose almost half a billion man days and about $5 billion in wages because of accidents and illnesses.

So says a new leaflet published by the Committee for the Nation's Health, which goes on to show how workers can meet their needs for preventive, diagnostic, treatment and rehabilitation services.

TITLED "Short Guide to Health Insurance Plans for Union Members," the leaflet describes simply and completely the various forms of health plans available.

In a good health plan, CNH says, you should look for these things:

1. Service rather than cash benefits, because cash benefits mean there is always more to pay.

2. Health coverage for the entire family, because about 75% of a worker's health expenses are for his family.

3. The plan should cover all services whether administered in the hospital, the doctor's office, or in the home.

4. For most efficient and economical service, the plan should provide for doctors and other health personnel working as a team in group practice.

5. The plan should be democratically administered with subscribers having control, or at least adequate repreesntation, in making policy.

6. The plan should provide benefits the value of which are in line with the money invested.

The leaflet recommends that unions make a thorough investigation of their members' needs before establishing a new plan or with a view to improving an existing one. Single copies of the leaflet are available at 4c each from the Committee for the Nation's Health, 2212 M Street, N. W., Washington 7, D. C.

'Boost Consumer Purchasing Power To Prevent Depression'

THE AMERICAN Management Association heard a CIO Auto Worker suggest ways to avoid a depression.

John J. Dillon, UAW-CIO regional educational and political action director in New York, told a personnel conference of the AMA:

"The way to maintain full production is to assure the American people — worker, farmer, white-collar and professional groups — sufficient purchasing power."

Dillon said that American labor "rejects the defeatist attitude of the inevitability of depression." He predicted that "the full force of labor's united strength will be used to maintain purchasing power."

"Growing unemployment should concern the representatives of both management and labor," Dillon said. "The way to solve the problem is through joint planning now." (IPA)

Court Orders GE To Release Lamp Patents

THE GENERAL Electric Co. has been ordered by a Federal Court to release its rights to existing patents on incandescent lamps and their parts to the public.

Federal Judge Phillip Forman ordered the patents turned over to the public in a judgment enforcing his 1949 conviction of GE on charges of monopolizing the incandescent lamp industry in the U. S.

FORMAN, who filed a 105-page opinion in the case, said he believes it is the first time in a contested anti-trust case that such action was ordered. His order also applies to six other lamp supply manufacturers who were among eight firms convicted in the 1949 case of aiding GE to maintain a monopoly in the nation.

Forman also ordered GE to make available to the industry its blueprints for lamp machinery, and decreed that GE and the other defendants must end contracts and agreements with each other.

Grocery Chain Profits Jump

The Grand Union Co., which operates a chain of 300 retail food stores, was able to increase sales only 10.8% in the three months ending Aug. 29, but it boosted net profits by 50%.

Sales jumped from $46 million to $51 million during the period, while net profits soared from $373,730 to $565,090.

FTC Nails Big Food Firm For Illegal Brokerage Fees

IN A recent action the Federal Trade Commission has moved to stop one of the largest food wholesalers in the Midwest from receiving illegal brokerage fees.

Lagomarcine-Grupe of Burlington, Ia., has signed a consent settlement agreeing to stop violating the brokerage section of the Robinson-Patman Amendment to the Clayton Act.

THE VIOLATIONS occurred when Davenport Brokerage Co. of Davenport, Ia., a firm whose stock was owned entirely by the wholesaling company, received brokerage fees for purchases made by the parent organization.

The fees were later passed on as dividends to the stockholders of Lagomarcine-Grupe. The respondents specifically refrained from admitting or denying committing acts in violation of the law when they signed the settlement.

In a complaint issued against Woody Fashions, Inc. of New York, the commission says the company misbranded some of its coats as containing 20 to 30% cashmere, when actually they did not contain any. In addition, some of the coats failed to carry any labeling showing the fiber content and other information required by the Wool Products Labeling Act.

Bega Sewing Machine Corp., also of New York, was ordered by the commission to stop selling or distributing foreign made sewing machine heads without clearly and conspicuously disclosing the country of origin. The firm, which sells heads imported from Japan, was also ordered to stop representing that its machines are warranted without disclosing the nature of the warranty.

Carey Reelected To Charities Post

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and president of the CIO Electrical Workers, last week was re-elected to the board of directors of the National Conference of Catholic Charities at its meeting at St. Louis.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

THE CHANCE came last week to represent Pres. Reuther at a very important dinner, the Kick-Off Dinner sponsored by the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped and observing the ninth annual National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week.

The subject of proper treatment for those of our fellow citizens who happen to be handicapped physically is very close to the heart of our labor movement. We have carried on a long and hard fight to see to it that men and women are enabled to support themselves on the basis of their actual abilities rather than on some meaningless standards of physical well-being that have nothing to do with the job at hand.

Jim Marks, Jr., legislative representative for the Mine Workers Union, who attended the dinner and spoke, made a good point when he said that we should observe 52 weeks a year toward seeing the full employment of all workers based on their true capabilities.

THE RECORD is clear. So-called physically handicapped workers produce as much as their fellow workers who conform to all the accepted physical standards. Their safety record is the best that can be found.

To deny employment to the handicapped is not so much a blow to their hope and pride as it is a sheer waste of manpower at a time when it is vital to our national welfare. We of labor recognize the skill of our working men and women as a prime resource in the battle against dictatorship. It would be shameful if we were to toss away a great potential supply of this labor.

There is a heartwarming unity among labor on this subject, and a unity that extends to many foresighted employers, men of government, representatives of the press and clergy.

We have made sufficient progress as a nation to have given a merciful burial to the old notion that a man or woman who is physically handicapped should be an object of pity.

Yet, a great educational job remains to be done with employers who do not see the light, who have not as yet had the facts presented to them, and labor, beyond any other group of Amercians, is in perfect position to carry forward this work.

THE NATIONAL OFFICERS of your union, the officers of the internationals, local officers, council officers, and rank and file union members with whom I have talked are committed to all out support of the program of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped. And we are proud to make such committments.

By the way, the dinner was considerably enlivened by the presence of Al Capp, the cartoonist, who has created the comic strip "Li'l Abner." Mr. Capp is himself one of those who would ordinarily be called handicapped, having lost one of his legs—but none of his wit and intelligence.

In all walks of life, all over the nation, men and women who were once considered a drain on society are proving their value to themselves and their communities, though they do not measure up to what we have come to consider normal physical standards.

There was a great man named Franklin Delano Roosevelt. He did pretty well—handicapped.

Ike Answers On Hospitals

PRES. EISENHOWER has not decided whether the remaining merchant marine hospitals should be closed.

That's what he said in a letter replying to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther's protest against the request by Budget Dir. Joseph M. Dodge that the 155-year-old hospital program be discontinued. Dodge made the request in letters to Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, secretary of health, education and welfare.

"Because the program you referred to is authorized by law, no final decision can be reached until the matter is placed before the Congress for its consideration and action," the President wrote.

Meanwhile, Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, reported that the committee's campaign to save the hospitals is gaining momentum.

Steel Union Strikes File Firm In 3 Cities

PICKET LINES of CIO Steelworkers filed past the tightly-closed plants of the Nicholson File Co. in three cities last week as their strike went into its second month.

In Providence, R. I., Philadelphia and Anderson, Ind., strikers are determined that no settlement will be reached until all three plants get satisfactory contracts.

NEGOTIATIONS began in August with a union proposal for joint bargaining with the three plants involved. Separate talks were held when the company refused the USA-CIO offer. Wage increases for the main plant and the Anderson plant were denied and only token increases were offered by the company to meet. inequities existing at the Philadelphia plant.

Lawrence N. Spitz, sub-regional director in Providence, heads the union strategy committee directing the strike. Working with him are Pres. John Kelly of Local 4408 in Providence, Pres. Lawrence, Local 1944, Anderson, and Pres. Leonard Malinowski, Local 4826, Philadelphia. Staff Reps. Thomas Policastro of Providence; James Coyne, Philadelphia, and Harold Rasmussen, Anderson, also serve on the strategy team.

Picket Ban At Hearn's Appealed

THE NEW YORK State CIO Council last week requested a stay of the temporary injunction prohibiting picketing by the CIO Distributive, Processing & Office Workers at the two Hearn department stores in New York City.

The council acted immediately after the injunction was issued by the New York Appellate Division against the strikers who began their walkout after the store management stalled for months during negotiations. A court decision will require several weeks.

The New York City CIO Council scheduled a meeting of State and city CIO leaders for this week to determine what further steps should be taken. Before the injunction was issued, Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO reaffirmed backing for the DPO members.

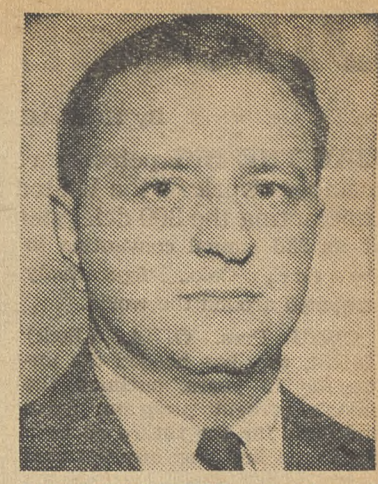
THE APPELLATE Division last week left the decision of whether a labor dispute existed for "determination of a plenary trial, which should be held without delay."

The stores contend the strikers are no longer employes, and cites dismissal of unfair labor practice charges by the National Labor Relations Board as vindication of this view. Meanwhile, DPO has filed new charges with NLRB.

Texas Textile Strike Voted

The 200 employes of the Taylor Bedding Co. voted unanimously last week to strike plants at Taylor and Benton, Tex., in a move to boost the pay scale above the Wage-Hour Act minimum of 75c an hour.

The workers picked the CIO Textile Workers as their bargaining representative in a National Labor Relations Board election nearly four months ago. Their efforts to negotiate a first contract have been blocked by the delaying tactics of former Gov. Dan Moody of Texas, who represents the company.



APPOINTMENT of Emil Starr of Baltimore as educational director of the CIO Clothing Workers was announced by ACW board meeting in St. Louis last week.

would have a $300 billion a year economy within five years. We now have a $375 billion economy, he pointed out.

Then he made another forecast. He predicted that by 1960, if we meet our needs and "go forward instead of standing still," we should have "at least a $475 billion economy, measured in uniform prices." And instead of 63 million jobs as at present, he went on, close to 70 millions Americans should be working.

"We now have the highest standard of living on record," he added, "but by 1960 it should be at least 30% higher."

If we stand still, he said, the armed forces we need in the cause of freedom will become a "terrible burden," but if we grow economically and produce increased amounts of the things we need, we can afford them.

"We are licked before we start if we set our goals for the future by the standards of the past. Let's talk about some new goals for America.

"In social security, for example, we should greatly improve and enlarge the present program and raise the living standards of its beneficiaries, in line with the needs and abilities of an economy moving from a $375 billion output to a $475 billion output.

"In housing, we must not be satisfied to move backward from 1.25 million new homes a year to a million new homes, or 900,000 or 800,000. Instead, we must move forward to 1.5 million or even two million new homes a year. Those who say we are in danger of overbuilding should look at America's slums.

"We must not look at the TVA and say that one such project is enough. We must not permit the underdevelopment of our waterpower.

"IN THE FIELD of education we must move forward boldly to provide opportunities for all the youth of America to get as much education as their native endowments entitle them to.

"In the matter of health, we must move forward to a comprehensive system of good medical care for every American family at costs they can afford.

"In international affairs, we must develop the kinds and amounts of international cooperation which will cement the free peoples of the world in an unbreakable union of growing economic and military strength.

"We must stop thinking about how we can just barely get by, and start thinking about how much we can do and how well."

In summation, the former President said:

"WE NEED faith, and boldness, and new ideas. We cannot be satisfied with past achievements, and the liberal and labor forces cannot be content just to sit by and issue warnings of disaster. We must understand the promise of the future, and act to make it come true."

Truman paid high tribute to the memory of Hillman, the late president of the CIO Clothing Workers, and described the Sidney Hillman Foundation as a "perfect embodiment" of the ideals that Hillman worked for.

HST Record Applauded By Potofsky

THE IMPRESSIVE record of former Pres. Harry S. Truman in serving the nation was spelled out in detail by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers in presenting him for the Sidney Hillman Foundation's annual award for meritorious service.

"What is it," he continued, "that has endeared this man to the people, to such an extent that despite the prophets of defeat, he won one of the most overwhelming election victories ever known?

"What is it that makes the ordinary citizen cry, 'Give 'em hell, Harry,' when he warms up to his subject? What is it that makes him revered and loved more than ever with each passing year?

"The answer, I think, is his great humility, his identification with the plain people. In his years in office, our nation faced new and terrifying problems. We had to find new answers and chart new paths. These answers were found under the leadership of a man dedicated and devoted to the plain people of the world."

Oil Coalition Pays Off On Wages, OWIU Told

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

LIKE THE BIG petroleum industry in which its 125,000 members work in the United States and Canada, problems confronting the 300 delegates to the Oil Workers Intl. Union at its 23d annual convention in Denver, Colo., figuratively stretched around the world.

OWIU Pres. O. A. (Jack) Knight, who has headed the union for 13 years, outlined the union's present program, gains and aims for the future on both the home and the international fronts in his keynote speech on the opening day, and a number of other CIO and outside speakers addressed the convention.

KNIGHT BLASTED the "Big Business Administration" now in control in Washington with its "millionaires' cabinet" and warned that labor could not "look forward to government intervention in a labor-management dispute that will be on the side of workers."

Speaking of the changes that have taken place in collective bargaining, Knight said it was easier in the old days of the "rugged individualist" type of oil operator who had come up the hard way and had some concern for the worker.

Today, Knight said, "lawyers, bankers, and others like them who don't know the workers' problems" intervene in collective bargaining.

Another difficulty in bargaining is the interlocking directorates of the major oil companies. Though still in competition in some respects, he said, the big oil firms cooperate economically and politically.

THE IMPORTANCE of strengthening the wage fight through the National Coalition of Oil Unions—CIO, AFL and independent—set up in 1951 was stressed by Knight.

"The net result of the previous long years of fighting other unions in the field was hatred," he said, but in two short years of cooperation, oil unions through the coalition won millions of dollars in wage increases.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther discussed labor's problems at home and abroad, saying that "we want a world where people can have both bread and freedom." The struggle against communism, he declared, "must be won on the bread and butter level."

Both the Communists and big business are "playing the same record," Reuther declared, when they say a depression is bound to come. "American labor rejects this defeatist attitude of the business community that we are going to drift into depression," he said.

With the powerful productive system the U. S. has developed, he said, there will be plenty of work, "if we gear the productive power of America to the needs of the people. For the first time in history, we have the tools to conquer hunger and misery."

Pres. George Cavender of the AFL Colorado State Federation of Labor, expressed the hope that "we can all become one great labor family in this country."

LATER in the week, Pres. Joseph Fisher of the CIO Utility workers, CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll and Pres. James Patton of the National Farmers Union addressed the Oil Workers.

In a speech urging practical union policies, Fisher said that organizers "must convince workers that the union can help them get more money and better working conditions." Delegates burst out laughing when Fisher said he'd rather be called a "porkchopper" or a "payroll termite" than a "labor statesman."

Patton told the delegates that "continuous attempts have been made to drive a wedge between the working farmer and organized labor."

Discussing the present political situation, Kroll warned that "we have to defend every bit of progress we've made in the past." The big business boys now in power, he said, "are trying to undermine every gain made."

In past hard times, Kroll said, it was always the labor movement "that carried the ball for the advancement of the people." This is still true today, he said, warning "you'll have to go out and fight if you want a better America."

UNIONISM MEANS UNITY, said banner at CIO Oil Workers convention on hall in Denver, and the OWIU demonstrated that by hearing Pres. George Cavender of the Colorado AFL. At speakers' table (from left): OWIU Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick, Vice Pres. B. J. Schafer, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight.

He Takes The Cake For Union Labels

Delegates J. F. Aiken from Sanford, Tex., was a doubly lucky man at the Oil Workers convention. He won two union label contests.

With a score of 13 union labels on his clothes, Aiken won first prize—a $100 U. S. bond—in the contest held by the Oil Workers. And in the CIO Clothing Workers' union label drawing, his name was pulled out first. Prize—a union-made suit of clothes.

OWIU Asks Shorter Hours To Prevent Job Layoffs

IMPORTANT ISSUES facing delegates to the OWIU convention in Denver had a one-world outlook. Resolutions, reports and policy programs, adopted during a week crammed with activity, extended from consideration of such bread-and-butter problems as continuing the improvement of wages and working conditions at home to ways of helping oppressed foreign oil workers to form free unions.

On the one hand were such resolutions as the one asking for a return of the 36-hour week as a means of preventing layoffs, "in cases of serious unemployment nationally or sharp reductions in work forces locally;" and those urging better safety provisions and improved health care programs—all passed unanimously.

ON THE OTHER were reports and resolutions concerning the hopeless misery of oil workers in the Near East; the cold-blooded campaign to destroy the petroleum workers' union in Venezuela and the West Indian islands of Curacao and Aruba; and the importance of supporting the formation, through the Intl. Confederation of Trade Unions, of a permanent world organization of petroleum, chemical and allied workers.

The link between union conditions in the U. S. and in foreign fields, was explained tersely by Pres. O. A. Knight when he told the delegates: "If the same opportunity for oppression existed here as exists there, we'd suffer the same fate."

Under the depressed labor conditions in foreign countries, Knight said, it is possible for companies to produce abroad and ship oil to the U. S. cheaper than it can be produced here. From a realistic standpoint, he said, "we must help foreign oil workers improve their wages and working conditions."

The delegates overwhemingly passed a resolution calling for support for a free trade union movement in Venezuela.

Also passed was a resolution approving the formation of an International Petroleum Trade Secretariat, "to coordinate the activities of petroleum, chemical and allied unions throughout the world."

Cleveland Next

The next CIO Oil Workers' convention will be held in Cleveland. At the Denver meeting, delegates eliminated the constitutional provision that conventions be held in the Colorado capital, which is the OWIU headquarters city.

3 Top Officers Are Unopposed

THE THREE top officers of the Oil Workers — Pres. O. A. Knight, Vice-Pres. B. J. Schafer and Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick—were nominated without opposition for re-election.

Under OWIU's constitution, a membership - wide referendum will be held to elect the three top officers as well as members of the Executive Council from the union's eight districts. The rank - and - filers nominated to serve on the eight-man council are:

Because He Believes In The Union . . .

By BILL SPENCER

(In the ACWA Advance)

JAMES JACKSON has spent the last 10 years of his life working and fighting for the CIO Clothing Workers.

From the day his shop was organized, he has served his fellow workers as an officer in Local 563. A bare two months ago he was named to the organizing staff in the State of Mississippi.

He believes in the union. He will defend his beliefs with his life—as he proved on the night of Aug. 31, when, in his home state of Mississippi, he was kidnapped by a squad of hired goons, pistol-whipped, kicked and mauled and then ordered to leave Benton County, where the brutal assault took place.

He was threatened with death if he should ever appear in Benton County again.

Slow Motion

More than a month ago, CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg asked the Justice Dept. to investigate the brutal beating of James Jackson, organizer for the CIO Clothing Workers, and to prosecute the local police officers involved in the pistol whipping in Ashland, Miss.

So far the only reply from Atty. Gen. Brownell and the Justice Dept.'s civil rights section has been that they are investigating.

Jackson spent six days in Forrest General Hospital, Hattiesburg, Miss., under medical treatment. The day he was released, he asked that he be reassigned to Benton County to continue the work he started at the Ashland-Benton Corp.

His forehead was criss-crossed with lacerations, and near his right temple was a purple-tinged swelling. A boot heel had done that.

The left side of his head was swollen and the skin over his left cheekbone was a yellowish-blue. His left eye was all but closed and he had been deafened in his left ear. The barrel of a pistol had done that.

His shoulders, chest, back and sides were a mass of blue-black bruises. Five pairs of fists had done that while two men held him helpless.

His left wrist could not be moved. While his arm was held pinned to the ground, the leader of the mob, Goon No. 1, had crashed his heel down upon it.

He was able to grin, though, and he was even inclined to brag a little bit about his appearance.

"I look a lot better than I did the last time you saw me, don't I?" he asked.

He certainly did.

I hadn't seen him since about 10 p.m. Aug. 31 when he was helped from his car in Columbus, Miss., after a 150-mile ride from Ashland. Behind him for more than 80 of those miles were two carloads of the mobsters who had ganged him.

He could not move his left arm—he had driven with one hand all the way. His blood-soaked shirt had to be cut from him before the doctor could examine him. He answered questions through painfully swollen lips.

"What do you do," he was asked, "when something like that happens—when about 20 thugs jump you?"

"You fight back," Jackson said, simply.

"What do you do when you can't fight any more?" he was asked again.

"When you can't fight any more, you're dead," Jackson said steadily. "I may be busted up a little bit, but I'm a long way from being dead. And if I have to keep on fighting for what I believe in, then I'll keep on fighting."

UAW Protests To Chrysler—

Shorter Work Week Cuts Auto Plant Wages

SHORTER work-weeks and smaller paychecks are adding to the unemployment problem. The CIO Auto Workers last week complained to Chrysler Corp. that "tens of thousands of workers have been working three or four days a week, some less than 16 hours" since last summer.

In a letter to John D. Leary, the firm's director of industrial relations, UAW Chrysler Dept. Dir. Norman Matthews pointed out that UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther warned last May that Chrysler's irresponsible scheduling of production in the first six months of 1953 would lead to this situation.

"Chrysler's planning has held workers' earnings or income near those of unemployment compensation benefits, and has provoked workers to the stage of protest within the plants," Matthews wrote.

HE ACCUSED the corporation of attempting "to take advantage of conditions which have been established over years of collective bargaining."

Matthews warned that UAW would not permit Chrysler to use the period of uncertainty "to subject and return our members to conditions which have been solved in past negotiations."

He demanded that the company "arrange its schedules to provide full work-week opportunities" for its workers and asked for a meeting with Leary to discuss the union's position in the matter.

The number of unemployed in Michigan now totals 118,000. At Columbus, O., the largest single layoff at one time in the history of Ternstedt Div. of General Motors occurred recently when 743 persons got their notices.

MORE LAYOFFS were scheduled for last week at the International Harvester plant at Melrose Park, Ill., where UAW-CIO members earlier had been hit by unemployment.

The staff of the President's Council of Economic Advisers reported that August showed that the trend of business is downward. It found that industrial output failed to spring back from the vacation decline, construction continued to drop, and factory hirings were the lowest for August since 1937. Other economic indicators were the failure of the expected seasonal rise in factory jobs to materialize and a small decline in private industrial payrolls.

Bosses Beginning To Be Gleeful

Employers are beginning to be gleeful over signs of a labor surplus.

The Wall Street Journal quotes an official of a large Houston department store: "We've always been able to hire human beings, but lately we've been getting workers."

"Job-seekers are snapping up jobs they sneered at last year," said a spokesman for a Cleveland employment agency.

Sugar-Coated Sales Tax Hit By Pollock

OPPOSITION to a federal sales tax by any other name or however coated with sugar came last week from several widely separated quarters.

Exec. Vice Pres. William Pollock of the CIO Textile Workers Union said Pres. Eisenhower was "less than candid" in trying to draw a distinction between a sales tax and a manufacturers' excise tax. Pollock noted that the President ruled out a sales tax at his recent press conference but refused to commit himself on a manufacturers' excise tax.

Pollock said this excise tax was "nothing but a cost-plus sales tax." He predicted a straight sales tax would cost the average family $125 a year but a manufacturers' excise levy, with wholesalers and retailers tacking on the usual markup, would cost the average family group $175 a year.

An appeal to patriotism will be the "buildup" for a sales tax drive, Rep. Emanuel Celler (D. N.Y.) predicted. Celler said the patriotism theme will be used "to take the Republicans out of the embarrassing position" of reneging on tax cuts.

Demos Beat GOP In Farm Belt By-Election

THE SHADOW of November 1954 fell over the Republicans last week as voters in Wisconsin's 9th District—in a nationally-watched poll of Farm Belt opinion—elected the first Democrat ever sent to Congress from that district.

In a special election, Democrat Lester Johnson, a lawyer, defeated GOP State Sen. Arthur Padrutt. The vote was 27,715 for Johnson to 21,357 for Padrutt.

TOP Republican leaders—before the balloting—had described the election as an important test of opinion on the Eisenhower Administration.

"This shows what labor and the farmers working together can do. I hope and expect there will be more demonstrations like this."

Wisconsin's 9th CD, strongly for the LaFollette Progressives some years ago, is in the southwest section of the state adjoining the Mississippi. While largely rural, there are some 4000 CIO union members in the district, principally in Eau Claire.

Johnson's campaign was strongly supported by the Eau Claire Political Action Committee and the Wisconsin State CIO-PAC, as well as by the AFL.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Yesterday's Promises

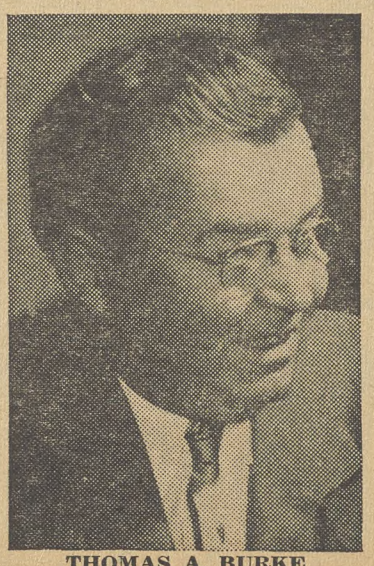
The National Plowing Contest, at which Sec. of Agriculture Benson spoke behind a double ring of state cops and barbed wire to a chilly farm audience, was held in the 9th CD.

GOP concern over the outcome was indicated by Gov. Walter J. Kohler, a longtime Eisenhower supporter, when he told a campaign rally "the civilized world will be watching your votes to learn whether the Eisenhower Administration truly has the support of this nation."

After the votes were counted in the first congressional race since Inauguration Day, some Republicans tried to write off the outcome. But the defeated Padrutt was more candid in saying:

"The results show very clearly that the farmers and laboring man do not like the present Administration's policies and took this opportunity to show their displeasure."

Cleveland's Mayor Burke Named To Senate



THOMAS A. BURKE
Named to Senate

CLEVELAND'S Mayor Thomas A. Burke last week was named U. S. Senator succeeding the late Sen. Taft (R. O.).

Burke's Senate post will come up for election in November, 1954. Ohio political circles were speculating that, at that time, Burke will run for Governor and Lausche will seek the Senate seat. There also were Ohio press reports that Robert A. Taft, Jr., will run.

Appointment of Burke, 10 weeks after the death from cancer of the GOP majority leader, will not upset Republican control of the narrowly-divided Senate.

The party lineup, with Burke's appointment, will be 48 Democrats, 47 Republicans and one independent.

The Democrats previously have said they wouldn't challenge GOP organization of the Senate before the '54 election. The lone independent, Oregon's Wayne Morse, last week reaffirmed a similar stand. And in case of a tie vote, Vice Pres. Nixon would have a deciding vote.

Burke, who is 54, long had been a political associate of Lausche. He served under Lausche when the latter was Cleveland's mayor, and then moved up to the mayoralty in 1945. He was reelected for four successive terms, receiving 70% of the vote in one election and a 2-to-1 majority in another.

Farmers Applaud CIO Fair Price Plea

By MILTON PLUMB

THE NATION'S farmers last week were assured again that the CIO will continue to give its full, "unconditional" support to government programs designed to produce prosperity for farmers and maximum agricultural output.

Testifying before the House Agriculture Committee at the first of its current series of hearings throughout the Midwest, two CIO spokesmen drew applause from the hundreds of farmers who packed the Minneapolis hearing room.

They were Robert Hess, president of the Minnesota CIO Council, and Assemblyman Howard F. Pellant of the 17th Wisconsin District, representing the CIO Auto Workers.

"CIO is here today because we want the farmers to know that we—the workers in the cities—are behind them 100% in their struggle for an adequate farm program," Hess said. "Our support of good farm legislation is not selfish, political or conditioned."

'Don't Be Misled'

Pellant, who is a UAW-CIO international representative in Milwaukee, warned the farmers not to be misled by propaganda against labor and city dwellers. Such efforts, he said, are intended to divide farmers and labor politically and thus prevent the enactment of farm price support programs and similar legislation to aid the agricultural economy.

"I want to make it absolutely clear to this committee," Pellant said, "that the city resident understands the farm economy and how it affects him and therefore he is in full support of a sound farm program."

Pointing out that the drop in farm prices and income which has occurred within the last year has already brought sharp reductions in purchases of farm machinery and other merchandise produced by city workers, he said that urban labor, too, has suffered directly through rising unemployment.

Business Hit, Too

"Reduced income for city workers, in turn, means fewer purchases from retail merchants and manufacturers in cities, as well as smaller food purchases," Pellant continued. "The cycle continues on through the small retail store to the manufacturer and on back from all these to the farmer and the rest of the world."

Comparing parity for the farmer to a guaranteed wage for city workers, Hess said CIO's support of the 100% parity concept has been "historic." (Parity is a complex method of figuring farm prices designed to insure farmers a "fair" share of the national income.)

"We continue to support the full 100%," Hess declared.

Previously, spokesman for nearly all of the farm groups had either attacked the price-support program or called for a minimum of only 90% of parity—the amount which had been favored in a resolution passed the day before by the Minnesota State Republican Farm Council. The Minnesota Farmers Union, and a few individuals, were the only others besides CIO to back full parity.

Grass Roots Backing

CIO's stand, however, was given the heaviest applause of any testimony by the grass roots "dirt" farmers who made up most of the audience. Although some 70 witnesses testified at the one-day hearing, the committee obviously had not expected such a large turnout of farmers.

Hess pointed out that CIO has historically supported the farm programs initiated and developed by the farmers since 1933.

"We are not here today to tell the farmer exactly and specifically what programs to adopt for the future," he continued. "We do believe, however, that a farm program should be a program of abundance and not of scarcity. It should provide adequate income for farmers, and provide a solution to the problem of perishables.

"It also should provide for soil conservation, irrigation, and flood control, including protection and rebuilding of the natural water sheds."

Both Hess and Pellant warned that unless steps are taken to check the present downward trend in farm income the only result possible would be another depression.

Farm Crisis Causes Layoffs

Here's what happens to city workers when farmers, because of lower incomes, are unable to buy the farm equipment and other products they need:

"Already in the farm implement industry, thousands of workers have been laid off from their jobs," UAW-CIO Intl. Rep. Howard F. Pellant told the House Agriculture Committee.

He cited the following examples:

Within the last few months, in the J. I. Case farm implement plant in Racine, Wis., almost two-thirds of the production work force have been laid off. The number employed fell from 3200 to the present level of 1200 and "if conditions do not improve, more layoffs are in sight."

The International Harvester Co. has undergone "layoffs running into the thousands."

Nash Motors of Kenosha, Wisc., has reduced its working force from a peak of 11,500 immediately prior to July 1953 to the present level of 6500. The Nash Body Plant in Milwaukee also has reduced its forces from 5500 prior to July to 2400 today.

Wisconsin Motors, Milwaukee industrial concern, has laid off 300 to 400 workers in recent weeks.

"These layoffs by the manufacturers of our basic commodities have also resulted in large curtailments of the working forces in supplier plants such as foundries, which have reduced production by 30% to 40%," Pellant said.

"We do not have to go back too many years to find the result of a drop in the farm economy," Pellant said. "The great depression of the early 30's was without question brought about by the farm depression of the 20's. We have the experience today to cope with these problems; we must put our know-how to work and prevent another chaotic and sad experience."

Store Prices High

Pellant said that, despite so-called farm "surpluses" actually America has not yet reached the stage of overproduction of agricultural commodities. Economic conditions, not their need, prevent many people from purchasing more food than they do, he pointed out.

Both CIO spokesmen also emphasized that despite the sharp drop in farm income, there has been only a very small reflection in consumer food prices. They said that since 1946, food prices for the average family have increased $294, but the farmer received only $66 of this amount, while processors, retailers and middlemen got $228.

"While we recognize the importance of profit in our way of life," Pellant declared, "we at the same time cannot allow exorbitant profits to destroy the very incentive of the farmers to produce."

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and three of Minnesota's Democratic representatives — McCarthy, Wier and Marshall—sat with the committee during the hearings and discussed problems with individual farmers, although none of them is a member of the Agricultural group. Rep. Andresen (R. Minn.), a member of the committee, shared the chair with Chairman Hope (R. Kans.).

Most of the complaints farmers have filed with the committee have been sharply critical of the policies of Agriculture Sec. Ezra Taft Benson.

In announcing the hearings, Hope declared that "It is important that city people understand that the farm problem is their problem, too."

AGRICULTURE Sec. Ezra Taft Benson last week announced his plan to reorganize the Agriculture Dept. It was met with mixed reaction.

The new set-up was highlighted by the abolition of seven regional offices of the Soil Conservation Service.

Sen. Johnson (D. S. C.), a member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, said that when the seven offices are liquidated, "the little farmers will be up against it."

"It will be building up the bureaucracy in Washington," he added.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) said Benson will be "breaking his pledge to Congress" if it carries out major changes in his department without giving Congress a chance to review them. He called on Benson to "withhold any action toward placing reorganization proposals into effect until Congress reconvenes."

Farm Group Protests

Humphrey said he was particularly concerned with the proposed changes in the Production & Marketing Administration and the SCS.

"We're not too darn happy," said Waters S. Davis, Jr., president of the National Association of Soil Conservation Districts. "This (plan) would completely emasculate the soil conservation district program."

Davis wired state association leaders the "elimination of the regional offices of the Soil Conservation Service" is the first step in wrecking the soil conservation program. He also warned them of a possible "grab" in the near future of state extension services.

All The Time Farmers Get Less

The cost of living now stands at a record high but the farmer is getting less and less for his products. Here is a table, prepared by the Public Affairs Institute, showing the declining share of the consumer food dollar going to the farmer for various products:

Product	High & Date		Jan.-Mar. 1953
Choice Beef	80c	(1946)	62c
Pork	74c	(1946)	65c
Butter	76c	(1948)	68c

Benson's Now In Hoover's Shoes

As the House Agriculture Committee moved from Minneapolis to Watertown, S. D., for further hearings, press reports quoted a Republican lawmaker as saying many farmers don't have confidence in Sec. of Agriculture Benson.

"Mentioning his name at a farm meeting," the GOP lawmaker said, "is like mentioning the name of Herbert Hoover."

Sen. Mundt (R. S. D.) said Benson should either resign or make it clear he will continue the high level support program for farmers.

The Labor Dept.

After nine months, Pres. Eisenhower abandoned his earlier stated belief that the Secretary of Labor should be chosen from the ranks of organized labor.

Organized labor still believes that the Secretary of Labor should come from the labor movement, just as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce are drawn from agriculture and industry. The CIO has stated repeatedly and has demonstrated by affirmative action that it is not interested in political patronage. We are interested in, and we shall judge the present Administration by, its policies and programs as they reflect the needs of all the American people.

Pres. Eisenhower deserved an "A" for effort in naming Martin Durkin in the first place. But it didn't work out —not because there was anything wrong in having a labor man in the cabinet position, but because the men around the President in the new Administration are pursuing policies and programs that would not permit any conscientious labor man to serve as Secretary of Labor.

Martin Durkin, a man of honor and good conscience, held the post as long as he could, in order to carry out the responsibilities of his office; but when he was confronted with Administration policies that were incompatible with the stated objectives of the Labor Dept.—as set forth in the law: "To advance the public interest by promoting the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, improving their working conditions and advancing their opportunities for profitable employment"—he had no choice but to resign.

The policies of the Administration remain unchanged, and we don't see how, in the present situation, any responsible trade union leader could have accepted the post—if it had been offered to him. So far as we know, nobody from labor was offered the post.

After the job had been vacant for a month, Pres. Eisenhower went outside the ranks of labor to choose a manpower expert and former management personnel executive, James P. Mitchell, to head the department. Mr. Mitchell "enjoys a good reputation among the labor people who have dealt with him across the bargaining table," as CIO Pres. Reuther has observed.

As Americans, we wish Sec. Mitchell well in his new position. His success can be measured by the only one true yardstick . . . whether his work advances "the public interest by promoting the welfare of the wage earners of the United States."

But Mr. Mitchell's good will is not going to be enough. It's not a matter of personality but one of policy, program and philosophy.

For Mr. Mitchell to be a successful Secretary of Labor there will have to be some new thinking in Washington.

The President must carry out his campaign promises to strengthen the Labor Dept. He must assert strong leadership as head of his Administration and his party, to end Republican efforts to emasculate the Department.

The President will have to give Sec. Mitchell more than a title and a word of praise. He will have, in addition, to stay the hand of those in the Republican Party who want to plunge a knife in labor's back. We can only hope that the President will provide the affirmative leadership which he promised the American people, by stopping the Republican attack on the Department of Labor and by advancing programs and policies to protect the interests of American wage earners.

Under Two Flags

In Other Words—

The Decline In American Prestige

The following is a condensation of an article on the test of U. S. leadership in Europe written for the (La Follette) Progressive Magazine by Otto Leichter, American correspondent for Swiss, German and Austrian publications, following his return from a lecture trip in Western Europe.

By OTTO LEICHTER

IT WAS IN Vienna during a lecture I gave on American economic development to Austrian municipal employes that I experienced the strongest reaction to a display of statistics on the growth of U. S. national income.

Although we had agreed on a question period later, a young man, upon seeing the figures on the board, burst out before I was well along:

"Here you see that the American economy has been thriving on wars only."

This comment was unusual only for its abruptness. I spent four months traveling over western Europe. I gave 30 lectures to a wide variety of audiences, and listened to many sharp, anxious, probing questions, heavy with doubt and suspicion, of our manners and motives. The experience convinced me that the reasons for the great decline in American prestige run deeper than many returning travelers suspect.

It is not alone resentment against the ostentatious rich.

Fear of Another Crash

Nor does it result exclusively from the change of party in power, although as a candidate Dwight D. Eisenhower lost most of his great popularity in Europe and has not regained it.

Nor is it solely the decrease in funds for economic aid to Europe—although the way Congress decreed the cuts shook Europe's confidence in the leadership of American diplomacy.

Nor does McCarthyism alone account for the loss of U. S. stature abroad.

All these causes contributed to the decline in American stock—but there was another reason more important than any of these factors.

I refer to the growing conviction that the United States cannot under present conservative leadership manage to keep on an even keel of full employment.

In the discussion which followed the outburst of that young man in Vienna, I was told: "Every economic expansion of the American economy during the 20th Century occurred during a war and each was followed by a depression."

Many of my listeners wanted to know whether there is a parallel between the reign of Big Business in the Weimar Republic under Gen. Hindenburg and present-day America under Gen. Eisenhower. Europeans think of the men of Big Business in the Eisenhower Administration as a strictly disciplined caucus—or even conspiracy.

Many of my listeners were afraid that the dominance of the profit motive of American Big Business would bode ill for their hopes for peace. And my listeners were typical Europeans.

Their feeling does not end with their economic evaluation. They go on to criticize U. S. foreign policy itself.

Emphasis Is Economic

What the official advocates of our diplomacy proudly hail as tough appear to Europeans as further proof of our business-conditioned unwillingness to compromise in the interest of a settlement. Many of my listeners interpreted our Far Eastern policy in this vein.

Even in the comments and queries on McCarthy the emphasis was economic.

In my first speech in Western Germany, I was shaken when I found myself obliged to answer arguments implying that the threat of war was greater from America than Russia. I soon discovered that this was a widely shared fear.

Does this mean that everything is lost for us? By no means. I emphasized for my European audiences the fact that depressions are man-made and not inevitable. Forward-looking economic policies, based on the goal of full employment and combined with democratic planning, could again overcome downward trends in the economy and help prevent depression.

Confidence in America has not been blacked out. But if we want to regain our lost stature, we shall have to prove that we are not leading the world toward economic disaster and war. We have to prove by facts and actions that we are willing and able to combine peaceful goals with the welfare and prosperity of our country and the rest of the world. This is the true test of American leadership in Western Europe.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ONE ELECTION doesn't prove a "trend" but the shocking defeat of the Republicans in the Wisconsin 9th District special election clearly means that GOP control of Congress after the 1954 political fight looks much less certain than it did 11 months ago.

Never in history had a Democrat carried the district before.

Even more significant, the beaten GOP candidate bluntly said that his defeat indicates "that the farmer and laboring man don't like this Administration's policies."

Quote

As Oklahoma's Mike Monroney observes, the Republicans are "cleaning up in Washington" and "they've made a mess out of the country."

Republican orators campaigned on a "support Ike" program. Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.), on the other hand, directly attacked Ike in the district as "a disappointing President"—the first Democrat who had the nerve to assail Mr. Eisenhower as an individual.

There were some changes visible even before the Wisconsin verdict. The situation of Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Douglas (D. Ill.) and Kefauver was vastly improved.

The Republicans still have Joe McCarthy poised to attack Humphrey and Douglas. They hope that Kefauver will be knocked out in the Tennessee Democratic primary. They have unlimited money to buy slick New York advertising agency techniques.

Kefauver's prestige is now substantially lifted—and he has the added advantage that Tennessee's people are indignant at the President's description of TVA as "creeping Socialism."

Farmers In Revolt

Minnesota farmers are obviously in revolt against Agriculture Sec. Benson. The liberal Farmers Union—anti-Benson—is taking members away from the conservative Farm Bureau Federation. One GOP congressman said that mentioning Benson's name in public "was like mentioning Hoover's."

The Republicans in Illinois haven't agreed on a candidate against Douglas. Harold Velde, un-American Activities chairman, wants to run, but he isn't sure he has the courage to try.

One disadvantage the Democrats have is that three of their liberal senators facing re-election fights next year—Murray of Montana, Green of Rhode Island, Neely of West Virginia—are advanced in years. But the party's chances look pretty bright, despite the persistence with which the people "like Ike" even while fuming at his subordinates.

The Burke Appointment

The funniest comment on the appointment of Mayor Thomas A. Burke (D.) of Cleveland as successor to the late Sen. Taft came from Rep. Bender (R. O.). Bender claimed that Burke was a flaming New Dealer and that his selection by Gov. Lausche was an insult to Taft's memory and the people of Ohio.

This is news to almost everyone.

Lausche himself isn't a flaming New Dealer. He didn't support the Democratic nominee against Taft in 1950—or even help the party find a strong nominee.

Lausche said he was hunting a "middle-of-the-roader" to succeed Taft, one who wouldn't be a "partisan" and vote to wrest control of the Senate from the minority Republicans. Burke promptly agreed that he was just that kind of man.

The thing eating at Bender is that he wants to go to the Senate himself in the 1954 election for the balance of Taft's term, and he is afraid of Burke's vote-getting powers. He's afraid of the other possible combination, under which Lausche would run for the Senate and Burke shift over to run for governor, thus putting in a new ticket of proved Democratic vote-pulling strength.

What Mitchell Faces

Comes now the report that the new Secretary of Labor, James P. Mitchell, will have broader powers than any secretary for years and that all labor matters must be "cleared" through him as the Administration's staff officer."

This observer has no doubt that Mitchell would like to have it that way, even that he may have a commitment from Mr. Eisenhower to sustain and support him.

As Secretary he must prove his actual strength, however, against the implacable influence of the budget-balancers, union-busters and NAM spokesmen both in other Administration jobs and in Congress.

Even Martin P. Durkin couldn't keep Congress from cutting Labor Dept. appropriations—in defiance of the President's campaign pledges—and if Mitchell can get them boosted substantially, he will be an authenticated miracle worker.

Sen. Smith (R. N.J.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, has already told Mitchell to shut his mouth about Taft-Hartley. Taft-Hartley carefully transferred mediation and conciliation work away from the Labor Dept., and if Mitchell can steal it back, or do anything else about the law, that will be a second miracle.

The Big Money In Politics...

McCarthy Latches On To Millions

By HENRY ZON

NEXT TIME a program called Facts Forum pops up on your television screen there are a couple of things you ought to keep in mind.

One of them is that newly named to the Federal Communications Commission, which has jurisdiction over all radio and television stations in the country, is Robert E. Lee, close friend of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.). Lee's only experience with television has been as guest moderator on the Facts Forum show.

Another is that Facts Forum, according to the Providence, R. I., Journal, is bankrolled by Texas oil millionaire H. L. Hunt, who plays close to McCarthy and the Republican senatorial campaign committee.

Lee disclaimed any influence by McCarthy on behalf of his appointment. He was director of investigations for the House Appropriations Committee and a former FBI agent.

His wife was matron of honor to McCarthy's bride at the Senator's recent wedding and both he and his wife actively participated in the 1950 senatorial election in Maryland which resulted in the unseating of McCarthy's number one political enemy, Millard Tydings.

Hearst Interests Involved

Lee said he moderated the Facts Forum program at Hunt's request in order to get the program started. McCarthy was a participant in the first program.

Pending before the FCC is a fight in Milwaukee over the allocation of television channel 10. McCarthy is backing a bid by the Hearst Corp. for the channel against the efforts of Milwaukee school officials. He called Paul Walker, FCC commissioner, to a session in his office and, according to some accounts, put the heat on Walker on behalf of the Hearst Corp. Lee replaces Walker on the commission.

The Pledge—

"I pledge to you that the forthcoming Republican administration will bring to Washington outstanding citizens representing every sector of our national life."

Omaha, Neb., Sept. 18, 1952
Candidate Eisenhower

—The Hedge

"It is possible that it could be a liability for a man to know too much about the field when he took office."

Robert E. Lee, newly-appointed to the Federal Communications Commission, Oct. 8, 1953

He related that he was approached by Victor Johnston, executive director of the Republican senatorial campaign committee, and asked to appear on the Facts Forum show with McCarthy. He was told he would be paid $125 and assured he would not have to be friendly to McCarthy.

Collins went on to say that by the following week end he "had talked with enough people to know that I didn't want any part of the program." He added that he was concerned with what McCarthy might do after the program was shot on film. "It is impossible," he wrote, "to feel that in dealing with McCarthy you have the protection of the ordinary rules of fair play."

Collins followed up by wiring Johnston and asking him what his connection was with oilman Hunt. Johnston replied that Hunt was just a man with an income of $2 or $3 million a week and that Johnston was just trying to help Hunt spend his money to elect "our kind of guys."

"So what it all comes down to," wrote Collins, "is that McCarthy has latched on to someone who has $2 or $3 million a week coming in, and that a result is going to be McCarthy's frequent appearance on television shows which are canned under his auspices and shipped around the country for release as straight discussion shows."

An Estimate Of '52 Spending

THE BIG MONEY in politics is getting bigger with every campaign, and reached a total of more than $23 million during the 1952 presidential and congressional races.

That's the estimate of the Congressional Quarterly, in a lengthy report on campaign spending as reported to the House.

The estimate is only partial. It doesn't cover much local political spending. But it gives a good indication of the way the bills run up—thanks to TV, the influx of big advertising agencies into politics, and the cost of politicking which climbs along with the cost of living.

Biggest spenders were Republican groups and candidates who reported spending $13.8 million, more than twice as much as was spent by Democratic backers and candidates whose expenditures were $6.2 million.

Total expenses of political labor groups amounted to $2 million, including expenditures for congressional and presidential campaigns, general educational and organizational spending.

CIO-PAC received for its individual contributions account $411,233 and spent $505,721, and received $352,969 for its education account and spent $433,258.

Only Part of Total

"There is an indeterminable amount of duplication in the expenditures reported by the two major parties," CQ said. "Local organizations give to state groups, and state organizations to national committees.

"The national groups, in turn, may return part of the same funds to the state and local groups. They are often recorded as expenditures by all the groups concerned.

"However, other factors more than offset the duplication, so that the total campaign cost is probably much more than the amount reported. Thousands of state and local groups spending heavily in federal elections are exempt from filing expenditure and contributions reports with the Clerk of the House."

Campaign expenditures in 1948—also a presidential year—were $13.5 million, a little more than half as much as the 1952 race.

Top Contributors

Big contributors to the Republicans' campaign in 1953 included some families whose names appear prominently on the financial and social pages.

Among these were the Rockefellers, $94,000; the DuPonts, $74,175; Pew family of Pennsylvania, $65,100; Mellons, $36,500; Fricks, $22,000; Weirs of Pennsylvania, $21,000; Paysons of Maine and Florida, $19,000.

Also, Harold S. Vanderbilts of New York and Virginia, $19,000; Alan Scaifes, Pennslyvania, $17,500; Goelets, New York and Rhode Island, $16,800; Milbanks, New York, $16,500; M. Robert Guggenheims, Washington, $13,000; Henry R. Luce, New York, $13,000.

In 1952, the highest individual expenditure was $53,000 by H. R. Cullen, Houston, Tex., multi-millionaire oilman and backer of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

Cullen made 31 contributions of $500 to $5000 to congressional candidates and four to Republican organizations. The largest amount the law allows as a contribution by an individual in a calendar year to any candidate for federal office is $5000.

His $5000 contributions were made to Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy Campaign Club, Texas Eisenhower Campaign Fund, Rep. Dies (D. Tex.), the Campaign for Sen. Daniel (D. Tex.) and the MacArthur Committee of N. J.

Douglas B. Marshall, another Houston multi-millionaire oilman, reported spending $12,750 in eight congressional races. Dana C. Smith, Pasadena, Calif., trustee of the famous Nixon Fund, stated he received $25,056 in contributions to aid the election of Vice Pres. Nixon, but that he spent only a small portion of the money. Smith said he turned over $13,000 to the United Republican Campaign Committee of Los Angeles and $8500 to the Republican National Committee.

A STRAPPING YOUNGSTER—the United Nations—is eight years old this week. It was on Oct. 24, 1945 that the UN was formally created at San Francisco, set forth on its multitude of tasks as a parliament of the world and as a forum for mankind's search for a peaceful and better life.

This is UN week, with anniversary celebrations in many U. S. communities reaching a climax next Saturday, Oct. 24, on UN Day.

American labor had a role in the UN's beginning, it has participated in and watched its growth, and it regards UN as "the world's best hope for peace."

Right now UN is under increasing attack by isolationists in the U. S. Shotgun attacks on the world organization appear to have replaced "twisting the lion's tail" as the stock-in-trade of reactionary politicians.

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations participated in the founding conference of the United Nations in 1945. Since then, each CIO convention has reaffirmed its support of the United Nations. We are firmly convinced that the world's best hope for peace lies in a strong world organization empowered to take collective action for collective security.

"We are, therefore, unalterably opposed to the efforts of a few misguided and unscrupulous organizations to undermine the faith of the American people in the United Nations. It is clear that there are groups in America who aim to destroy the United Nations, if they can, in a burst of isolationist nationalism.

"I want to call upon you to join in the fight against the un-American activities of these reckless individuals and organizations. It is the sincere conviction of the officers of the CIO that these enemies of the United Nations should be informed quite bluntly that their fight weakens and endangers the safety of the United States."

Plaques Placed In Memory Of Two CIO Leaders

By AL ZACK

THE CIO and free labor throughout the world last week joined in paying public, affectionate tribute to CIO's two late and great leaders, Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood.

In two-day ceremonies in Scotland and England, birthplaces of the men who had played a major role in the birth and building of the CIO, bronze plaques were dedicated to their memories.

The ceremonies took place at the Miners' Welfare House in Blantyre, Lanarkshire, Scotland, (Philip Murray's home town) and at the Yorkshire Miners Association in Barnsley, Yorkshire, England, (where young Allan Haywood first went to work in the mines).

Both ceremonies were arranged by the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation, created by the CIO shortly after the death of the late CIO president, and which was endowed with a million dollars in gifts contributed by CIO unions.

Pledge By Reuther

On the occasion of the Philip Murray plaque dedication in Scotland, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who had succeeded Murray, renewed his pledge "to continue and strengthen and expand the CIO in the democratic and humanitarian image which Philip Murray gave life and breath and meaning."

Compelling CIO business prevented Reuther from attending either of the overseas ceremonies, and the CIO was represented at the rites by:

James B. Carey, president of the IUE-CIO, secretary-treasurer of the CIO and secretary-treasurer of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation;

David J. McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Political Action Committee, and Murray's long-time colleague;

Families Are Represented

Also present at the ceremonies were members of the Murray family, Mrs. Allan S. Haywood, representatives of the British and Scottish Trade Unions, representatives of the British Government and the U. S. Ambassador to Great Britain, Winthrop Aldrich.

The great bronze plaques, which are 34 inches high and 26 inches wide, were executed by Harry Lewis Raul, prominent Washington sculptor.

Rieve told the trade union audiences at each of the ceremonies that "in his life time, by his own works, Philip Murray built a monument far greater than anything we could hope to dedicate to his memory." That monument, Rieve said, was "the trade union movement of the U. S., so much of which was created by Philip Murray's wisdom and inspired by his character."

(Detailed exerpts of Rieve's remarks at both ceremonies and a digest of the statements by Carey and McDonald are on following pages.)

Messages To British Ceremonies—

Reuther Pledges To Build CIO In Spirit of Happy Warriors

A PLEDGE "to continue and strengthen and expand the CIO in the democratic and humanitarian image which Philip Murray gave life and breath and meaning" was voiced by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther on occasion of the Murray-Haywood memorial ceremonies in the British Isles.

Reuther

Reuther voiced his "deep personal regret" that, because of the press of CIO duties, he was unable to attend the dedication of the Murray plaque at Blantyre, Lanarkshire, Scotland, and the ceremonies at Barnsley, Yorkshire, England, the birthplace of Allan S. Haywood, CIO's late executive vice president.

In a tribute to the Blantyre ceremonies, Reuther said in part:

"I want to express my gratitude to our colleagues in the Scottish and British union movement and in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions for joining in these ceremonies.

"It is fitting and proper that we honor the memory of Philip Murray, the man who was our friend and who, even in death, remains our inspiration.

"As Philip Murray's successor in the office of President of the CIO, I know that no man could ever hope to fill the unique role he occupies in the CIO and in the hearts of its millions of members.

"All that any of us who are left behind can hope to do is to continue and strengthen and expand the CIO in the democratic and humanitarian image to which Philip Murray gave life and breath and meaning."

'Our Happy Warrior'

In a similar message to Barnsley, Reuther paid this tribute to Haywood:

"He was our gallant and happy warrior, a man who gave every minute of his life, every ounce of his strength to our great trade union movement.

"Today, as we in the CIO pay tribute to his memory, our minds and hearts go back to the days when Allan Haywood was so much a part of the CIO, days it is hard to believe are now past.

"In the truest sense of the word, of course, that is not so. For so long as there is man or woman who proudly carries the card of a CIO union, Allan Haywood will be living.

"No words of ours can adequately pay tribute to this great man. All any of us can do is to demonstrate the same devotion to the CIO, which so characterized his life.

"Allan S. Haywood, the great organizer, the true trade unionist, the real humanitarian, will always live in our hearts."

Workers Of Britain Join Diplomats In Memorial Rites

By C. H. HARTWELL
Editor, TUC Labour

HIGH U. S. diplomatic representatives and British government and trade union leaders joined last week with official CIO representatives in paying tribute to the late Philip Murray and the late Allan S. Haywood.

In two-day ceremonies in Scotland and England, birthplaces of the man who had been president of the CIO for 12 event-packed years and of his longtime colleague, the late executive vice-president of the CIO, plaques were dedicated to their memory.

Begging a few minutes on an already overcrowded program, Winthrop Aldrich, United States Ambassador to Great Britain, was the first to testify to the character and achievements of Philip Murray.

Pays Personal Tribute

At the ceremony in the Miners' Welfare Institute in Blantyre, Scotland, Aldrich said:

"It is a personal tribute that I pay this man I knew as a great union leader and great humanitarian, who worked closely with me on projects for the relief of the victims of war in many parts of the world.

"His career exemplified everything that is finest in the relationships between the United States and the United Kingdom."

The Ambassador postponed making an urgent official visit to Germany so that he might be present when the plaque commemorating Murray's life work was unveiled at Blantyre.

The next day, Lincoln Gordon, United States Minister for Economic Affairs to London, represented Ambassador Aldrich on the platform at the Miners' Auditorium in Barnsley, Yorkshire, England, where Allan Haywood's memory was honored by the unveiling of a similar plaque.

Apart from these two diplomats, there was not a man in either union hall who did not have a trade union card in his pocket.

The ceremonies at both places were very much trade union occasions. They were dignified but warm, with friendly sympathy for the families of Murray and Haywood who were present.

Fraternal Good Will

There was evident fraternal good will for the American trade union movement, whose spokesmen traveled to Britain to honor Murray and Haywood in the island which gave them birth and their first lessons in trade unionism.

Seated with the men who earn their bread in the coal pits, the steel mills and the textile factories were civic dignitaries, members of Parliament, and former ministers in the British government—all still serving in the labor movement.

Rieve's Tribute To Murray—

'America's Unions Are His Living Monument...'

"The monument that will stand forever as a tribute to Philip Murray is the trade union movement of the United States."

So said Emil Rieve at the Murray memorial dedication at the Miners Welfare House, Blantyre, Lanarkshire, Scotland. Rieve is chairman of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation, president of the CIO Textile Workers and a vice president of the CIO. Text of his address:

DISTINGUISHED representatives of Her Majesty's Government; Your Excellency, The Ambassador of the United States to the Court of St. James; officials of the British and Scottish Trades Unions; officers of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions; members of the family of Philip Murray, ladies and gentlemen:

We are gathered here this afternoon to pay tribute to the memory of a great man—a great American, and a great Scotsman.

We who represent the Congress of Industrial Organizations are greatly honored and deeply touched to see here so many of our friends and colleagues from the trade union movement in Great Britain and in other free nations as well.

We, ourselves, have come many miles on a mission which Philip Murray would have dismissed with a smile and, perhaps, a little joke at his own expense. For this great union leader, this towering symbol of democracy, this citizen of the world, never lost for a moment his inborn sense of personal humility.

None Can Forget

In a very real sense, his attitude toward our mission would have been correct; for in his own lifetime, by his own works, Philip Murray built a monument far greater than anything we could hope to dedicate to his memory.

The monument that will stand forever as a tribute to Philip Murray is the trade union movement of the United States, so much of which was created by his wisdom and inspired by his character. This monument, pray God, will be far more lasting than anything built of wood or stone or metal. For it is a living monument, which means—not merely bread and butter—but security, dignity and happiness to millions of workers in my country.

Yet, none of us can forget, or should forget, that Philip Murray came from this country; that when he reached America, he proudly carried in his pocket a union card. More important than the card, itself, was the spirit in which he carried it.

When Philip Murray became a union member, in the mines of Scotland, he did not simply join an organization. He dedicated himself to a cause—the cause of human freedom and self-respect, the true brotherhood of man.

Philip Murray
A characteristic portrait

You, with your rich traditions, taught him well. He never forgot the lessons he learned in these surroundings. The man we knew and loved followed to the end the principles he learned here as a boy.

In America, Philip Murray soon achieved a position of union leadership. His fellow-miners were quick to recognize his keen intelligence, his ability in both organizing and administration, his foresight and his courage. Let us bear in mind that these qualities were also a part of Philip Murray; for a society cannot be reformed merely by a warm heart and the will to help others.

In the early years, of course, Philip Murray was known primarily to the members of his own union—the miners. But with the passage of time, he became an outstanding figure in a broader field; and finally, he became the president, the leader and the symbol of the CIO itself.

But the truest measure of his achievement is not in statistics, but in the homes and hearts of American workers. Thanks to Philip Murray, these are better homes and happier hearts; for he brought security to the aged, new opportunity to the young, and a richer life for all.

We who knew Philip Murray personally, as a friend and colleague, saw him in his moments of trial as well as triumph. Yet, we never saw him falter in his devotion to principle or in his faith in the people.

Work Goes On

He was, indeed, a devoted man—devoted to his church, his country, his family and his union. He, indeed, had faith in the people—faith that all men shared his code of fairness, honesty and integrity. Inevitably, there were men who disappointed him, who betrayed the code he lived by; it was such men who could stir him to righteous anger.

The millions of American workers who knew Philip Murray only from a distance, who never met him in person, sensed these qualities in him. They, too, knew him well; they recognized him as a great man, who still remained one of their own.

Yes, we shall miss Philip Murray. There is none who can take his place. Yet, his work must go on.

The fight to which Philip Murray devoted his life is not yet won. Upon us, who followed his leadership, falls the responsibility of carrying on the struggle for security, dignity and happiness in the homes of workers all over the world.

We cannot shirk this task; we dare not fail.

To succeed would be the one best tribute we could pay to Philip Murray, and the one he, himself, would have us offer to his memory.

Carey, McDonald Tributes—

They Saw The Dreams Of Peace, Freedom

TWO TOP CIO leaders, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. David J. McDonlad of the CIO United Steelworkers, joined in paying tribute to Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood at the ceremonies in Scotland and England.

Carey said the ceremonies honoring Murray were a "tribute to democracy itself—to the dreams of freedom, to the aspirations of the working people of the world."

McDonald, who succeeded Murray as Steelworkers president and who has been associated with him from the beginning of the steel union, called Murray "spiritually the richest man in America."

"There was never a stauncher advocate of true democracy, never a greater disciple of freedom, never a more valiant fighter for a world at peace than Philip Murray," said Carey, who is also president of the CIO Electrical Workers.

The People Count

Murray, he said, "built great unions, made them powerful instruments for obtaining justice for the workers who were those unions. But he was ever vigilant to insure that these unions remain completely democratic.

"For to Philip Murray it was the people who ran the organization, not the organization that ran the people.

"He believed, with all his heart and being, that the people should determine their own political and economic destiny. And he fashioned the unions he built in that image."

McDonald recalled the early days of the New Deal which opened "a vista of new and greater democracy." Then, he said, "it was entrusted to Philip Murray and to me to build a union in steel. There had been no national union in steel before. There had been poverty and misery; there had been espionage by the employers, and brutality by the police of the steel towns; there had been death and there had been fear in the hearts of the steel workers of America.

"Philip Murray more than any one man changed all that. Under his inspiring leadership, a union was built. That union has withstood attack from every source—from Communists and company agents, from anti-labor politicians.

"This plaque, which we from the CIO dedicate today, is but a tiny symbol of the affection and respect we held for our great leader, Philip Murray."

Optimism And Joy

"It is hard for me to believe that Allan Haywood—the man we used to call 'Mr. CIO'—would want this to be a sad occasion. Allan Haywood looked always to the future. The future he knew was a challenge for sound, democratic trade unionism; and he knew that sound, democratic trade unionism would meet that challenge. So, he looked at the future with optimism and joy—and since he was by nature a good-humored man, he saw no reason for sadness or despair.

"I think that Allan Haywood on this occasion would not want us to be sad or to spend too much time looking backward. He would want us rather to look forward. He would want us to roll the union on."

Carey said Haywood "typified the spirit of those millions of fine Americans, who chose to make our country their country.

"Allan Haywood became an American in every sense of the word—without once losing the great heritage of all born here (in England), the heritage of trade unionism. He was, I suppose, best characterized as a 'bread-and-butter trade unionist'—and, in saying that, I do great honor to Allan Haywood."

Rieve—

'We Are All The Better Because Of This Man's Life'

The text in part of the speech by Emil Rieve at the dedication of the memorial plaque to Allan S. Haywood at the Yorkshire Miners Association hall at Barnsley, Yorkshire, England, follows:

ALLAN HAYWOOD often said, "When you join a labor union, it's like joining a church, you work for nothing else and believe in nothing else."

There is no place in America where free men of labor have fought and suffered and triumphed that does not proudly say, "Here, too, fought Allan Haywood." For this stout-hearted man seemed to be everywhere; he went where the going was toughest, the battle hottest. No union was too small, no problem too insignificant, no cause too hopeless for Allan Haywood.

And when the men and women of our unions celebrated their victories, it was Allan Haywood who wanted to share their joy with them. For he knew how to laugh and enjoy life—and sing the songs of victories as he sang those of battles and of challenge.

The Born Crusader

Allan Haywood was rightfully known as "Mister CIO." No man in the American labor movement more completely personified the dynamic, crusading spirit of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. He was a born organizer, a born leader. He could inspire men to fight for their rights, to win the benefits they so richly deserved.

It has been said of Allan Haywood that he never slept, and that is almost true. For no man could have kept the schedule he kept, traveled as he traveled, worked as he worked and have had much time for sleep in the short 64 years that were allotted to him.

His doctors often urged Allan Haywood to stop, to rest, to take it easy. But it wasn't in this great, warm-hearted man to take it easy. His people needed him and he went.

He never forgot for a moment that democratic trade unions are organizations of the people. He never forgot that a union's strength comes from the people, and from the people's concern about the general welfare.

Allan Haywood never forgot the lessons he learned here in his native Yorkshire—the lesson that a man shall love and help his neighbor. And countless thousands of men and women, all over the United States, are happier, more contented and better people because Allan Haywood learned that lesson so well.

All of us, who knew and loved Allan Haywood, are the better because he lived. More than that, no man can say.

Homes For Miners—

2 Cottages In Barnsley To Honor Haywood

IN SCARLET cloak trimmed with ermine, his gold chain of office glinting in a shaft of autumn sunlight, George Burkinshaw, mayor of Barnsley, nodded approval as Ernest Jones, miners leader, expressed pleasure that two cottages will be erected in the Yorkshire town to honor the memory of Allan S. Haywood.

The mayor, like the previous two mayors of Barnsley, is a working miner, fitting in his civic duties between shifts in the pits and service as a part time agent of the local miners' union.

Wearing his mayoral cocked hat and preceded by a uniformed mace bearer crying "Pray silence for his worship, the mayor," he entered the crowded auditorium of the Yorkshire Miners headquarters to open the proceedings early Sunday afternoon.

Designate Haywood Cottages

He heard Emil Rieve announce that the Philip Murray Foundation desired to construct two cottages in the neighborhood to be known as the Allan Haywood cottages. Generous applause greeted this announcement and the statement by Jones giving thanks for the gesture associating American trade unionists with the work his union was seeking to do in providing homes for mining veterans who have given their working years to the service of the industry and the labor movement.

There, said Jones, they will live in security of tenure and social happiness in a way that would have delighted the heart of Haywood.

He said he was equally pleased with the reception given in Blantyre, Scotland, the previous day to another announcement by Rieve that there, too, the Foundation trustees had the oldsters in mind.

Murray Memorial Room

Many veteran miners, cloth-capped and mufflered, were present to applaud the decision to equip a room in the Miners' Welfare Institute where they and their mates who have dug the coal without which Britain's industries would come to a standstill will be able to sit in comfort and reminisce about the days gone by and of union men who struggled to make today so much better than yesterday for those who earn their bread in darkness underground.

Around Blantyre and Barnsley are grim reminders of the old days before the labor movement was strong enough to compel social security, safety precautions, health services and public housing projects.

The very house where Philip Murray was born, a low, cramped, two room stone dwelling, is still occupied by a miner and his family, though it is steadily rotting away. Soon it is to be demolished.

New Towns Going Up

From Blantyre and neighboring villages a dozen families a week are moving to Kilbride, five miles away, where one of Britain's 14 new towns is going up complete with its own schools, shops and factories in white concrete and centrally-heated homes of red brick.

From all but three of Blantyre's pits every ounce of coal has been extracted and the six-foot high banner with its scarlet fringe that union officials carry in Labour Day parades bears the caption "The Price of Coal" beneath the stern record of the number of men who have lost their lives digging it.

In Barnsley, too, the mark of coal is everywhere. "Black Barnsley" it has been called for a couple of centuries and from the town hall roof the winding-gear of 27 collieries can be seen. In these pits bituminous coal is hewn from seams that run in depth from 30 inches to four feet.

In the center of the town the spike-crowned headquarters of the Yorkshire Miners has stood for 70 years. In and around the building are memorials to the men who brought the local miners' lodges together into a powerful Yorkshire Association a hundred years ago, then welded themselves into a nationwide organization which today has more than 640,000 members.

In the hall lighted by stained glass windows in which vignettes of mining scenes are set is a bust of Benjamin Pickard, straight-speaking Yorkshire giant of a man, who was the dominant figure of trade unionism in the coalfields of Britain and Europe in the 1890's.

There are also busts of Herbert Smith, first president of the Miners National Federation, never without his cloth cap even when he called on the king, and of Joseph Hall, who years after leaving the pits to become president was still the leading hero in pit disaster rescue teams.

The plaque to Allan Haywood has joined them. It is in good company.

Almost Every Man Packed A Union Card

Daly's mind carries to this day a picture of Murray as a white-faced boy, leaning from a train carriage window on the long journey which began so humbly in a Scottish railway station and ended in triumphant leadership of the six million men and women of the CIO.

There were others present who knew only of the achievements of U. S. trade unionism and the contribution American labor has made to the defense of workers' freedom all over the world.

From all came ready applause as one after another, the leaders of Britain's mine workers and steel workers, the Scottish and British Trades Union Congresses, the CIO and the international labor movement spoke in simple, affectionate terms of these two men who gave all of their energies and talents to the service of trade unionism until the very end.

Praised As Leader

From Sir William Lawther, president of the British Miners Union, came this tribute: "Philip Murray was a great man, a great Christian and one of the world's foremost union leaders."

David J. McDonald, president of the CIO Steelworkers and Murray's longtime colleague in that union, departed from his prepared text to say: "Thank you people of Blantyre for giving us Philip Murray, this boy with the brogue of Scotland on his tongue, who taught me trade unionism and who led in the building of our great unions on the fundamental philosophy which was born in Britain."

Joint Effort

This special section of the CIO News covering the memorial exercises and dedication of plaques to Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood was prepared with the cooperation of C. H. Hartwell, editor of the British Trades Union Congress magazine, Labour; Harry Read, assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; and Lew Carliner of the CIO European office publicity staff.

From Hans Gottfurcht, assistant general secretary of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, came this tribute: "Philip Murray was an outstanding internationalist, who had known hardship and hunger himself and who realized that poverty anywhere is a menace to prosperity everywhere."

"The friend of man, the friend of truth,
the friend of age and guide of youth;
Few hearts like his with virtue warmed,
Few heads with knowledge so informed,
If there's another world, he lives in bliss;
If there is none, he made the best of this."

John Lang of the Scottish Steelworkers recalled the gift from the United Steelworkers of America which enabled the British steel union to open its convalescent home for sick members.

Daniel Kellachah, a local miners' official, declared: "We'll not forget Philip Murray and the CIO. Another branch of the CIO has been formed in Blantyre today."

Then the whole audience arose unbidden to its feet as Philip Murray's American nephew, Philip Murray Curran, and his Scottish cousin, Mrs. Edward Kelly, made their way quietly to the corner where the deep crimson and purple curtain veiled the plaque.

The curtain moved gently into narrow folds. There was complete silence as every eye observed the profile of Philip Murray, the man.

The silent homage continued for a few moments. Then it was broken by applause —a salute to the man's achievements.

Unplanned and unrehearsed, the unveiling ceremony evoked the same response of silence and then applause at Barnsley the next day when the Allan Haywood plaque was dedicated.

Haywood's Widow Takes Part

Walter Goodall, Allan Haywood's cousin, gently aided Mrs. Haywood, who was brave and dignified, as she unveiled the plaque which bore the profile of the man she had married in that same town 44 years ago.

In Yorkshire, as in Scotland, the occasion was one of pride rather than one of sadness. At Barnsley, they remembered Haywood's fondness for singing union songs.

McDonald retold the Flanagan story, which Haywood delighted in telling at meetings and on organizing campaigns and added, "Allan Haywood was a great guy. Yorkshire must be very proud of him."

Sir Vincent Tewson, general secretary of the British Trades Union Congress, spoke of Haywood as a "cheerful, lovable character, who was like a bulldozer at top speed when he encountered injustice and intolerance."

Allan Haywood's request to the recording angel, he said, would have been:

"Write me as one who loves his fellow men."

Says Millions Loved Haywood

Eiler Jansen, the Danish trade union leader who represented the ICFTU at the ceremonies, said Haywood was loved by millions for the man he was, but that the memorial was testimony to the progressive, dynamic trade unionism of America, fighting for the needs of humanity throughout the world.

Sir William Lawther, who retires soon from his post as president of the British Miners Union, pronounced the words that marked the end of the two ceremonies:

"In the few months that lie before me, I know no greater honor can come my way. For as long as memory lasts, we shall be proud to honor these two men, so loved and respected by their fellow men."

Looking To '54—

For 40 Years Neely Has Fought For People

FOR OVER 25 years, Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.) has been trying to get Congress to act to stamp out cancer—"mankind's most aggressive, merciless and agonizing foe."

Known to his colleagues as the Senate's "most humane" member, Neely has been in the forefront of every major battle for the people's interests since he came to Congress 40 years ago.

Veterans, workers, farmers, minority groups, small businessmen and the aged and infirm have all benefited greatly from his service.

In the field of labor legislation alone, Neely has supported the workers' interests on more than 100 important measures. He fought for the Adamson eight-hour law, for the ban on child labor and many other basic economic remedies.

The Guffey Coal Bill which ended cutthroat competition in mining and brought American miners the highest living standards ever enjoyed was pushed through the Senate largely by his efforts.

Record For His State

Every honor the people of a state can give has been showered on this man born in a log cabin, who rose from a teacher's job at $35 a month.

He is the only West Virginian elected to all three offices of congressman, governor and senator. He is the only person his state has ever chosen to fill the latter post four times, and is perhaps the only person in American history to resign from the Senate to become governor and then later return to Congress for an active second service.

Yet, despite his unusually varied legislative career, Neely today believes that his long—and thus far not completed—effort to halt the devastation of cancer is the most important battle he has ever waged.

"MAYOR" NEELY (second from right) presides over the government of the nation's capital city as chairman of Senate District Committee when Democrats have a majority. Last year, he led major drive against crime.

No other man in Congress has made as unremitting a fight against the disease which may prove to be a greater threat to man's survival than ever the hydrogen bomb.

"Mankind is confronted with the dilemma of destroying cancer or being destroyed by it," Neely points out. "If the present rate of increase in deaths by cancer and that of population growth remain constant, ultimately there won't be a human being left on this planet."

In 1928, when Neely introduced the first bill ever offered to provide adequate appropriations for cancer research, one American died of cancer every five minutes. Last year, the rate was one death every 2 minutes and 40 seconds.

War Against Cancer

During the second World War, nearly twice as many Americans died of cancer as were killed in the same period by the deadly weapons of our enemies. U. S. participation in the war cost over $221 million a day.

The Hogs Apparently Are More Important

Sen. Neely's pending S. 188 would appropriate $100 million for "a supreme endeavor to discover means of curing and preventing cancer."

The first Neely measure called for an appropriation of $5 million for cancer research, although less than $15,000 was then being spent each year for this purpose. It passed the Senate but died in the House.

Defeated for reelection in 1928, Neely persuaded Sen. Harris (D. Ga.) to re-introduce his measure the following year. It made no headway in the Republican Congress. Meanwhile, Harris died of cancer.

Neely conferred with medical experts at Johns Hopkins and Maryland Univ. and became even more convinced that separate federal appropriations for cancer research were imperative. He resumed his fight after being returned to the Senate in 1930, and shortly succeeded in having a cancer research appropriation of over $6 million voted.

Thus began the federal aid program which, however inadequate, has been largely responsible for what progress has been made toward curing the disease. Cancer, however, has continued to gain ground, and Neely has kept pressing forward his demand for an adequate counter-attack.

State Campaigns

Re-elected to the Senate in 1936, Neely, who has always been in close touch with the people of his state, became increasingly concerned about conditions in West Virginia, where racketeers had gained political power. In 1940, with two years of his term still to run, he took the almost unprecedented step of resigning from the Senate to run for governor.

His term in the State House is generally regarded as the most progressive in the state's history. He improved hospitals, schools, penal institutions and other state agencies, created the pioneering State Human Relations Commission to protect minorities, and administered the state so soundly that he built up a $14 million cash surplus in its treasury. The interest rate on state bonds hit a record low.

As governor, he established a Bureau for Cancer Treatment and Control and pushed through the first state appropriations for cancer clinics. Another of his innovations was traveling cancer detection unit, sent throughout the state.

Neely returned to Congress in 1946 when his term as governor expired. This time he was re-elected as the representative of the first district, which had previously sent him to the House in 1913, 1914, 1916 and 1918. One of his first acts was to introduce a bill calling for an appropriation of $100 million, and the creation of a special commission, to war on cancer.

Toll In The Senate

When the 79th Congress voted on his bill, it lost in the House by 14 votes. Neely has continued to sponsor a similar bill in all subsequent Congresses. Instead of an all-out fight, Congress has voted at the best only small piece-meal funds for cancer research. They would have been even less if Neely and other liberals like Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) had not fought Republican-led moves to cut or eliminate them entirely.

Within the last two years four Senators have died of cancer. Sen. Vandenberg (R. Mich.), whose leadership in bipartisan foreign policy has never been replaced, was the first. Others were Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.), unequalled in his knowledge of the atomic problem, and GOP Sens. Wherry (Neb.) and Taft (O.).

Former Pres. Truman asked $22 million for cancer research this year, but Pres. Eisenhower cut this back to $15 million. When both the House and Senate refused to go along, Health, Education and Welfare Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby fought the proposed increases tooth and nail.

Shocked by Taft's death, however, Congress ended up voting $20 million. Sen. Robertson (D. Va.) felt it necessary to express the hope that, in being overruled, Mrs. Hobby "would not violate the law of Congress" by refusing to spend these funds.

Plans A Fight

Ironically, Taft had always opposed federal funds for cancer research. In 1949 he moved to kill an amendment that would have added $15 million for this purpose, and Congress finally voted only $4 million of that amount. The following year he voted against an addition of $17 million, which lost by 12 votes.

Neely's latest cancer bill, which he introduced the opening day of this Congress, has been pigeonholed ever since. He intends to fight for it again next session. He's enough of a realist, however, to discount its chances under present GOP leadership.

"I'm running for a fifth term in the Senate," he says, "because I think we're near to victory in the cancer fight. I want to finish the job."

If he succeeds the half million Americans who now have cancer, and the 17 million others now alive who will contact it in their lifetimes, will owe still another tremendous debt to the man called "pre-eminently the people's spokesman" of the Senate.

M.P.

'We're Beginning To Check The Reactionary Tide—'

"LIBERALS NEED today only to keep up their courage. Already there are signs we're beginning to check the reactionary tide."

That's the view of Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.), who three times had his career in Congress interrupted by Republican landslides similar to the one which swept the GOP into power last fall.

The Harding victory in 1920 cost him the House seat he had held from 1913, and the Hoover landslide of 1928 booted him out after six years in the Senate.

Returning to the House after serving 1941 to 1945 as governor of his state, Neely lost out again in the wave of reaction that swept the Republican 80th Congress into power.

EACH TIME, Neely was re-elected to Congress in the next election. On two occasions, in 1922 and 1948, he rose from the House to the Senate in the process. In 1930, he rewon the Senate seat for which he was defeated in 1928, taking it by the biggest majority given to any Democrat in the state's history. He won re-election even more easily in 1936.

These experiences have given Neely perspective in the face of reaction. He thinks the present situation resembles the set-backs liberals have suffered in the past.

"The people cannot fail to know the big difference between what the Republicans promised in the last campaign and what they've done since taking over," Neely points out. "Not as many false promises have been made and then ignored since the election of Hoover."

DURING the last campaign, Neely predicted that if Eisenhower were elected, he would prove to be "one of the greatest disappointments" as President in our history, because he would be "like putty" in the hands of the big business forces behind him. Recent events, such as Administration backtracking on Taft-Hartley promises, seem to be making his prediction come true.

"The big fellows in control are going to wreck the economy just as they've done every time they're in power," he says. "Only, I think, as in the past, when they go too far, they'll find the people will step in again and throw them out."

A Slow Burn Is Easy, But What Local Did Is Better

IT WAS EASY for members of CIO Steelworkers Local 1104 in Lorain, Ohio, to be burned up at their State Legislature. But it wasn't enough. They wanted to do something about it. And they did.

The Ohio Legislature, among other things, failed to increase workers' compensation benefits, as the CIO had urged. Local 1104 sent a committee to the Lorain County election board to check the membership, the first time they tackled this essential task so early.

They found 8500 members living in areas requiring registration and 3500 of this group not registered.

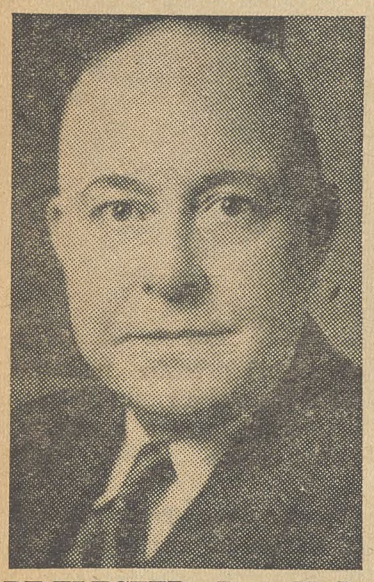
Pres. Steven Caruso and PAC Chairman Frank Horvath have started the machinery to insure the registration of those 3500 before voting day.

Local 1104 concedes the Legislature has a lot of power. But so do the people on Election Day.

IWA President Testifies—

Timber Raid In Northwest Hit

THE CIO has strongly protested an attempted raid by private lumber interests on the national park system in the Northwest. Pres. A. F. Hartung of the CIO Woodworkers appeared at a recent hearing before the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee at Port Angeles, Wash., to give the views of the CIO and IWA-CIO on the proposal to cut down the size of Olympic Park for the benefit of the lumber industry.



RE-ELECTED—Pres. H. L. Daggett (above), Sec.-Treas. W. O. Holmes and other top officers of CIO Marine Engineers were re-elected in recent membership referendum.

"WE PROPOSE that the publicly and privately owned commercial forests be gotten back into sound productive conditions and put on genuine sustained yield," Hartung said. "This is the only way to take care of the job problems, the security problems, the community problems, and the problems of production in the Pacific Northwest.

Hartung said that the American standard of living "includes more than food, clothing, shelter and the various kinds of gadgets we think we need."

"It includes," he added, "a desirable general environment within which to live our lives; it includes a lot of good outdoor country for recreational purposes . . .

"THE BEAUTY of much of the park country is precisely the fact that it represents old growth stands which are now very rare, and represents natural conditions which can provide great enjoyment for large numbers of people. Such things are irreplaceable and can be protected only inside a national park.

"Our problems of having enough timber to cut and enough lumber and wood products to satisfy our needs as a nation cannot be met by cutting down our parks. The big timber stands on Olympic Park would be gone in a few brief years if they were opened up.

"There might be a temporary boom in our industry in a few places, followed by a collapse. The long-range recreational asset and the employment dependent on it would be gone."

"PROGRESS with the community, not at the expense of the community" was the slogan seen by thousands at Greater Los Angeles CIO booth at the "biggest county fair in the world" at Pomona, Calif. Bobbie Torrance, 4, draws ticket awarding four auto tires to John Saller, Los Angeles policeman. Some 100,000 CIO pamphlets were distributed. Council Sec.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford is third from right.

Ike Aims New Firing Rule At U.S. Aides

GOVERNMENT employes may now be fired for refusing to testify before a Congressional committee on the grounds of self-incrimination, it was directed last week by Pres. Eisenhower.

The new ruling was an added eighth ground for discharge covering security requirements for government employes. Seven others were issued April 27.

EARLIER, an Air Force security board recommended the discharge of a young reserve officer —for too close and continuing a relationship with his family.

The inquiry board said 26-year-old Lt. Milo Radulovich should be fired as a security risk although his own loyalty—established in World War II—was never questioned.

Three colonels decided that Radulovich was a dubious risk because, they claimed, his father read "radical" papers in his native Croatian language and his sister walked in a Communist picket line.

EMIL MAZEY, CIO Auto Workers secretary-treasurer and director of its Veterans Dept., rallied to the defense of Radulovich, who is married and the father of two children. Mazey protested to Air Force Sec. Harold E. Talbott that the veteran's father exercised his constitutional right to read what he pleased and the sister had expressed her right of assembly.

The matter now goes to Washington for review before the top brass of the Air Force. Radulovich promised he would fight even harder for retention of his commission. He had denied Communist leanings by his father. As for his sister, he said, "I can't help it if she goes off the deep end."

ICFTU Urges UN To Act On Tunisia

THE INTL. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has appealed to the United Nations General Assembly to settle the conflict between France and Tunisia and Morocco.

The ICFTU message to the governmental delegations of the Assembly, now meeting in New York, called for establishment of a UN Good Offices Committee to end the dispute.

The ICFTU pointed out that, although the last Assembly called on the three nations to reach a fair solution, France has continued "to apply arbitrary and repressive measures on an increasing scale" in both countries.

Many Tunisian trade union leaders are in jail, active union members are victimized, hundreds have been held for trial and some have been summarily executed. The murderers of Farhat Hached, ICFTU executive board member are still at large.

Farm-Labor Program Gains Reported To Kansas CIO

A SUCCESSFUL farm-labor public relations program at state and local fairs was reported by officers at the Kansas CIO Council convention at Emporia.

Approximately 190,000 pamphlets and circulars were distributed at the Kansas State Fair, Hutchinson; Topeka Free Fair, Tri-State Fair, Coffeyville, and the Chautauqua Live Stock Exposition, Sedan.

Lt. Gov. Fred Hall, a Republican, told delegates that "for so long as the country continues on a upward spiral of costs, benefits under the labor laws can only go in the same direction."

Kenneth T. Anderson, Democratic national committeman for Kansas, said "when Defense Sec. Charles E. Wilson let it slip that 'What is good for General Motors is good for the nation,' it revealed the thinking of those running our government now."

Other speakers included Carl McPeak, assistant director of CIO Councils, and Philip Weightman, CIO-PAC representative.

Stanley Hubbard, representative of the Communications Workers and former president of CWA Local 6331, Kansas City, was elected president succeeding Willard Murphy, nine-time president, who did not seek reelection.

H. J. Yount, Auto Workers, was elected secretary-treasurer for his eleventh year. Other officers elected were: Leland Cox, UAW, first vice president; L. B. Van Landingham, Chemical Workers, second vice president, and Howard Hoy, Packinghouse Workers, third vice president.

CIO Councils In Action

THE "OFF-YEAR" city, county and occasional legislative and congressional elections coming up in November are "on-year" contests for labor's political action forces, judging from current reports from CIO councils and PACs around the country. Some highlights:

● In Cincinnati, CIO and allied groups are pushing the campaign of unionist Albert C. Jordan as one of the nine Charter Ticket candidates for the City Council. Citing the fact that living costs are at a peak and "probably going higher," he urges enactment of a city rent control ordinance. Jordan is a CIO Steelworkers staff representative, officer of city and Ohio CIO Councils.

● The Greater Los Angeles Council has voted four endorsements for special legislative elections on Nov. 10: George L. Arnold for Congress in the 24th CD, and for the Assembly: Frank G. Bonelli in the 52nd AD, J. H. Brown in the 58th AD, and C. H. Wilson in the 66th AD.

● In Buffalo, N. Y., the Erie County PAC convention endorsed Richard Lipsitz, Liberal Party candidate for mayor, and five city council candidates.

● The Michigan State Council has called a two-day, statewide political action conference of all local CIO councils for next weekend at Lansing, first of a series of planning meetings "for an intensive political action drive aimed at victory in the 1954 elections."

● At Lorain, O., Democratic Mayor John C. Jaworski has been unanimously endorsed for re-election by PAC conference of 14,000-member CIO Steelworkers locals in the city.

● In Fort Worth, Tex., the Tarrant County Council has assigned Frank Barron of Communications Workers Local 10677 to full-time work on PAC poll tax drive to get voters qualified. Deputies have been sworn in to sign up voters at several plants. And a PAC education drive is getting rolling.

● In Pennsylvania, State CIO Sec.-Treas. Harry Block was co-chairman of a joint CIO-AFL labor panel at recent state industrial safety conference. Two labor federations urged "equal representation" for labor with industry and government in safety program, strengthened state inspection and enforcement. Pennsylvania CIO also has issued guide for locals on all newly-effective changes in the state unemployment compensation law as voted by the recent session of the Legislature.

● Advocates of workers' education scored a gain in Michigan when the State College announced an expanded program in the field, headed by Stoyan Menton. Menton has been workshops director for Michigan State CIO summer schools. CIO and AFL representatives will advise on the new program.

● The Iowa State CIO Council, has named a four-man Executive Board committee to confer with state Democratic Party Farm Committee to explore efforts to improve farmer-labor cooperation and understanding.

Good Neighbors

"Operation Tornado, Jr." was held over a recent weekend in Flint, Mich., to continue the job of rebuilding workers' homes demolished in last June's twister.

Some 50 more homes were roofed over in the latest community building bee.

Like the big-scale repair job earlier, in which some 80 homes were built, the Flint Auto Workers and other CIO unions joined with AFL building trades unions in spearheading the project.

'Wheel Of Fortune' Spins— And 2 Steelworkers Win

By JAMES GEDLING

(Editor, Lorain Labor Leader)

A STORY in the Lorain (O.) Labor Leader gained for two Lorain CIO Steelworkers their appearance on the "Wheel of Fortune" television program and won them more than $400 in prizes.

The Leader, weekly newspaper of USA-CIO Local 1104, on Aug. 1 carried a short front page story about the bravery of James Passanisi, who doubtless saved the life of William Kayatin.

An open-hearth tap hole blew out, showering Kayatin with molten metal. Disregarding his personal safety, Passanisi put his fingers in Kayatin's ear to extract the red-hot metal.

As she read the story, Mrs. Amos Beachler, also of Lorain, realized that both men would probably need financial assistance. She clipped the story and mailed it to the "Wheel of Fortune" program. A representative of the TV program immediately got in touch with Local 1104 to learn more about the incident.

THE RESULTS: the two men were advised that they had been selected to appear on the program. They were flown to New York City and given accommodations at the Henry Hudson Hotel, with all expenses paid.

For appearing on the program and telling about their experience, they received better than $400 in prizes.

Kayatin won an extra bonus: While a patient in St. Joseph's Hospital, Lorain, he fell in love with his nurse. He proposed, was accepted, and the wedding is scheduled for Christmas time.

Douglas Fears Union-Busting NLRB Rules

SEN. DOUGLAS (D. Ill.) last week warned that the Republican-packed National Labor Relations Board may adopt "new union-busting restrictions" on unions without a change in the Taft-Hartley Law.

Pres. Eisenhower has named two new Republican members to the NLRB, and is expected to name a third, which would give the GOP a majority.

"I would warn that we should be wary of a reconstituted Republican majority of the NLRB making the labor law still worse," Douglas said. The dissents of the new chairman (Guy Famer), in several cases already herald a probable change in the interpretation of the law to make it more tough on unions.

"We may see the Board packed so that some employers may get new union-busting restrictions adopted. The weapons which can be used to break unions in a time of depression are still in that law. I do not believe the people of this country want collective bargaining to be thus sacrificed.

"THEY ALL have an interest in industrial peace, and should join labor in this hard job, to win some fair revision of the Taft-Hartley Law from this Administration, even if it does not go as far as you and I know we must go to restore practical sense to our industrial relations."

Douglas, who spoke at the convention of the Illinois AFL at Springfield, also blasted the GOP give-away program.

"There is nothing slow about this program," the Illinois Senator said. "It's not a creeping give-away. It's already a galloping give-away, and worse is yet to come."

CWA Drives For Independents As 4500 N. Y. Workers Ballot

THE CIO Communications Workers are stepping up the campaign to gain affiliation of presently independent telephone unions.

Some 4500 workers represented by the Empire State Telephone Union, employes of the New York Bell firm in upper New York State started balloting last week on affiliation with CWA-CIO. Balloting will be completed by Nov. 16.

At an overflow meeting at Buffalo, CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said "New York telephone workers can best obtain proper wages and working conditions only through unity in a national telephone workers union."

HE PLEDGED CWA "would take immediate steps to unite other employes of the New York Telephone Co. into CWA," should ESTU lead the way by voting affirmatively in the referendum. Beirne described the Northeast as the "last major citadel on independent unionism in our industry."

At the same meeting, the ESTU president urged all members of the union to vote for CWA affiliation, an action which he said would bring "maximum unity" in a single, nationwide union.

"CWA is the only such union," he said. "Over the years it has taken the lead in the effort to win better wages and conditions for all telephone workers."

MEANWHILE, a settlement with Chesapeake & Potomac Co. of Virginia brought all the Bell System firms to terms with CWA. The contract provides $1 to $2.50 weekly pay increases, boosts of $1 weekly in minimum wage rates and reclassification for employes in some cities.

Bell agreements brought an additional $50 million a year to 326,255 workers for an average increase of 6.5c an hour.

In Canada, CWA signed a contract with the provincially-owned Saskatchewan Government Telephones bringing a 5.5% increase in basic wages in all progressive wage steps. Other gains included doubletime pay for Christmas and New Year's Eve work, evening and night differentials for plant workers, and a boost of 10c in night differentials.

Gov. Dewey On Hot Seat As Racket Scandal Grows

NEW YORK'S Republican governor, Thomas E. Dewey, last week called a special session of the Legislature as New York and New Jersey GOP ties to the rackets burst into print.

Center of the rapidly breaking scandal was convicted extortionist Joseph Fay, former vice president of the AFL Operating Engineers Union, now serving a 7½-to-15 year prison sentence for extortion and conspiracy.

- Lieut.-Gov. Arthur H. Wicks of New York, who is also GOP leader in the Senate, had been a frequent visitor to Fay's cell;
- Paul L. Troast, Republican nominee for governor of neighboring New Jersey, had urged Dewey to commute Fay's sentence;
- A host of Republican bigwigs had tripped to the huge New York prison to pass through Fay's swinging cell door before he was moved from Sing Sing to isolated Dannemora prison.

Dewey, who had ridden to political power as a crime buster, first asked for Wicks' resignation. The lieutenant-governor refused. By law he succeeds to Dewey's job if the governor quits to take an oft-rumored top appointment in the Eisenhower cabinet, dies, or leaves the state for any reason.

Then Dewey called the special session of the Legislature to pass on Wicks' fitness to hold his two offices, state senator and acting lieutenant governor.

The session, which opens Nov. 17, would be a test of Dewey's position as leader of the powerful New York Republican party. It would also mark a crucial point in the political career of the two-time GOP presidential nominee.

WICK'S refusal to resign meant Dewey would not leave the state until the issue is settled by the Legislature. He agreed with reporters that he was "something of a prisoner in the state."

Meantime, ties of other GOP leaders to New York rackets, including the Yonkers and Roosevelt Raceways, was being exposed.

Republican National Committeeman J. Russell Sprague and William F. Bleakley, former GOP candidate for governor, were revealed to be among big stockholders of New York race tracks in the news in connection with the slaying of Thomas F. Lewis, Bronx labor leader.

LEWIS had been president of an AFL Building Service Employes local and his murder has been tied to race track rackets. According to New York police, convict Fay may know something about the slaying.

In New Jersey, the Democratic gubernatorial candidate, Robert B. Meyner, said it was "shocking" to learn his Republican opponent "should be so entangled with the racketeering elements that he should try to use his influence with the Republican governor of another state to free a racketeer."

Book Review

Cy Ching Recalls Years Of Service

AS A YOUNG MAN, Cyrus Ching, a young employe of the Boston streetcar system, grabbed hold of a live wire. The 5000 amperes that coursed through his body not only stopped traffic all over the trolley system but sent him to the hospital for four months.

As one of the country's leading mediators in labor-management disputes, Cy Ching was on a hot spot numerous times after that—though with less wear and tear on his body. In fact, he gained a reputation for humanity and humor from both labor and management; and, as head of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service under Pres. Truman, helped to settle hundreds of disputes in every part of the nation.

Now in a new book entitled "Review and Reflection," Cy Ching looks back over a long career and offers some advice and suggestions for the future.

The book is most successful, perhaps, when Ching describes his explorations into the field of labor-management relations as a personnel man for such firms as the Boston Elevated and U. S. Rubber Co. Cy Ching—a big man of "five feet 19.5 inches"—was a big man in seeing the need for better communication between workers and management.

He was repelled by the old way—the way of labor spies; thuggery; opposition to each and every proposal of the workers; and determination to deny workers the opportunity for collective bargaining.

IN 1920, Ching recalls, he and an official of International Harvester addressed a meeting of the National Metal Trades Association in New York.

"Both of us talked . . . of the need for developing a better understanding with employes," Ching recalls. "We suggested this might be done by establishment of some means of communication—for example, joint worker-management plant committees. We did not suggest anything so 'radical' as unionization of the plants.

"But when we had finished, the chairman of the meeting, a prominent industrialist who is still active, rose and said:

" 'Gentlemen, you have just heard two talks on Bolshevism. We will now proceed with the business of the meeting.' "

It's a long way that America has gone during those 30 years, Ching points out; and he notes that "there can be no substitute in advancing the best interests of both workers and employers, for a democratically and intelligently run union, operating apart from the cloak of management."

CYRUS CHING

AT THE SAME time, he argues for greater understanding on both sides of the bargaining table for the other's viewpoint and needs. Ching also looks, with justifiable pride, at the work of the Conciliation and Mediation Service under his leadership.

There are sections of the book on which trade union members may disagree with Ching: his coolness to the idea of bargaining for pension programs and his criticisms of industry-wide bargaining. On the other hand, he helps set the record straight, in the face of employer propaganda campaigns, about the government's actions in the 1949 and 1952 steel disputes.

All in all, it's an interesting, colorful book—by one of the most warm-hearted, popular men who served his government during the wartime and post-war periods.

You And Your Money—

Mead Dissents From FTC Rule Lifting Curb On 'Free' Offers

"THE CASE of the 'free' books which were not free" last week caused Federal Trade Commissioner James M. Mead to write a sharp dissent to the FTC majority decision that overturned long-standing policy to protect the consumer against such fraudulent advertising.

Mead's dissent was written after a review of the case by the FTC against Walter J. Black, Inc., trading as The Classics Club and the Detective Book Club. Backing up Black's lawyers in the action were counsel for the publishing house of Doubleday & Co., Inc., and the Book-of-the-Month Club.

'A Solomon Decision'

FTC had charged the Black firms with "false, misleading and deceptive use of the word 'free' in connection with sale" of its books. A majority of the commissioners voted to dismiss the complaint, thereby making it unnecessary to rule on the exceptions claimed by the respondent to the initial decision of the FTC hearing examiner.

Mead's dissent commented that "the majority believe that they made a Solomon decision and neatly disposed of a vexatious problem. I suggest that their decision has not solved the problem. It has only postponed a problem which will return in a different but more difficult and virulent form on the question of compliance."

In 1948, Mead recalled, the FTC's experience with the unqualified use of the word "free" in advertising led to a tightening of the requirements on its use.

"The value of the word 'free' is that it is a short expressive word which can be used in headlines and in bold print to catch the eye of the reader," Mead pointed out. "A perusal of the advertisements in any daily paper will reveal the various catch phrases used by advertising specialists to attract the eye of the reader. The unqualified use of the word 'free' in advertisements is usually untrue."

"At best," the dissent went on, "the 1948 policy was definite. The advertiser was informed that he could not describe goods as free unless they were free. Under the new policy the advertiser is allowed to use a literally untrue statement provided he uses it reasonably. The new policy has the virtue of flexibility and the vice of uncertainty."

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

A WORKING WOMAN in Connecticut—a domestic worker at that—recently signed a contract to have a "mastic" paint job done on her house for $1200. That's right: twelve hundred dollars.

The salesman assured her it was genuine mastic paint applied by air pressure, which would insulate her house, preserve it and would last many years. A bank granted an FHA home improvement loan to pay the $1200.

New Hearing

The Supreme Court has taken another look at Federal Trade Commission cases involving misleading advertising of patent medicines.

In a decision last week, the high court ordered FTC to conduct new hearings on the government's charge of false advertising against makers of Carter's Little Liver Pills.

The case has been under way for almost 10 years, with FTC ordering Carter's to stop 15 advertising claims.

Now she is squawking to the Better Business Bureau. For like many others who recently have bought these $1000 "plastic" or "mastic" paint jobs, with FHA loans arranged by the promoters, she is now wondering whether the claims the salesman made are really true, and why she ever let herself go into hock for so much money to paint her house.

Mastic or "plastic" paint jobs originated on the West Coast and enjoyed a big boom there last year until the authorities started getting after the promoters. Now the promotion is moving East. The worst trouble spots currently are Texas and Kentucky, the Association of Better Business Bureaus reports, but the sales pitch now has reached the East Coast too.

Perhaps you yourself have been approached by a salesman for a plastic or mastic paint job, or have gotten a circular or seen newspaper ads for it. The promoters made many promises: that this compression-applied paint "wears like steel," will insulate, termite-proof, make the house water tight, prevent decay, etc. Also, that the mastic or plastic paint (various promoters use different names for it) will not crack, chip or peel. But most of all they issue "guarantees" ranging from 10 to 20 years, and in their ads and circulars go even further, some claiming a mastic paint job will "last indefinitely" (whatever that means) and "eliminates the need for any future painting." Sometimes the material used is promoted as plastic siding.

A Powerful Appeal

That is a powerful appeal to a homeowner. As Thomas C. Roberts of the Better Business Bureau group points out, a homeowner figures an ordinary house painting costs him $300-$400. If a $1000 job will last 20 years, it would seem to be a money-saver. If a homeowner has also suffered a paint failure like cross-checking or blistering, he will be further intrigued by the promise of a "permanent" paint job.

But if the high-cost pressure-applied thick coat of mastic paint actually would do all that was promised, it might be the worst thing you could do to your house.

The mastic covering applied to the house is often four to five times the thickness of a good coating of ordinary house paint. But the Forest Products Laboratory of the U. S. Agriculture Dept. points out that as the thickness of the paint covering on your house increases, both the paint and wood underneath are more subject to deterioration. (In fact it doesn't pay to paint your house too often even with ordinary paint.)

But what about the guarantee on the mastic or plastic jobs? Actually a guarantee is only as good as the guarantor. Roberts reports there have been complaints of such coverings cracking within three or four weeks after application. If the $1000 job does crack or peel, the promoter may or may not be still be around. If the job has been done by a local contractor of good reputation, you have someone to call upon to make good the guarantee. You can always contact your local Better Business Bureau to check the record and reputation of a contractor.

The role of the banks and FHA in the mastic-paint promotion is not a very favorable one. Apparently the banks don't care if the $1000 home-improvement loan they grant is worthwhile or not, as long as the Government guarantees repayment through its FHA program. But the FHA at least should try to see that its guaranteed loans do not become an aid to promoters of dubious ideas.

By HAROLD SENIOR

AS THEY have done every year since 1944, the members of Unity Lodge, CIO Auto Workers Local 405 of Hartford, Conn., recently played hosts to a number of veterans who lost their sight in World War II.

The setting for the event was Avon (Conn.) Old Farms School, where 24 veterans and their families caught 250 trout ranging in size from eight to 18 inches in Beaver Dam, which had been stocked by the local.

They played various games and participated in athletic events. They ate 100 barbecued chickens, 40 pounds of hamburgers, 20 pounds of hot dogs, 300 ears of corn, seven large watermelons, 200 cups of ice cream, 125 bags of potato chips and a large quantity of candy. Not to mention 19 cases of beer, 30 cases of soda and other potables.

Noting the enthusiasm with which the guests went after the trout, the local arranged to keep Beaver Dam open for them the week following the picnic so the vets could catch fish that got away.

The veterans' children were shown a good time too, with the winner of each event receiving a silver dollar and each of the youngsters getting a silver dollar as a memento of the occasion.

Chests Name 5 As CSC Aides

Five CIO Community Services staff representatives have been assigned to local community chests, according to Leo Perlis, CIO-CSC national director.

Brownell Named To U. S. Education Post

Pres. Eisenhower last week appointed Samuel M. Brownell of Hamden, Conn., brother of the Attorney General, as U. S. Commissioner of Education.

A Republican, Brownell has been president of New Haven State Teachers College since 1947 and professor of educational administration at the Yale graduate school since 1948. Brownell, 53, succeeds the late Lee M. Thurston.

UAW Local Sets Record; 92% Give To Trenton Fund

THE GREATEST employe contribution in the history of joint fund raising in Trenton, N. J., was the $98,390.35 for the Delaware Valley United Fund, reported from workers of the General Motors Ternstedt division, members of CIO Auto Workers Local 731.

The figure exceeded the quota set for the 5700 employes in the plant by over $16,000. It includes contributions from 92% of the people in the plant and averages slightly over $17 per person.

Louis Persico, local president, said, "We are very proud of the response shown by Ternstedt employes to our endorsement of this worthwhile cause. We have overwhelmingly stepped up to our civic obligations and urge everyone in the community to do likewise."

Macy's Joins In Profit Parade

The profit-climbing parade of big retail stores has been joined by R. H. Macy & Co., nationwide department store operator. For the fiscal year ending Aug. 1, Macy's net sales remained about the same as for the previous year but profits rose by 74.5% from $2.7 million to $4.8 million. (LPA)

Surgeons Plan Campaign Against Needless Operations

THE 18,000-member American College of Surgeons is going to step up its drive against unnecessary operations and other unethical practices.

The organization's board of regents at a Chicago meeting declared that most local medical societies have failed to expose and punish unethical practices, including unnecessary operations, "ghost surgery" and fee splitting.

The surgeons again backed their director, Dr. Paul W. Hawley, former Veterans Administration medical chief, who last year charged that many unnecessary operations were performed for money. In fee-splitting a general practitioner refers a patient to a surgeon, who operates and then splits the fee with the first medic.

In "ghost" surgery the operation is performed by a surgeon other than the one engaged by the patient after the latter is anesthetized.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

ONE DISTINGUISHED American was honored in the name of another 10 days ago, when I was present at the Hillman Foundation dinner in St. Louis at which former Pres. Harry S. Truman was given the Sidney Hillman Award.

Mr. Truman, needless to say, was in fine form. I have noted, in traveling across the country how much the stature of the man has increased since his term of office has passed.

There is no doubt he grows in the affection of the people, as they seem to reach a better understanding of his aims and accomplishments now that all the heat of the political campaigns is behind him. The labor movement could not bestow an honor on any more worthy recipient.

THE FARMERS and workingmen around Eau Claire, Wis., have had their say, recently, when they sent the first Democrat to Congress ever to be elected from that area.

Much credit for an all-out educational campaign should go to the Wisconsin CIO Council, and in particular to those CIO locals in that district who worked so hard with their brothers among the farmers to give the House of Representatives another liberal voice.

I am familiar with many of those workers. A great number are farmers as well as industrial workers. They have a close understanding of the problems of the men who till the soil, and those problems are becoming increasingly severe every day.

It is a fact that widespread distress is spreading through the farm areas of the country.

We have in our memories the grim reminder of the conditions that went before the crash and depression of the Thirties. No one of us, in the national leadership of CIO, feels that another "1932" is inevitable, particularly when the rank and file of our union is obviously so determined to take the political action to head off such conditions.

WE ARE HOPEFUL, however, that the bonds of understanding between farmers and industrial workers will be strengthened and broadened. We cannot live in a nation that is half properous. We cannot hope to hold up our high standard of living, achieved through our united trade union action, unless we do all in our power to see that the farmer's standard of living is protected.

While many theories have been advanced by political experts as to the actual causes of the Republican defeat in Wisconsin, there appears to be no doubt that farmers across the country are angered and dismayed by the lack of policy on the part of the present Administration.

A simple expression of sympathy, on our part, is not sufficient help. Farmers have had enough lip service. We must be prepared to back a constructive farm program, that represents the farmers wishes and best interests, with all the resources we can bring to their aid.

Virginia Is 'New Frontier,' Pollock Tells State CIO

VIRGINIA and other southeastern states are the "new frontier" whose future course will determine the destiny of America and a free world, Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock of the CIO Textile Workers told the Virginia State CIO convention recently in Roanoke.

Just as Virginians were leading figures "in the first straight fight for freedom on this continent," Pollock said, they and other Southerners may play a decisive role in the battle for freedom which, he said, faces the nation today as a result of the policies of the Eisenhower Administration.

"YOU ARE on the frontier—the frontier of industry; the frontier of liberal thoughts; the frontier of unionism," Pollock said.

"If you conquer the wilderness of reaction, you will assure the freedom, the prosperity and the civilization, not only of the South, but of the nation. If you fail, we may all be overwhelmed by social and economic disaster."

A liberal South, Pollock told the convention, can swing the balance to a liberal America; a reactionary South, a Dixiecrat South, will insure the continuing triumph of reaction.

Pollock flayed the Eisenhower Administration for what he described as its policy of "coddling the millionaire and ignoring the worker." This, he said, tended to widen the gap between rich and poor, "a tragic reversal of 20 years of social progress."

"An administration which spares no effort in behalf of private profit, but which thinks $1 an hour is too much for cotton workers, is a threat to the American ideal and a powerful instrument of Communist propaganda all over the world," Pollock said.

IUE Wins Again In Dixie

IUE-CIO scored its latest victory at the Selma, Ala., plant of the Independent Lock Co., where it won a National Labor Relations Board election by a vote of 119 to 80 for no union.

The union has a contract at the Fitchburg, Mass., plant of the same firm. Three other CIO unions aided in the Selma campaign—Communications Workers, Steelworkers and Textile Workers.

IUE-CIO recently won representation rights for 1500 workers at the General Electric plant at Anniston, Ala.

TWU Forces N.Y. Transit Agency To Okeh Subway-Bus Hearing

By JOSEPH J. KUTCH

THE CIO Transport Workers have won a significant victory over the New York City Transit Authority.

The TWU obtained an agreement with the New York City Transit Authority to allow State Supreme Court Justice Walter R. Hart to act as an impartial adviser in the hot, two-month dispute over schedules on bus and subway lines. Hearings opened last week.

TWU Local 100 also took the dispute over cutting down subway and bus service to the public. It distributed circulars pointing out that adding a car to a 10-car subway train was a safety hazard and that over crowding of buses obstructs drivers.

The union is seeking a one-year contract with the state-created Authority, a 25c an hour pay increase, three weeks' vacation after one year's service, cutting in half the time required to reach the top rate in each grade and 11 paid holidays. There also are a number of other demands.

The schedule dispute arose when TA refused to consult with TWU over its members' objection to the new schedules. TWU then demanded a conference with the Authority and when this was ignored, the union insisted on an impartial adviser as provided by the memorandum of understanding between TWU and TA.

The Authority refused this demand, as it also rejected a committee appointed by Mayor Vincent Impellitteri to adjudicate the dispute.

The union then went to court to get an injunction against the new schedules and for an order on the Authority to live up to the memorandum. The out-of-court agreement on impartial review followed, and the union withdrew the suit which was scheduled for a hearing before Judge Hart.

Although the Authority is not legally bound to accept the adviser's decision, TA's predecessor, the Board of Transportation, found itself morally bound to follow the recommendations issued under such procedure in the past.

Gas, Coke Out 11 Weeks At Koppers

The toughened attitude towards unions, as a result of Administration policies, was blamed in part for the strike and events preceding it. Vice Pres. Joe Joy of UGCCW-CIO said there was a marked change in the tone of negotiations with many firms since last November's elections.

The Kearny plant personnel manager told negotiators that during the past 12 years "the union got the notion it was necessary around here." From here on in, he advised union officials, "the union becomes part of the labor relations picture after the fact, not before the fact any more."

The union requested a 10c wage increase, liberalized pensions and representation on the plant safety committee.

The company countered with a 5c offer contingent on the union giving up many of the contract gains won over a dozen years including seniority and other provisions.

AN INJUNCTION limiting picketing was obtained from New Jersey courts. Unfair labor practice charges have been filed by the union and a suit for slander may be instituted because of statements contained in company-circulated letters against Local 92 Pres. Edwin McGowan.

A meeting of Chemical Workers local representatives from other plants of the Koppers firm was held last week in Newark, N. J., to discuss the changed attitude of the company and the future policy of the union.

CIO Suit Fights Union Ban On State Employes

JUST WHAT RIGHTS does a citizen have if he is a government employe? That's the question the courts will have to decide in a case filed by the CIO Government & Civic Employes in Birmingham, seeking to block enforcement of the Solomon Bill passed in the last session of the Alabama legislature.

The bill provides that any public employe who joins or retains his membership in a labor union forfeits his right to his job and all other rights under the state civil service merit system.

THE CASE was filed by the firm of Cooper, Mitch and Black under the direction of CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, who also represents the GCEOC.

The case is based on the fact that E. J. Habshey is threatened with loss of his job in a retail liquor store operated by the Alabama Alcoholic Beverage Control Board if he retains his membership in the GCEOC.

The case arose when the board's administrator, R. P. McRee wrote Neal Cockrell, president of the local, in answer to a wire of inquiry that the board expects to enforce the law. Defendants in the case are S. F. Windsor, store supervisor for the district; Felix L. Parsons, manager of the store where Habshey works, members of the board and Administrator McRee.

The law is discriminatory, GCEOC spokesmen point out, because it prohibits membership in a union as contrasted with membership in a variety of other organizations ranging from the Ku Klux Klan and the Communist Party to the Chamber of Commerce and farm cooperatives. It also discriminates against some unions, since it specifically exempts teachers and employes of the Alabama State Docks Board, many of whom are members of AFL unions.

THERE is no question that disloyalty is sufficient grounds to exclude a person from government employment, the GCEOC says, but where loyalty is not a question, public employes enjoy the constitutional rights granted in the Bill of Rights and the "due process clause" of the 14th amendment. The clause referred to specifically prohibits a state from curtailing the rights of any citizen "without due process of law."

In a similar case some years ago, the U. S. Supreme Court held that "constitutional protection does extend to a public servant" who has been barred from a job by an obviously arbitrary or discriminatory law.

THE GCEOC suit seeks to have the law, which was passed and signed by the Governor in the closing days of the legislative session, declared unconstitutional. It also seeks to stop the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board from requiring that Habshey withdraw from membership in the union to keep his job and from requiring forfeiture of any of his rights under the state merit system.

Shipbuilders Blame GOP For Recession

THE NATION faces the "grave danger of losing its skilled force of shipbuilders" unless the Eisenhower Administration acts, the CIO Shipbuilding Workers warned last week.

This warning was sounded in a resolution adopted at the IUMSWA-CIO's biennial national policy conference at Pittsburgh, at which the Administration was sharply criticized by Pres. John J. Grogan. He blasted the government for "poor foresight" on the needs of the U. S. merchant marine and the private shipbuilding industry.

He blamed Sec. of Commerce Sinclair Weeks for "torpedoing" the $118 million subsidy proposed by the Maritime Commission for private ship construction.

"THE SHIP building industry has been suffering from a growing and deplorable recession since the end of World War II," the union said.

"Not a single order for a seagoing merchant ship has been placed with an American shipyard this year and only one vessel will be launched in 1955.

"This union repeatedly has warned the Administration that the nation faces the grave danger of losing its skilled force of shipbuilders."

IUMSWA-CIO also criticized the Navy offshore procurement program under which French, Italian and Dutch shipyards are building vessels for the U. S.

Unkept Promises Of GOP Assailed By Colorado CIO; PAC Drive Set

By H. T. SNELLING

THE UNKEPT promises of the Eisenhower Administration were roundly condemned by delegates, speakers and resolutions at the Colorado CIO Council convention, and a path was charted for political action in 1954 to help elect a better Congress.

Meeting in Pueblo, the Colorado unionists urged expanded political action next year "when there will be an opportunity to replace the reactionary elements now in the national Congress with liberal, progressive and humane legislators."

A warning that political action must be matched by organizing and bargaining in the "changed climate" of the anti-labor Republican Administration was voiced by CIO Reg. Dir. Franz Daniel, of Denver.

"We should adapt ourselves to the present climate, to an Administration which believes private property is more important than human rights," Daniel said. "Collective bargaining and organization is the only answer to this."

Carl A. McPeak, CIO assistant director of councils, reported the CIO in July and August had a record per capita paying membership.

"The 83rd Congress has not passed any real constructive legislation, nor has any been offered," he said. "All we get is promises."

The Denver lawmaker also warned that "we are beginning to reach the point where our economy is getting out of balance."

In a series of resolutions, the Colorado convention adopted a 10-point legislative program highlighted by flat opposition to any federal sales tax or manufacturers' excise tax, and a renewed call for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. It also backed the $1.25 minimum wage, fair employment practices, a national health program and expansion of Social Security.

IN THE FIELD of state legislation, delegates urged an improved workmen's compensation law, establishment of a State Dept. of Labor, and curbs on use of convict "slave labor." They also proposed that state "right to work" bills be identified as "right to scab" measures.

Participating in the convention were some 100 delegates representing 41 locals in 14 industries. Pres. Wayne Price, of Steelworkers Local 2102 in Pueblo, and Sec-Treas. William T. Butler, of Rubber Workers Local 154 in Denver, were re-elected to their second terms.

7000 Out In Furniture Walkouts

SOME 7000 members of the CIO Furniture Workers are on strike at several plants, including three of the largest in the industry.

UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer said, "recent organizational successes of our union—including the 719 to 255 election victory at American Furniture Co.—have inspired stiffened employer resistance, and a number have chosen to force us into these strike situations involving about 7000 workers."

"All of these strikes are in good shape, and we are confident we will win them," Pizer said.

THE THREE biggest plants struck are the American Furniture Co., Martinsville, Va., 1100 workers; Heywood-Wakefield Co., Gardner, Mass., 1300, and Virtue Bros. Co., Los Angeles, Calif., 600.

"In addition," Pizer said, "large groups of our members—many working for employers belonging to area associations—also are striking, among them 1200 workers in Fort Smith, Ark.; 700 workers in Rockford, Ill.; and various trade groups in New York City, Boston, and Newark.

NMU Crews Must Be Paging Emily Post

THE "BEEF" PAGES are an institution of The NMU Pilot, the paper of the CIO Maritime Union. There NMU members let off steam about conditions aboard ships, and what they say about the captain and the company is usually not very nice. Here is a case where the situation was reversed:

Returning from a long voyage to the Orient, the SS Edison's NMU crew presented the skipper with a fine wrist watch and wrote a letter to The Pilot to tell what a splendid fellow he was. But the praise was not one-sided, for the captain then lauded the men.

SAID THE CREW: "We would like to let our fellow union members know about the wonderful trip we had to the Far East. We spent eight months in Japan and Korea and returned to the States with a perfect record.

"During the entire trip we had no beefs, no logs (recording of demerits), no disputed overtime, good working conditions and very good food.

"Thanks to the master, Kenneth T. Erickson, who made this a very enjoyable trip. We, the crew, wish him the very best of luck on his next voyage."

ERICKSON'S LETTER: "To all crew members" read: "I could throw the bull around by using fancy words or make a long-winded speech, telling what a pleasure it has been sailing (and various shoreside activities???) with you men. Instead I'll just say that you're the best damn crew I've had or ever will have.

"Thanks for the wonderful gift. Best wishes, good sailing, and God knows in what port we will meet again, but I hope it is soon." (LPA)

McDonald Predicts Steel Union Victory In Annual Wage Drive

'Shiver Me Timbers—' When CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther attended the Vancouver convention of the CIO Woodworkers, he was promised the opportunity to catch a big salmon. He didn't get the fish—but he didn't leave empty-handed, for the IWA-CIO commissioned him as commodore in the world's only "union navy." That's the "loggers navy" which Woodworkers officers and organizers employ to reach isolated logging camps along the coast of British Columbia and Vancouver Island. Reuther—in nautical cap and coat—gets his "shipping papers" from IWA Sec.-Treas. Carl Winn (left) while Pres. A. F. Hartung beams approval. Winn was a Navy enlisted man in World War II, and Reuther, as he told the CIO Maritime Union convention last week, was a merchant seaman 18 years ago. (IWA story, Page 8; NMU story, Page 12.)

Steel Union Plans Drive For Annual Wage

"OPERATION SOUND-OFF" was unveiled last week by the CIO Steelworkers, as officers and rank-and-file Wage Policy Committee members of the big steel union met in New York City to prepare for 1954 negotiations.

With the press invited to sit in, USA-CIO Executive Board and Wage Policy Committee members talked over present contract problems and probable contract proposals in bargaining due next spring.

While formal drafting of demands was not on the agenda for last week's sessions, USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald made plain that the union will renew its long fight for the guaranteed annual wage as "insurance against depressions."

Equally certain, it was indicated, will be determined steel union efforts to improve the company-paid pension program won in the long 1949 steel strike and to expand and extend the coverage of health and welfare social insurance programs.

A prediction that the union will be victorious in winning the annual wage was voiced by McDonald, although he cautioned "this won't come overnight."

"I hope," he said, "we can use logic to convince the leaders of the steel industry that the guaranteed annual wage is a necessary part of labor-management agreements.

"THE GAW is insurance against depressions. It is based on the idea that if people have money, they'll spend money and keep the wheels of industry going. It is feasible and practical.

"I predict we will bring into being a GAW plan in the fabricating and basic steel industry. Some day we'll achieve it. I do not want to put into effect any time-tables. That would be foolhardy. I hope we don't have to make it the hard way. But if necessary we'll do it the hard way."

Reports by the USA-CIO's research and contract staff and discussion at the New York conference indicated that the union's thinking in the pensions and social insurance fields is along these lines:

(1.) Increasing the company-paid pensions, which now are $100 a month including Social Security, toward a goal of $175 or $200 a month apart from old age benefits—to bring the retirement program in line with present living costs.

(2.) Extensive broadening and improvement of the present social insurance program, with a non-contributory employer-paid program instead of the present setup under which Steelworkers pay part of the cost.

(3.) Additional social insurance benefits, such as dental care, and extension of the program now covering Steelworkers and their families to pensioners as well.

Recalling the gains won in past bargaining, Arthur Goldberg, USA-CIO and CIO general counsel, said "we were the pacesetters on industrial pensions in 1949 and we're going to do the job next year."

House Farm Group Gets Earful From Grass Roots

By MILTON PLUMB

FROM DROUGHT - threatened Iowa to the nation's most prosperous farm regions in Illinois and Indiana, CIO last week continued to speak out on behalf of America's farmers, reassuring them of labor's "unqualified and unconditional support."

The House Agriculture Committee, completing its tour of the Midwest farm belt, heard additional CIO testimony from six official representatives at hearings in Des Moines, Ia.; Bloomington, Ill.; and Indianapolis, Ind.

Hundreds of other witnesses representing individual farmers as well as all of the various farm organizations also appeared before the committee. Several hundred farmers from each region attended all sessions.

UNDER THE fair-minded chairmanship of Rep. Hope (R. Kans.), the committee listened carefully and courteously to all points of view expressed. Every farmer who appeared before it was given an unhampered—if necessarily brief—opportunity to state his problems and what he wants Congress to do about them.

CIO spokesmen complimented the committee on the work it was doing at each of the Midwestern hearings. At CIO's final appearance in Indianapolis, Neal Edwards, president of the Indiana State CIO Council, declared:

"We commend Chairman Hope and the members of this committee for working at the farm problem in the democratic way by coming to the grass roots and Main Street for facts, opinions and ideas."

REP. JONES (D. Mo.), left, checks a point in testimony of Illinois CIO Council Pres. Maurice F. McElligott.

Following a brief rest, the committee will conclude its series of hearings, which have already been held in the East, the South and Midwest, with a final tour through the Far West. The Western hearings begin Nov. 2 at Cheyenne, Wyo., where CIO Vice Pres. O. A. (Jack) Knight, who also is president of the CIO Oil Workers, is scheduled to testify.

Des Moines, Ia.

"We have long pledged CIO support to 100% of parity, to rural electrification, soil conservation, irrigation projects, low farm-purchase interest rates, and all other legislation beneficial to the farmer," Sec.-Treas. Kenneth Everhart of the Iowa CIO Council testified. "We repeat our pledge of our support of these things at this time."

More than 500 farmers jammed the Hotel Savery auditorium and applauded CIO's testimony. The keen interest in the hearings is even more clearly shown by the estimate that over 50,000 television sets were tuned in on their broadcast, carried over WOI-TV, the Iowa State Univ. station.

Appearing with Everhart on behalf of the CIO was Robert Johnston, CIO Auto Workers representative in Des Moines, who cited figures showing how the drop in farmers' income has drastically reduced employment among city workers.

He pointed out that 10 Iowa farm equipment plants manufacturing tractors, corn pickers, hay bailers and combines employed 14,689 workers last February.

"Today," he said, "these same plants employ a total of only 7603 workers."

Everhart pointed out that the majority of men and women who belong to the CIO in Iowa were either born or raised on farms and in rural communities or have close ties to farms and farm communities through their immediate families.

"Approximately 25% of the industrial workers in Iowa today commute to their jobs from points as much as 50 miles away," he said. "This means that these people have their roots well in the agricultural areas of the state.

"They belong to the same organizations in their local communities as the farmers do; their children go to school with farm boys and girls and so, not only our economic ties are close, but our social ties as well."

Bloomington, Ill.

Maurice F. McElligott, secretary-treasurer of the Illinois State CIO Council, and Harry Lehnert, sub-regional director representing the agricultural implement workers of the UAW-CIO, Peoria, called for an assured annual income for farmers to prevent the decline in farm purchasing power.

Appearing before the committee in Presser Hall, Illinois Wesleyan Univ., the CIO testimony was carried over local radio stations and was filmed for subsequent television broadcast.

McElligott emphasized that the CIO has "no detailed blueprint" to solve the farm problem, but stands ready to back the farmers in their efforts to put across any sound program they themselves develop.

"The CIO believes any farm program will fall of its own weight," he added, "if it either restricts farm production below the necessary levels, or fails to support and advance the interests of the farm family."

Tying the problems of workers with those of the farmer, Lehnert recommended the "guaranteed annual wage program and the 100% parity program for farmers—an assured annual income."

"Let's remember," he warned, "that whenever the income of the wage earner has been high, farm incomes have been high, too. Likewise, when either has dropped the other fell."

Indianapolis, Ind.

"The sharp declines in farm income have already hit city workers in Kentucky," Dan Bedell, international representative of the UAW-CIO for Region 3 (Indiana and Kentucky) told the committee in his discussion of conditions in the Blue Grass State.

Bedell, who appeared with Edwards at the hearing held in the House Chamber of the Indiana State Capitol, called for "full production for peace" by both farm and city workers. He said the practical "first step" is "to put a floor under purchasing power" through farm price supports at 100% of parity and "a realistic minimum wage that will keep city workers in the market for farm products."

Edwards said that 62 of the 142 metal fabricating plants with which CIO has contracts in Indiana and Kentucky have experienced cutbacks in production which have thrown 22,500 people out of work. He added that seven other plants are operating on a short work week and estimated that the lost man-hours of work amount to over one million a week.

He quoted official government figures showing that food manufacturing corporations increased their profits, after taxes, by $26 million, or 16.3% in the first quarter of this year, although farm income fell sharply. The committee, he urged, should "make or cause to have made a thorough investigation of the spread between low farm prices and high prices to the consumer."

The Pledge . . . The Hedge

As has happened to other campaign pledges—notably, a balanced budget and lower taxes—Candidate Eisenhower's promises to the farmers got tossed out the window by Pres. Eisenhower last week.

At his press conference, the President said flatly that he had never promised priced supports based on 100% of parity.

Just for the record, at the National Farming Contest at Kasson, Minn., Candidate Eisenhower said on Sept. 6, 1952:

"Without any 'ifs' or 'buts,' I say to you that I stand behind—and the Republican party stands behind—the price support laws now on the books . . . All I know of farmers convinces me that they would rather earn their fair share than to have it as a government handout. And a fair share is not merely 90% of parity—it is full parity."

SALES TAX proposals of the Eisenhower Administration were hit hard by independent economists attending a CIO conference on tax policy in Washington.

Avoid U. S. Sales Tax At All Costs, Economists Say At CIO Conference

TOP-FLIGHT independent economists, speaking at a CIO-sponsored conference on taxation, last week largely agreed that a federal sales tax should be avoided at all costs.

Speaking at the all-day session in Washington, arranged by the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, the economists struck out at a sales tax, imposed either at a consumer level or at the manufacturer's level, as the Administration has hinted.

Dissent came from a spokesman for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, who defended the manufacturers' sales tax, although he consistently called it a mere extension of present excise taxes. His remarks followed closely the present propaganda line of the Chamber and the National Association of Manufactures.

THE CONFERENCE drew more than 100 leading experts in the tax field and considered two basic topics: "The Impact of the Tax System Upon Economic Stability and Growth" and "The Federal Tax System and the Individual."

The morning session was chaired by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, a member of the CIO Economic Policy Committee. The afternoon discussion was led by Robert Oliver, executive assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and CIO coordinator of legislative affairs.

Leon Keyserling, chairman of Pres. Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, urged the Government to permit taxes to drop on the schedule written into law by the last Democratic Congress —if defense spending stops climbing.

But, he said, taxes should be continued at present levels if expenditures should increase "substantially" because of the Administration's "new look" at the defense program.

HE EMPHASIZED that taxes should not be increased and he cited sales tax proposals—at the consumers or manufactures level—for special condemnation. They served to hinder consumption, he said, at a time when consumption should be stimulated.

Economist Gerhard Colm of the National Planning Association noted that the Government's tax policy is based on "the objective of balancing the budget." "Better methods," he said, should be developed to appraise the physical and economic need for taxes."

KEY FIGURES at CIO tax conference were (from left) Robert R. Nathan, economist; George C. Smith of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of CIO Clothing Workers, who chaired first session; and Leon Keyserling, top economist of Truman Administration.

Robert R. Nathan, an independent economist and one of the chief participants at the morning session, hit out at the Administration's "almost psychopathic intent to cut taxes" and said an ill-considered tax policy could be the "last nail in the coffin of our present prosperity."

Speaking for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, George Cline Smith, manager of its finance department, defended the manufacturers' sales tax, saying it would merely eliminate inequities in the present excise tax structure.

Other speakers were Walter Heller, professor of economics at the Univ. of Minnesota; Richard Musgrave, professor of economics at the Univ. of Michigan and Dan Throop Smith, assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury.

IN CLOSING the conference, Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of research and education, said he was "struck by the fact that there seems to be general agreement that the sales tax, or any type of tax upon consumption, is a tax that required low and middle-income people to pay more tax proportionately than the high-income groups."

Crusade For Freedom—

Live Democracy, Don't Preach It, Says Reuther

CONVERTS to the cause of freedom cannot be won "if we preach democracy but do not practice it," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told a dinner meeting of the Crusade for Freedom in Washington last week.

"We can't begin to solve the world's problems," he said, "until we have solved our own. We can't begin to convince the free peoples that we are right, or the enslaved peoples that the shining goal of freedom is not a mirage, until we have achieved human justice."

Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meaney are vice chairmen of the crusade, which campaigns for support for Radio Free Europe and the National Committee for a Free Europe.

The dinner was the climax of a two-day meeting at which 450 persons, representing a cross-section of U. S. life, among whom were 18 labor leaders, heard official views on international communism and how private citizens are fighting it.

THE CIO president praised Radio Free Europe for "daily bringing the message of democracy and the hope of freedom to millions behind the Iron Curtain." He urged increased donations to the crusade to enable it "to provide more of tools which it needs to deliver the message of truth through a free, voluntary organization of freedom-loving citizens."

In a speech prepared for delivery, he recalled that totalitarian movements have always had one thing in common—"a hatred of free democratic trade unions, and a determination to smash them.

"Call it self-preservation if you will," he added, "but we in the trade union movement know that unless we fight for, defend and maintain freedom, then our unions, of which we are proud, will just be memories.

There can be no real trade union movement without democracy. There can be no real trade union movement without wholehearted official and unofficial recognition of the individual worth and dignity of a single man.

"So the trade union movement is the instinctive, implacable foe of communism—of totalitarianism of any stripe. We know that whoever seeks to smash the democracy; whoever seeks to infringe upon the freedom of the labor unions seeks to curtail the freedom of all."

Reuther reminded his audience that the Communists in the CIO were beaten with the "weapons of democracy, with the very weapons with which we can beat them in this worldwide struggle."

THE CRUSADE for Freedom is not our only weapon, he stressed; the free, democratic U. S. unions are also in the fight.

"They are functioning, active partners in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions," he explained, "a strong, militant organization of anti-Communist, anti-totalitarian, pro-democratic labor unions from the free countries.

"Through the ICFTU, the labor unions of the free world are striving to increase the living standards of all workers.

"We in the CIO know, and so do our trade union brothers and sisters overseas—that the shortest march for communism is through the empty bellies of hungry, desperate people.

"Build a better world, provide security for its people, outlaw hunger and want and desperation, and the Communists will have no fertile soil upon which to spread their evil seeds of propaganda. This we know to be the truth. And, therefore, we in labor are seeking to build unions where none now exist and to strengthen those which are weak.

"If we were to spend but a fraction of the money we spend in one week of war . . . for the positive ends of peace and well-being, we would be far along the road to winning this cold war between democracy and dictatorship."

A Vet's Anger Moves Even The VA

Remember the Korean veteran, a CIO member in Canton, O., whom the Veterans Administration left on a liquid diet?

The VA extracted all his teeth. Then it had an attack of economy and wouldn't give him any dentures to replace them. Well, he has 'em now, thanks to stories that appeared in The CIO News and other CIO publications, and thought gratefully of his union when he bit into his first steak.

"There is a moral," observed the Ohio CIO Council's News and Views, "which we can draw from this episode . . . that the righteous anger of a man denied the joy of chomping down on a thick and delicious steak can move mountains—and the Administration down Washington way."

Carey Warns PAC Rally Of Sales Tax Drive

A WARNING of the "clear and present danger" that Congress will enact a national sales tax when it reconvenes was sounded last week by CIO Sec.- Treas. James B. Carey at a rally of CIO political action workers in Philadelphia.

The rally, an annual affair sponsored by the Political Action Committee of the Philadelphia CIO Council, touched off the yearly CIO-PAC dollar drive.

Carey recalled that while Pres. Eisenhower said recently that he has "no intention" of seeking a federal sales tax, he gave no answer when asked if his Administration had ruled out the possibility of a manufacturers' sales tax.

"The fact is," said Carey, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers and who formerly was active in Philadelphia local union circles, "that this Administration is seriously considering adoption of what it will call a manufacturers' excise tax.

"Called by any other name, this tax is no sweeter. It is, in a semantic disguise, a sales tax. In fact, it is worse than a sales tax.

"I am not sure whether the President fully realizes that there is no honest difference between a manufacturers' excise tax and a sales tax—as far as the taxpaying public is concerned.

"I do know, however, that if Harry Truman were still in the White House—or if Adlai Stevenson had been elected last November—this dangerous threat would not be hanging over our heads."

CAREY cited specific examples to show that the ultimate consumer will pay from 50 to 100% more than the 5% levy collected from the manufacturer.

"For this kind of a tax," he explained, "which is even more evil and more of a burden on the average citizen than the straight retail sales tax, has a pyramiding effect which is bad for the whole economy."

Tax revenues can be boosted without new levies, he said, by plugging up "legalistic but immoral loopholes written into the tax structure for the benefit of special interest groups."

Comparison

Witches, 1953

Not all the witch-hunts will be staged at children's parties during this 1953 Halloween week. Some of them are being conducted officially by the armed services or offiicials of the federal government.

Washington, for instance, is full of horror-stories about "security dismissals." They compare, in sense of fear and irrationality, to the Salem witch-hunts of 300 years ago. (Indicative of the situation is what happened to former Sec. of Navy Dan A. Kimbell. Now vice president of a rubber company, Kimball was barred from a State Dept. rubber conference—because he didn't have a security clearance.)

Thanks to a remarkable television broadcast by Edward R. Murrow on the CBS network, millions of Americans saw and heard the sordid story of the persecution of Milo Radulovitch, a lieutenant in the U. S. Air Force.

The CIO Auto Workers had already voiced its anger about that case—a clear case of guilt by reason of family association. Radulovitch was admitted by the Air Force to be completely loyal; his "guilt" was a refusal to denounce his father as "radical," or his sister who has been charged with communism.

As a result, the lieutenant faces loss of his reserve commission—and, since he is studying meterology, probably his career.

Americans should be ashamed that cases like this are seriously prosecuted; that the traditional right of the accused to hear the detailed charge against him is flouted; and that common decency is denied.

The Air Force, as we see it, has made a big mistake and ought to be big enough to admit it.

And the country as a whole should recognize that through cases like this, it loses the respect of the democratic people everywhere.

There's not a single justification why the innocent should suffer when America protects itself from Soviet aggression and Communist infiltration.

You Can't Eat Promises

It's perfectly obvious that when a depression envelops the nation's farm population, city workers are bound to suffer.

Right now, a depression is developing in many farm areas. And about all the farmers have to combat it are vague promises from Sec. of Agriculture Benson that he'll draft a better farm program pretty soon.

But the country's farmers can't eat those promises; and if the farm recession continues, there's danger that city workers won't be eating so well either. Farmers and workers share a common destiny. When the farmers suffer economic setbacks, they can't buy products made by union members in the nation's factories; and unemployed workers cut down their buying of farm products.

Some special interests like to cloak that mutual dependency of agriculture and labor. But many Mid-West farmers have seen it at first hand during the recent testimony before sessions of the House Agriculture Committee in the mid-west.

CIO spokesmen have been calling for 100% parity support for the farmers—and the farmers are finding labor, as it has always been, is one of agriculture's best friends.

Clothes Make The Man

In Other Words—

The War Against Our Public Parks

In a recent broadcast over ABC radio, CIO's Commentator John W. Vandercook warned of the "economic erosion" that is quietly destroying our national parks. Here are excerpts from that program telling the story:

By JOHN W. VANDERCOOK

THERE'S AN article in the current Harper's Magazine that a lot of Americans should read and ponder. It's about our national parks and it's by Bernard DeVoto.

Counting in many categories, from national cemeteries, battlefield sites and so on, up to such glories of our national inheritance as Yosemite, the Grand Canyon and the Yellowstone, there are some 22 million acres of federal land now under the direction of the National Park System of the United States. Twenty-two million acres out of the three million square miles of the continental U. S.—a meager enough percentage, when you come to think of it.

We sometimes forget that nearly every acre of that national reserve had to be fought for against some narrow private interest or other before it could be made part of the genuinely shared natural wealth of all the people of the land.

A Process of Erosion

As DeVoto points out, our national parks, right now, are being gently, quietly destroyed (the word doesn't seem to be too strong) by what one might call a process of economic erosion.

A national park, whether it's the Grand Teton or Carlsbad Caverns, requires a certain amount of upkeep and a staff to keep it going. Until now, staffing the National Park Service has apparently never been much of a problem. The work is hard, the pay bad.

But as happily so often happens in human affairs, the attractions of outdoor life, the inner sense of doing something useful and of doing it for all one's fellow-countrymen has made up the difference. Those attractions—not the pay-check—have through the years brought into the Park Service as able, as downright nice a group of men as can be found anywhere on the federal payroll.

But since the present Administration has been in office, it has become a serious question how long many of those Park Service employes will be able to stick it out. Not that they want to quit. Their jobs are more than jobs to them. They are their life's work.

But even a ranger must eat, must have some sort of roof over his head.

This is what has lately happened to those roofs. By order of Pres. Eisenhower's Bureau of the Budget, the rent of park service employes' dwellings in the parks has been raised "to equal that of comparable housing in the same locality." Figuring out that formula, in preserved areas where there isn't any comparable housing, has been quite a trick. This, Bernard DeVoto points out, is what happened to one typical ranger.

Ends Won't Meet

The rent of his quarters has been increased 137%. So his rent bill is now nearly one quarter of his annual salary. The rents on some 17 typical dwellings for park service people in the Grand Teton park have now been hoisted from 100% to 200%. Park personnel are finding they can no longer, by any device, make ends meet.

So remorseless is that quiet, little-advertised pressure on the National Park Service that one gets the impression that it grows from a deep hostility. Any day now we might be solemnly assured that Yellowstone is "creeping socialism," and, like our synthetic rubber plants, had perhaps best be put up for public sale to private enterprise. I'm not serious, at least not yet.

DeVoto says flatly our great national parks are becoming less and less fit, or safe, for the reception of the millions whose delight it is to visit them.

He suggests a remedy—that they should be closed. Shut tight until Congress and the administration some day realize that our national birthright is an inheritance worth keeping, and worth caring for.

There's another alternative. Sell 'em. Sell 'em to private concessionnaires or lumber companies. There's no doubt private profit could be made out of them. Who cares about nature? Or the future?

(Next week: Excerpts from another John W. Vandercook broadcast on one of the biggest steals of all time, the Ellsworth Bill.)

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

PRES. EISENHOWER put a lot of firmness in his voice when he told a news conference that he would not, repeat not, participate in any congressional elections next years.

The time has come to make two points: First, Mr. Eisenhower is "participating in elections" right now, week after week and month after month, and he will "participate" a lot more in 1954. Second, the theory he seems to proclaim, that the White House is and should be "above politics," is historically and even morally wrong.

Liberation?

★ There's no truth to the story, reputed to be running around the country, that the walls of government buildings in Washington are chalked with signs, "Republicans, go home."

★ Robert F. Wagner Jr., son of the Wagner Act author, will be the next mayor of New York if the New York Daily News straw ballot poll stands up. The Daily News poll has a high reputation for accuracy, and puts Wagner far ahead of Republican, Liberal and other rivals.

The President's concept, as he spells it out, seems clear. He deems himself the Chief Executive of all the people, not of any partisan group alone. He would resent it if someone else went into his state and tried to tell him how to vote. His job is to build a good record—and if any Republican candidate wants to attach himself to this record, why, that makes a good umbrella for him.

But Mr. Eisenhower is campaigning for his friends and political supporters. He campaigned when he addressed a $100-a-plate shindig in Hershey, Pa., and helped raise $400,000 for the gratified Pennsylvania Republican party. He campaigned—on only the highest level, of course—when he spent the weekend at the 24-room "ranch" of his good apostate Democratic friend, Gov. Shivers of Texas.

It is always unwise for a President to intervene directly in local elections; the intervention may backfire. But Franklin D. Roosevelt never pretended to himself that he wasn't "campaigning" when as Chief Executive, with all the publicity beating on the Presidency, he deliberately went into closely-divided states to make speeches calculated to help liberal Democrats or help raise Democratic money.

A Naive Or Menacing Theory

There is something either naive or menacing about the notion that the President is supposed to be "above politics."

The Founding Fathers, of course, abhorred "factions." They wrote a Constitution designed to keep the rude masses away from control of the White House.

The rude masses got rid of this theory in a hurry. Parties formed, because that is how people act in a democracy. Politicians like Jefferson and Jackson became the heads of parties, and they were not afraid that their party leadership would destroy their honest devotion to the general welfare. They used party leadership to advance the general welfare.

A tip on Mr. Eisenhower's real meaning came from Harold Rainville, administrative assistant to Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.), chairman of the Republican Senate Campaign Committee.

It seems that certain groups, including some who were Citizens for Eisenhower last year, are trying to revive this organization in order to defeat conservative Republican members of Congress—people termed by Rainville "regular Republicans."

"That's the kind of stuff that's been going on," Rainville told a Chicago reporter, "and that's why the President had to break—and break clean—at the moment."

There's quite a difference between the lofty "nonpartisan" approach proclaimed by the President and the interpretation Rainville puts on it.

The Inimitable Dr. Manion

The President temporarily deflated Dr. Clarence Manion, chairman of his own Commission on Inter-Governmental Relations, by refusing to underwrite Manion's public statement that the Tennessee Valley Authority should be "sold" to "private industry."

He'd be shooting from the hip if he made any such bold declaration, Mr. Eisenhower said.

There is no sign yet, however, that he knows that Herbert Hoover, chairman of another of his interminable commissions, agrees with Manion that the TVA and all other government power projects should be "sold." And no sign that he realizes that the TVA is largely a living memorial to a really great Republican, the late Sen. George Norris of Nebraska.

One of the TVA dams is named after Norris. Another is named after former Sen. Burton K. Wheeler. If the authority is really "sold," they can be renamed Manion Dam and J. Purcell Smith Dam —the latter to celebrate the triumphs under the GOP of the private utilities' $65,000-a-year lobbist in Washington.

Mess In Washington

Recently the Federal Power Commission approved two rate increase petitions totalling $2,911,000 for the Hope Natural Gas Co. of Clarksburg, W. Va. The utility, a subsidiary of a big holding outfit, the Consolidated Natural Gas Co., promptly asked another $2 million in rate boosts. That night, relates Scripps-Howard Correspondent Andrew Tully, Consolidated's Pres. J. French Robinson was host to most of the FPC's rate-setting officials concerned with his case at a good-old fish fry.

Washington Window—

Vigorous Full Employment Policy Urged To Block Economic Dip

By Public Affairs Institute

WHAT IS THE ECONOMIC outlook? What can we expect in the near future in prices, wages, taxes, employment and business activity? Various private and public forecasts have been made. Generally, they foresee the following trends:

A "moderate" decline of 10% in gross national product—goods and services—is indicated. Most forecasts project the bottom of the decline for the end of 1954. On the basis of a 10% drop, the Public Affairs Institute estimates there will be $35 to $40 billion less goods and services than are now being produced.

Employment — The adjustment would mean about four million fewer jobs. It could also mark the virtual disappearance of job openings for the one-half million new workers who normally come into the labor market each year. In short, unemployment could rise from 1.2 million to about five to six million.

Wages—With the loss of jobs, wage and salary incomes will be lowered. Competition for jobs has often been the basis for undermining wage standards. In the past, management has used such conditions to apply heavy pressure on unions to forego wage adjustments.

The Many Lack Savings

Of course, unemployment insurance and savings will help to cushion the dislocation. However, a look at the distribution of $98 billion of assets that American families can readily convert to cash discloses that the 10% of the families with highest incomes hold 66% of the total. The bottom half own only 1% of such savings.

Prices—What are the prospects for lower prices? Will the cost of living decline and thus help to ease the cut in wage income?

If the business decline experienced in 1948-49 —about equal to the forecasted drop—is a test, then the prospects for relief are bleak. Consumer prices on the average dropped exactly one percentage point between 1948 and 1949.

Business—The outlook for corporate earnings, under the 1948-49 conditions, would be quite favorable. According to an estimate of the vice president of the Bank of New York, corporate profits, after federal taxes, would be $17 billion, only slightly below the rate of $17.5 billion in the third quarter of 1952. With reduced need for capital funds, stockholders can expect increased dividend payments.

Tax Relief—While the international situation may dictate a change, the Administration has promised to let the excess profits tax die and the 10% individual income tax cut go through in January as scheduled. The Treasury will lose some $5 billion in revenues. If it obtains this revenue from a much-discussed manufacturers' (hidden) sales tax, the net result will be a shifting of the tax burden to lower income groups.

This "adjustment in business" was "planned that way," as acknowledged by Administration spokesmen. Last February a program was initiated to prevent putting a "bubble on top of the boom" and to restore "honest" money.

"This expected 'recession' or 'adjustment' downward with loss of income and suffering for masses of our working people and farmers need not happen," said Dr. Dewey Anderson, executive director of PAI. "A vigorous policy aimed at securing full employment and full use of our resources can head this off and make 1954 another prosperous year."

Banks Earn More But Dollar Is Worth Less

The Eisenhower Administration's "hard money" policy has had just the opposite effect, pushing the purchasing power of the dollar to the lowest point in U. S. history.

The National Industrial Conference Board reports that the dollar in August was worth 54.4c in buying power over the counter. That's based on the 1939 dollar equalling 100c. In August, 1952, the dollar was worth 54.8c. And each new climb in the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumer price index makes the dollar worth less.

The big national banks, however, have profited from Administration fiscal policies. According to the Wall Street Journal, the national banks in the first half of this year had record profits of $293.5 million, or a return of 8.25% on invested capital.

Book Review

Race Hatred Is Basic Red Policy

RACE HATRED to divert the discontent of workers and peasants is a basic tactic of the Soviets. Documentation of that policy is revealed in a new book "The Jews in the Soviet Satellites," written by a team of four experts on Poland, Hungary, Bulgaria, Rumania and Czechoslovakia.

"It is a myth that totalitarian societies eliminate competition," declare the four authors—Peter Meyer, Eugene Duschinsky, Bernard Weinryb and Nicholas Sylvain. "In the general misery and insecurity, competition for better jobs, rations, apartments, and the favor of superiors is murderous in the literal sense of the word.

"Racial hatred thrives in such atmosphere. There is a deep significance in the fact that the great anti-Semitic riots of Bratislava in Czechoslovakia in 1948 grew out of a dispute between two housewives over precedence in a shopping queue."

Pattern Of Suppression

Although primarily devoted to problems peculiar to the Jewish people in the satellites, the book details a Communist pattern of suppression against Catholics, Jews, Protestants, Moslems and every independent religious and ethnic group.

"The purpose of this multi-pronged persecution," the book states, "is to crush any independent organizations on the theory that any groups not completely dominated by the Communists represent a danger to the regime."

The authors, who are all natives of Central Europe with a first-hand knowledge and intimate acquaintance with both official and unofficial sources, add that the future of the Jews trapped with the Soviet satellites is particularly gloomy.

Although all groups suffer under Communism, the authors report, Jews appear to have been hardest hit because the Red governments found it easiest to use anti-Semitism as an issue just as did the Nazi occupiers before them. Thus, when the Reds moved to suppress Jewish schools, newspapers, organizations and cultural groups as "unreliable" and "pro-Western," they were able to whip up anti-Semitism to "justify" such action.

Mass arrests of Catholic and Protestant religious leaders in the Soviet satellites usually accompany each drive against the Jews, the authors point out. The book underscores the fact that the security of the Jews in all Soviet satellites practically disappeared with the destruction of any democratic form of government.

The book demonstrates that the basic pattern of Communist conquest was the same in each of the satellites. Intrigue, pressure and outright threats assured Communist control of what started as a coalition government. Once the Reds gained control of the Ministry of Interior and full police powers, they arrested, imprisoned and executed all their opponents with or without the formality of a trial. E.L.

FIFTEEN CIO members will return this week from a three-week visit to Scandinavia.

CIO's second annual Scandinavian labor education workshop brought the unionists into close contact with leaders and rank and file members of the Danish and Norwegian Trade Union Federations.

The workshop was arranged by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, under the direction of Associate Dir. George T. Guernsey, and the CIO International Affairs Dept., in cooperation with Erik Hauersley of the Danish Workers Education Association and Anders Moerk of the Norwegian workers education group.

The first week was spent in Denmark where highlights of the fast-moving tour were a day nursery visit and a trip to the Junk playground. The nursery gives 300 children of working mothers the most advanced care and education at a cost of 15c a day, including meals.

Teaching The Tots

Wrecked autos, abandoned building materials and broken machinery form the recreational equipment at the Junk playground. The theory is that energy which in crowded cities often goes into vandalism emerges here as contructive activity.

Lewis Carliner of the CIO European Office in Paris and Sven Godfredsen, U. S. labor attache in Denmark, formerly of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, accompanied the team on its Danish tour.

Two weeks were spent in Norway where the group arrived on the day following the Labor government victory in the general elections. Moerk and Margaret Knight, formerly with CIO Textile Workers and now with Foreign Operations Administration overseas, made the Norwegian tour with the workshop team.

Before going overseas by plane the group was briefed by CIO leaders including Vice Pres. Gladys Dickason of ACWA-CIO; Reg. Dir. Michael Mann of New York; John Brophy, coordinator of CIO's Free World Labor Fund; Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO research and education director, and Guernsey.

The visitors spent six days in Denmark, concluding their investigation of Danish life with inspecting working conditions in Aarhaus, industrial city.

They were feted and questioned from one end of the country to the other by leaders of the Danish Federation, the cooperative movement, members of Parliament and leaders of the Danish Labor government.

The Foam, It Seems, Helped Pay The Way

Eiler Jensen, head of the Danish Federation of Labor, welcomed the CIO Scandinavian workshop members to Denmark at a banquet in the worker-owned Star brewery.

Toasting the visitors with a glass of what Danes claim is the finest brew in the world (Editor's note: No affront to CIO Brewery Workers in Milwaukee), Jensen said beautiful breweries have been built all over the world with the workers' money but that so far as he knew the Star brewery is the only one the workers' money bought for them.

Star beer sales help support workers education in Denmark and part of the cost of playing host to the CIOers, Jensen said, came from this source.

Double Threat To Labor—

'Pattern Of Plunder' Rapped At IWA Parley

By GEORGE HOLCOMB

AMERICAN labor is confronted by a "double threat" of organized employer resistance at the bargaining table and unfavorable labor legislation the bosses can use to bend the workers to their will, Pres. A. F. Hartung told the 17th annual convention of the CIO Woodworkers in Vancouver, B. C.

Hartung was sharply critical of the Eisenhower Administration. He hit at Pres. Eisenhower for his description of the Tennessee Valley Authority as "creeping socialism," and added:

"American labor will not be frightened away from supporting a progressive program simply because reactionary forces label it 'creeping socialism.'

"We must refuse to be intimidated by the current practice of trying to scare people from supporting worthwhile issues.

"The pattern of plunder is designated to eradicate hard-won gains, such as the minimum wage law, unemployment compensation, public power developments, social security, etc. All these liberal measures are under attack."

Joint PAC Action

"The turn in political fortune has been made," he said. "Powerful reactionary forces represented by men of restricted vision and small faith . . would reshape the future in the image of an outlived and discredited past.

"We must face that challenge with our united will, determined that freedom, justice and equal opportunity must be for all."

Internationally, said Hartung, organized labor is the greatest force standing between democracy and tyranny.

MISS UNION MAID—She's Shirley Friers, of CIO Clothing Workers Local 178 in Vancouver, giving IWA-CIO Pres. A. F. Hartung a Woodworkers' union label which Hartung placed on Rushmore Co. bureau.

"We have a grave responsibility on our shoulders," he added. "Let us dedicate ourselves to accept that responsibility with that age-old slogan—'United we stand, divided we fall.'"

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther —like the delegates in their resolutions and discussions—hit at both far right and far left in a speech at the convention banquet. Some 800 guests, in addition to about 350 delegates, heard his address, which was broadcast throughout Canada.

The United States and Canada, he said, must assume world leadership for freedom, social justice and brotherhood by keeping themselves strong and economically healthy — and they must share this strength with weaker nations.

The real solution to economic problems, he declared, is to be as ready to spend money to defend ourselves from depressions as we have been to defend ourselves from aggression.

Down Curve Ahead

Ed Kenney, IWA-CIO research director and a former professional football player, warned delegates of a possible recession in the U. S., but not necessarily in Canada.

"Sharp downward curves" are ahead in the U. S., he said, because of the Republican Administration's policy of acting "to benefit the few who hold the purse strings of the party."

The delegates made short shift of a "peace" resolution which called for world negotiations with no prescribed conditions, and would thus hamstring the United Nations in effectuating international inspection as a minimum condition for disarmament. A later resolution paid tribute to East Berlin workers and pledged "tangible aid" from the IWA-CIO.

Support also was voted for the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

In other resolutions, the convention recommended that 3c per member per month be allotted to the union education program; asked for more safety education in the industry, which has the highest accident frequency rate of any U. S. industry, and set up a committee to propose plans for revising the union's district system.

In addition, the delegates demanded a federal investigation into the kidnaping and beating of James Jackson, CIO Clothing Workers' organizer, at Ashland, Miss.; urged the Eisenhower Administration to give labor a voice in government reorganization; opposed the Ellsworth Bill giving the national forests to private "monopoly interests," and called for federal development of the Hells Canyon dam site.

There was considerable discussion of the Karly Larsen "case," but little support. Larsen was ousted earlier this year from two high IWA-CIO posts on a charge of accepting union office while a member of the Communist Party. His appeal to the convention was rejected. Larsen recently was found not guilty of violating the Smith Act, but admitted past Communist Party membership.

Times Change A Little And For The Better

Delegates to the CIO Woodworkers' convention in Vancouver, B. C., found things a little different than when they last met in the Canadian city four years ago.

Hotel rooms which cost $7.50 a day for two persons in 1949 were $11.50 in 1953. But there are now four IWA-CIO members in the British Columbia Legislature, where there were none four years ago, and a few weeks ago Tom Burnett became the first member of the union to be elected to the Canadian Parliament.

GCEOC Pushes Drive For Federal Workers

FEDERAL WORKERS, beset by job-jitters because of Administration employment policies, will be the target for a renewed organizing drive by CIO in Washington. Local 1, Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee has begun its campaign for new members in federal agencies, many of which are all but completely demoralized through capricious firings.

Aid in the drive has been pledged by National CIO. A full-time organizer has been assigned to the campaign which it is hoped will draw new members from the thousands of workers in the capital.

Reductions-in-force among government agencies in the name of economy by the Republican agency and department heads have caused employe morale to sink to an incredible low. Seniority, qualifications and veterans' status are almost meaningless in the wholesale firings.

SOWHA—So what!

IBRIF—I've been riffed (fired).

WIFFO—Will you accept RIF if offered?

IDGAD—I don't give a damn!

CIO Urges Aid For Hospital Strikers

The Pennsylvania CIO Council has issued an appeal for financial assistance for 76 members of Local 251, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, who have been on strike since May at the J. C. Blair Memorial Hospital, Huntingdon, Pa.

Reuther Is Named To D. C. Bias Unit

DURING a three-hour closed door meeting, the President's Committee on Government Contracts named CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany to a subcommittee dealing with discrimination in employment in the District of Columbia.

The committee also took the first step toward enforcing long-standing prohibitions on discrimination in employment by government contractors. A letter by Vice Pres. Richard N. Nixon was sent to 27 agencies asking for a report on how the President's non-discrimination order is being implemented.

The appointment of Reuther and Meany was considered significant in light of earlier discussion by the subcommittee on the hiring practices of two D. C. utilities, Capital Transit and the C. & P. Telephone Co.

The subcommittee also heard a report on plans for the D. C. government to adopt a similar policy requiring non-discrimination in contracts. An informal opinion from the General Accounting Office is now pending on whether Washington can require this as a contract condition.

New Power Policy Means Higher Bills, Olds Warns

HIGHER ELECTRIC bills and slower expansion of the nation's power capacity were predicted in the wake of the Administration's new power policy by a former Federal Power Commission chairman last week.

Leland Olds, now on the staff of the Public Affairs Institute in Washington, was sharply critical of the new policy and the recent Missouri Basin marketing criteria announced by Interior Sec. McKay.

Olds, who served with FPC in the Roosevelt and Truman years, said the GOP Administration's policies will limit "or possibly rule out" multi-purpose river basin programs combining flood control, irrigation and power generating.

McKay's plan to give primary responsibility for waterpower development to the so-called "local interests" drew a warning from Olds that large regional power systems, privately-owned, will benefit, "rather than truly local interests."

LONG-TERM contracts with private companies for federally-generated power will mean a shortage of power for existing public and rural electric cooperatives or for communities undertaking their power supply on a public or cooperative basis for the first time, Olds warned.

He said that other Administration power policies "may seriously restrict future reclamation development" by requiring excessive power rates to meet the costs of irrigation and "will tend to reduce somewhat the yardstick effect of federally-developed power" by easing controls on retail rates.

Rail Union Gets Checkoff

THE CIO Railroad Workers and the giant Pennsylvania Railroad have negotiated the first checkoff agreement in the history of U. S. railway transportation.

The union negotiating committee, headed by Thomas A. Bloom, also won a general wage increase of 4c an hour retroactive to Dec. 1, 1952, and an additional 3c, to offset the rise in the cost of living, effective Oct. 1.

The settlement was approved by the union's policy committee, composed of all Pennsylvania Railroad divisional chairman.

Only Race For Governor—

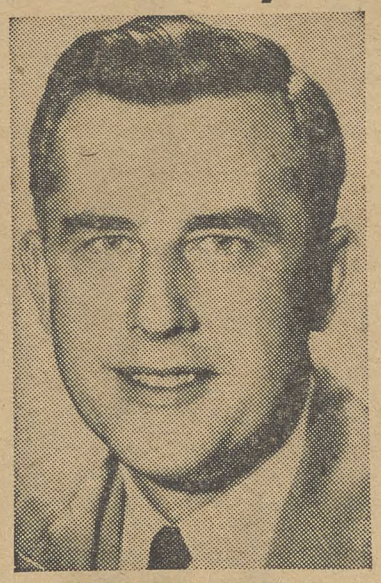
Meyner Fights GOP Big Money In Jersey

By HARRY KRANZ

THE ONLY significant gubernatorial election outside the South this year pits a young, liberal CIO-endorsed Democrat against a big business Republican for New Jersey's hotly-contested governorship.

The Nov. 3 election is being watched nationally for a sign of Pres. Eisenhower's popularity. Eisenhower carried the State last year by more than 300,000 votes, but it went for the late Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt and has elected Democratic governors.

Endorsed unanimously by the State CIO Political Action Committee is Robert B. Meyner, 45-year-old liberal who compiled the best labor record of any member of the State Senate in the annual New Jersey CIO News voting records during his term, from 1948 to 1951.



ROBERT B. MEYNER

MEYNER's opponent is Paul Troast, chairman of the State's Turnpike Authority, a contractor, and a trustee of the New Jersey Manufacturers' Association, which has battled nearly every labor bill in the State Legislature.

In his campaign Meyner is fighting against some of the heaviest financing in the history of New Jersey elections. Donald V. Lowe, vice-chairman of the Port of New York Authority, has formed a Committee of 100 Industrialists to raise $500,000 for Troast's war chest.

State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman and PAC Chairman Paul Krebs disclosed that the CIO endorsement of Meyner was based upon the two candidates' answers to the PAC's 54-point questionnaire on State issues, on personal interviews, and upon analysis of their past records and appraisals of their future performances.

Meyner made such a brilliant liberal record during his stay in the State Senate that the Republicans turned their heaviest guns on him when he came up for re-election in 1951. Despite the strength of their artillery, they were able to defeat him by but 51 votes.

WHEN HE OPENED his campaign for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, he stressed six issues. These are elimination of crime and corruption, equitable taxation, essential state school aid, full use of highway funds for highway purposes, elimination of caucuses in the Legislature, and less use of authorities such as that headed by Troast.

He also has emphasized a late development that has shocked the State—the disclosure that in 1951 Troast wrote Gov. Thomas Dewey of New York urging the release of Joseph Fay, convicted labor extortionist.

At Fay's income tax violation trial in 1947, there was evidence he was paid $5000 to keep rank and file workers "in line" during construction of the Wright aircraft plant at Woodbridge, N. J., by Troast's firm.

William Brewster, a Troast subcontractor, admitted making the payment, which he said was part of a total of $150,000 he had paid Fay over a three-year period for "labor relations."

"If the racketeers could pull the wool over his eyes so easily and, as he claims, he knew nothing about the bribe, then he is completely unqualified to be the Governor of a racket-ridden administration," said the State CIO Council.

Meyner is the son of an Easton, Pa., silk worker, the late Gustave H. Meyner, who was blacklisted for organizing a union, and himself worked in a silk mill as a youth.

He is a graduate of Lafayette College and Columbia Univ. Law School, and since 1936 has been practicing law in Phillipsburg, N. J., across the Delaware River from his birthplace. He served in the Navy during World War II.

'Impy' Ruled Off Ballot

THE COURTS last week tossed out the attempt of Mayor Vincent Impellitteri of New York City to run for re-election as a selfstyled independent.

State Supreme Court Judge William H. Munson tossed out Impellitteri's nominating petitions for the Experience party, ruling some three-quarters of the signatures were invalid. Some 19,000 of 24,000 signatures were barred as signed by persons not registered to vote or otherwise invalid.

Mazey Tells Wisconsin CIO GOP Record Is A 'Big Flop'

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE ADMINISTRATION of Pres. Eisenhower is a "big flop," Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers told 550 delegates to the annual convention of the Wisconsin State CIO Council in Milwaukee.

"The President has left a trail of broken promises behind him," Mazey charged, citing Eisenhower's failure to keep campaign pledges on housing, Taft-Hartley Act revision and other items.

"The promises he made to the workers and producers he failed to keep. Some of the promises he made he kept—those he made to big business. He gave the oil interests that supported him the tidelands; he sold the rubber plants to private industry though they were being operated at a profit; he raised the interest rates and made the bankers happy.

"They call it a hard money policy, but what they mean is that it's harder for the workers to get money."

MAZEY SAID the President "betrayed the trust some people had in him in the way he walked out" on former Sec. of Labor Martin Durkin over T-H amendments. The government, he charged, is a "pro-big business government from top to bottom."

"The Eisenhower administration has changed the whole conception of government," he added. "They believe in government of big business, by big business and for big business.

"We've never had such a gang of pirates in Washington as we have now."

The UAW-CIO leader warned of "serious signs" of economic dislocation because business is too fearful to plan to replace the armament production that was reduced when the fighting stopped in Korea.

An added factor, he said, is that "the people on top are getting too much of the wealth we produce and the workers are getting too little."

THE VICTORY of Democrat Lester Johnson over State Sen. Arthur Padrutt (R.) in a special election for a successor to the late Rep. Merlin Hull (R.) was hailed by the delegates as a concrete example of the effectiveness of political action. Mazey described the outcome of the contest, in which the CIO strongly supported Johnson, as a "real lift" for all U. S. liberals.

PRODUCTS made by CIO members under contracts with Wisconsin employers, ranging from bottled beer to Deisel locomotive parts, were displayed at Wisconsin CIO Council convention in Milwaukee. Here five delegates from CIO Auto Workers Local 115, who work at Ampco Metal, Inc., Milwaukee, pose with some of their handiwork. Left to right are Joseph B. Czaicki, Leonard C. Gain, Casimir Gudel, Edward J. Butler and Richard R. Buege.

The convention adopted a legislative program, to be presented to the Legislature when it reconvenes later this month, vigorously opposing a sales tax or higher excise levies to prevent a budget deficit—a possibility the delegates blamed on "the lack of foresight of Republican governors and Republican Legislatures since 1938."

The program urged the Legislature to consider taxing the incomes of railroads, banks and insurance companies, which are now exempt; taxing the U. S. tax rebates of corporations as earned income, and levying a surtax above the first $5000 of income.

Sec.-Treas. Ross Baum was re-elected in a contest with Vincent Podlogar, former president of the Milwaukee County CIO Council. Both are members of the Steelworkers.

Other speakers included CIO Executive Vice Pres. John Riffe; Leo C. Perlis, national director of the National CIO Community Services Committee, and CIO National Rep. Ted Silvey.

Organized Labor In Boston Honors Archbishop Cushing

MORE THAN 10,000 union members crowded into the Boston Garden recently in a spectacular tribute to "a friend of the working man," Archbishop Richard J. Cushing.

The testimonial was originally planned on a small scale to permit a few union leaders to make a gift to Nazareth, a home for orphans of all creeds and one of the Archbishop's favorite charities.

However, it quickly grew into one of the greatest gatherings of its kind in Boston's history. Thousands of workers, in the clothes of their respective callings, staged a torchlight parade into the Garden from downtown Boston.

Co-chairmen of the tribute to the Archbishop, who spoke at the 1948 National CIO convention in Boston, were Pres. J. William Belanger of the State CIO Council; Pres. Henry J. Brides of the AFL State Federation of Labor; John R. McIsaac of the Railway Trainmen, and Irving J. DesRoches of the Mine Workers.

Archbishop Cushing told the rally that workers and religion must keep close together "not only because of what we have in common, but . . . because we have the same enemies."

"THE REGIMES which seek to hamstring organized labor are usually equally eager to paralyze organized religion," he explained. "The reason is simple.

"Organized malice can never breathe easily in a world which includes organized efforts to promote brotherhood, constructive understanding or cooperative action based on a sense of personal dignity and group responsibility to man or God."

Unions and individuals attending the rally gave the Archbishop $15,000 for the orphans' home. It will be used for a shop to teach trades to the children.

2 More House By-Elections Near

IN THE WAKE of the upset Democratic victory in Wisconsin's 9th Congressional Dist., two more House by-elections are coming up in the next two weeks.

The special elections, which will give Democrats a chance to cut Republican control of the House down to a one-vote margin, will be held Nov. 3 in New Jersey's 6th Dist. and Nov. 10 in California's 24th Dist.

Both are urban districts in contrast to the largely rural character of the Wisconsin 9th. The California 24th is in Los Angeles and the New Jersey 6th takes in Union County, which is industrial and suburban residential.

In the New Jersey contest, held to fill the seat left vacant by the resignation of Rep. Clifford P. Case, CIO-PAC is backing Democrat Harrison A. Williams, Jr., a former CIO Steelworker currently practicing law in Newark. His opponent is George F. Hetfield, the Republican candidate who is also an attorney. The district has polled an average 23,000 vote majority for the Republican candidate in the last four general elections.

A LARGE turnout is expected because of the hotly-contested gubernatorial election between Democrat Robert B. Meyner, who has CIO support, and Republican Paul L. Troast.

The Los Angeles special election will be held to choose a successor to Republican Norris Poulson, who resigned when he was elected Mayor. Two Democrats and two Republicans have filed for the race, complicating the picture.

The strongest candidates are generally conceded to be Democrat George Arnold, who is supported by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council, and Glennard Lipscomb, who has the backing of the Nixon faction in California Republican circles.

Arnold, a 32-year-old attorney, is the son of famed trust-buster Thurman Arnold and the son-in-law of Columnist Drew Pearson. Registration in the district in 1950 gave the Democrats a presumed 10,000 vote edge, but the district went for Eisenhower over Stevenson in 1952.

Justice Dept. Clears McCarthy As Bricker's Legal Deal Hit

REPUBLICAN Joe McCarthy last week won a white-wash from the Republican-biased Justice Dept. as his GOP colleague, Sen. Bricker (O.) came under charges of wrong-doing.

McCarthy, whose tangled affairs had been under study for months, had a carefully worded "clean" bill of health from Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell. Brownell said:

- The probe of McCarthy's financial dealings, including charges he took money entrusted to him for an anti-Communist campaign and used it to finance dealings on the commodity market, had been completed. "The report fails to show" McCarthy guilty of any "possible offenses within the department's jurisdiction."

- Similarly, the Justice Dept. found nothing to "present to a grand jury" concerning McCarthy's role in the 1950 senatorial election in Maryland, where the Wisconsin Senator had been active in the successful battle to unseat the veteran Millard Tydings.

BROWNELL added, "this (the clean bill of health) does not apply, of course, to possible violations of the income tax laws which have been referred to the Treasury Dept. and are still under investigation."

Meantime, the Americans for Democratic Action was demanding the ouster of Bricker, who is chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, which handles legislation affecting railroads.

Bricker is head of a Columbus, O., law firm which represents the Pennsylvania Railroad and Bricker receives a substantial income as a result of fees paid by the railroad.

"There seems to be serious questions of propriety involved," the ADA said. "The chairman of a Senate committee should be beyond reproach and above suspicion."

BRICKER has admitted he hasn't practiced law since 1947 and turns over his $12,500-a-year salary to the law firm and, in return, draws $24,000 a year, "or $11,500 retainer for which he no longer renders legal services," the ADA said.

The Pennsylvania Railroad is involved in much legislation coming before the Senate Commerce Committee, including the St. Lawrence Seaway.

The Justice Dept. also ordered a grand jury probe of Warren L. Stephenson, Washington "four percenter" and secretary of the Eisenhower inaugural committee.

The Republican influence peddler has admitted offering a West Coast firm a better Navy contract in return for a 4% commission. The probe would be into charges that Stephenson committed perjury during a congressional hearing last summer.

2 Plants Won By IUE-CIO In Big Chains

At the Westinghouse plant in Farimount, W. Va., members of Local 627 of the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers bolted and voted to join about 51,000 other employes of the firm already enjoying IUE-CIO representation

The tally was 97 for IUE-CIO, 81 for the UE, and 1 for no union. IUE-CIO Local 627 has represented 1200 Fairmount production workers for some years. The defeat leaves the UE with bargaining rights for only 10,000 Westinghouse workers in some six locations.

THE GENERAL Electric election was held at the Springfield, N.J., plant. The IUE-CIO polled 32 votes to 28 ballots marked for the AFL federal union that had failed to improve wages and working conditions.

IUE-CIO now represents 78,000 GE workers in 46 local unions ranging from coast to coast and from the deep South to Canada.

In another small but significant election, Remington-Rand typewriter service machine workers in Chicago chose the IUE-CIO to represent them, 58 votes to 7 for no union.

EMPLOYES of the Grant Money Meter Co., Providence, R. I., who had rejected union representation for years, voted 17 to 0 to affiliate with the IUE-CIO as the climax to an organizing campaign by other IUE-CIO locals in the city.

In Philadelphia, employes of the Crown Marking Equipment Co., fresh from a victory in a 10-week strike caused by two discharges, kicked out an independent union and affiliated with the IUE-CIO by a vote of 96 to 11 for no union.

IUE Hits GE On Layoffs, Dividends

PRES. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers last week accused the General Electric Co. of "helping to promote a recession" by voting a $28.8 million extra dividend to stockholders while laying off thousands of employes.

Carey, who also is CIO secretary-treasurer, made the charge in a telegram to GE Pres. Ralph Cordiner. The "tremendous windfall" to stockholders, he said, was obviously based on a 23% increase in profits for the first nine months of 1953 announced at the same time as the extra dividend.

He asked for a meeting with Cordiner to discuss layoffs, which he estimated will amount to 7% of recent employment levels in GE-plants under IUE-CIO contract.

4 Mediation Offices Shut

CONGRESSIONAL penny-pinching has forced the U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Service to close regional offices in three major industrial cities and Washington, D. C.

Whitley P. McCoy, chief of the service, said the closings were ordered in Boston, Detroit and Dallas, in addition to Washington, "because we've got to save some money."

"We can't operate next year on the same amount," he added, explaining the cut will save about $72,000 out of the $3.2 budget for 1953.

McCoy said mediators will remain in the areas they have been serving, but will work from other regional offices.

The short-change job of the Mediation Service parallel cuts for the U. S. Employment Service and the Labor Dept.'s Wage-Hour Div., which has forced closing of many local offices handling unemployment insurance and wage-hour claims.

Pete Swim Gets New U. S. Post

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

STARTING with the Armistice Day sales you'll find better buying opportunities for the family's winter clothing. Prices are always highest at the start of the season, so it doesn't pay to buy expensive items like coats too early unless you need one right away. Price-cutting on winter garments is sharpest in the December and January clearances.

Fortunately, winter clothing prices are slightly less costly than a year ago except for a price rise on men's suits of $2-$3. Here are specific tips to help you pick best buys in the clothing sales:

COATS: Whether for man, woman or child, the soft-fabric coats give poor wear. If you buy a coat for Sunday or similar once-in-a-while wear, such soft fabrics as fleeces, wool velour, flannel, and similar napped fabrics are all right. But for hard wear, consider the sturdier weaves, such as cheviot, tweed, homespun, covert (if tightly-woven). For men and boys, melton and mackinaw cloth also make hard-wearing coats.

When you shop for coats look at the label to see what the fiber content is. That's one of the most important factors in determining how well the coat will wear and look, and how warm it will be. Generally all-wool (new or virgin wool) is preferable to a mixture of new and reprocessed wool.

At least 50% new wool is vital for warmth and good wear. But in every case examine the quality of the fabric yourself. New wool can be poor or good quality, and so can reprocessed. A good coat fabric should be closely woven, firm (pull on it in both directions), springy and resilient (so that when you grasp a handful and release it, the cloth quickly resumes its shape).

Some fabrics are also part cotton or rayon. Cotton is not as warm as wool, nor does it keep its shape as well, but a little in a wool blend adds durability and so you often find it in children's coats.

Coats of part rayon are inexpensive but rayon does not have wool's warmth or shape retention if you expect to give the coat hard daily wear.

These days you'll also find coats made of a blend of wool and Orlon, one of the "miracle" fibers which are proving to be not quite as miraculous as DuPont advertised.

CHILDREN'S SNOW SUITS: These can run into money, and are confusing to buy because of the variety of materials and construction. To cut through this confusion, follow these two shopping points:

1. Avoid highly-decorated snowsuits which cost extra because of embroidery and other trim.

2. The construction itself should consist of a closely-woven cotton or rayon shell with a wool lining. This two-layer construction is both lighter-weight and warmer than one heavy layer of wool, because the tightly-woven outer shell is wind resistant. Suits with just cotton linings, even if suede cloth or cotton kasha, may not be warm enough in the colder parts of the country. At least 25% wool content in the lining is necessary for real warmth. Alpaca linings are very warm but are cumbersome and hard to clean.

The outer shell should be a poplin, twill or gabardine weave to give hard wear. A blend of 15% nylon in the outer shell will give more wear than just an all-rayon material but expensive all-nylon suits are not necessary.

FOOD: Use the lower grades of beef to keep down your food bills, as long as they remain in comparatively plentiful supply this month. These are the "Good" and "Commercial" grades. Don't feel you are doing your family an injustice buying these lower grades. They require longer moist cooking but actually give you better nutrition than the costlier "Choice" beef.

Soft-Soap Ads Get FTC Check

FTC revealed it is carrying out an "informal" preliminary check of the current ad drive, but hasn't filed any complaints as yet.

The American Dental Association recently said the decay-preventing claims in the toothpaste ads are the bunk.

Shoe Workers Act On Strike

NEGOTIATORS for the CIO Shoe Workers voted unanimously last week to recommend a strike, effective Nov. 2, against the International Shoe Co., largest employer in the industry.

The action was taken after the committee, headed by Pres. Russell Taylor, reviewed the breakdown of negotiations for a new contract at meetings in St. Louis, the firm's headquarters. The present agreement expires Oct. 31.

The recommendation must be acted on by 11,000 USWA-CIO members in 34 locals employed in the company's plants in Missouri, Illinois, Arkansas and New Hampshire. It was voted at a meeting attended by Pres. John Mara, Vice Pres. Frank Anderson and other representatives of the AFL Boot & Shoe Workers, which has been negotiating with the firm on behalf of 5000 members in 16 locals.

Taylor said the company has made no offer in reply to the USWA-CIO demand for a 15c an hour pay boost, union shop, pension plan and other contract improvements.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

A DELEGATION of Burmese labor and government labor officials called on me, about a week ago. They were in our country studying our methods and our trade unions. Mr. U Kyaw represented the Burmese Embassy in Washington, Mr. U Maung Maung is the deputy minister for housing & labor in charge of trade unions, and Mr. U Htun Tin is legal adviser to the Burmese Trade Union Congress.

These gentlemen told me something of the terrifying problems faced by our neighbors of the East. They are starting from scratch, not only economically, but culturally, insofar as the development of trade unions is concerned. The fact they have made enormous strides is a tribute to their courage and perseverance.

Such visits keep us reminded of the tremendous burden of responsibility which rests on the shoulders of American labor, whether we want it there or not. We are looked to for leadership, and we must meet the challenge by continually strengthening our own organization and by continually seeking the betterment of conditions among our own workers.

OUR ORGANIZATIONAL efforts continue at a high level. As I reported to you, some time ago, the reorganization we undertook in CIO has increased the emphasis we have placed on organizing while creating a sound structure for administration and service. The past few weeks has seen many organizational victories. Here are those which have been reported to the Organization Dept.:

CIO Furniture Workers: victories at Kay Manufacturing Co., Rogers-Wade Furniture Co., Paris, Tex., Memphis Seating Co.; CIO Oil Workers, Jaegle Paint & Varnish Co.; CIO Shipbuilders, Durant, Inc.; CIO Textile Workers: Philadelphia Textile Finishers, Inc.

CIO Auto Workers; Colonial Motors, Inc.; CIO Steelworkers: Albert H. Voight, Inc., Brown Trailers, Inc., Consolidated Chemical Industries, Inc., Little Rock, Ariz., Fairbanks Morse & Co., Stuttgart, Ark.: American Chrome Co., Nye, Mont.

CIO Electrical Workers: Independent Lock Co., Selma, Ala.; CIO Chemical Workers, Ironhide Refractories Inc., Matawan, N. J., Merck & Co., Danville, Pa.; CIO Brewery Workers: American Tobacco Co., Willkes Barre, Pa.; CIO Paperworkers: Quality Paper Box Co., East Boston, Mass.; CIO Shoe Workers: Selwyn Shoe Manufacturing Co., Booneville, Mo.; CIO Rubber Workers: Cambridge Rubber Co., Taneytown, Md.

N. Y. Labor Plans Big Rally To Aid DPO Hearn's Strike

ORGANIZED labor in New York will soon stage a parade through the midtown section and a mass meeting in Madison Square Garden to mobilize support for 800 members of the CIO Distributive, Processing & Office Workers on strike at two Hearn's Stores since May 14.

Plans were approved at an emergency meeting of more than 500 representatives of CIO and AFL unions called in view of the threat to all unions posed by an injunction forbidding all picketing at the two stores.

The meeting was called by the Greater New York CIO Council, with Pres. Michael Quill, who also is president of the CIO Transport Workers, in the chair. He and other CIO and AFL leaders reviewed the recent increase in the use of the injunction to hamper striking unions.

Other speakers included Pres. Louis Hollander of the State CIO Council; Sec.-Treas. Marx Lewis, AFL Hatters; Financial Sec. Gavin McPherson, Local 22, CIO Shipbuilders; Sec. William Wolpert, United Hebrew Trades Council, and Sec.-Treas. Peter Ottley, Local 44, AFL Hotel Front Service Employes. Local 22, AFL Garment Workers, sent a pledge of support from a meeting of 3500 members.

UFWA Gets Wage Hikes For 5000

RAISES for 5000 CIO Furniture Workers were chalked up last week as strikes in several areas were settled.

Pres. Morris Pizer of UFWA-CIO said 1100 employes of the American Furniture Co., Martinsville, Va., are holding solid in their strike.

Settlements cited by Pizer included: Heywood-Wakefield Co., Gardner, Mass., 1300 workers; plants in Fort Smith, Ark., 1200; in Rockford, Ill., 700; in Boston, 200 and at scattered plants employing about 500.

Significant gains were won without a strike at Ionia Mfg. Co., Ionia, Mich., employing over 1000, and at several smaller Michigan plants.

Pizer said the issue in all situations was wages, "in most cases, current negotiations provided the first real opportunity since wage controls were abolished to . . . enable the furniture workers to share fairly in the prosperity now enjoyed by the industry."

Board Cancels Union's Rights On Red Oath

CERTIFICATION of Local 214, Fur & Leather Workers, as bargaining agent for 125 employes of the Am-O-Krome Co., Cincinnati tannery, has been revoked by the National Labor Relations Board because one of its officers lied to the FBI about his Communist activity.

Chairman Guy Farmer, during a speech in Washington, said the NLRB is developing a "new and more stringent program" for dealing with union officers who falsely swear they are not Communists when they take their T-H oaths.

THE NLRB said the local failed to show cause why its certification should not be withdrawn when it was called on to do so after its recording-financial secretary - treasurer, Tevis Bruce Schooler, pleaded guilty in Federal Court at Cincinnati to making false statements to the FBI.

The board pointed out that when Local 241 was certified in 1950, Schooler signed a non-Communist oath as required by the Taft-Hartley Act. In view of his plea of guilty, it held the local was not in compliance and called on it to show cause why the certification should not be revoked.

UAW Strikes Plane Firm

SOME 32,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers late last week struck the Los Angeles and Columbus, O., plants of North American Aviation.

Picket lines were set up one minute after the old contract expired. The UAW aircraft workers had voted overwhelmingly to turn down the company proposals which they termed inadequate. Wages, inequities and insurance benefits are the main strike issues.

TWUA Makes Plea For $1.20 Wool-Worsted Minimum

AN URGENT request for an immediate boost in the prevailing minimum wage in the woolen and worsted industry to at least $1.20 an hour was filed with Sec. of Labor James P. Mitchell last week by the CIO Textile Workers.

TWUA-CIO Sec.-Treas. John Chupka reminded the new Secretary that the present minimum of $1.05 an hour, under the Walsh-Healey Public Contract Act, was adopted May 14, 1949, and "is completely outdated."

HE RECALLED also that the proposed increase has been pending since Nov. 16, 1951, when the union asked for a redetermination. Hearings were held and on Jan. 19 last, the late Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin served notice of a $1.20 minimum. In March, additional hearings were ordered by his successor, former Sec. Martin P. Durkin. These were held in April, and there has been no action since.

"Failure to act on this routine issue—the redetermination of minimum wages on the basis of the facts submitted by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the interested parties—is emasculating the Public Contracts Act and denying workers on government contracts the protection the law says they shall get," Chupka wrote.

The union presented evidence showing that 115,762 of the 130,000 employes in the industry get at least $1.265 an hour.

Hutcheson Of Carpenters Dies

NMU Gets Ship-Shape For Next Voyage

By FRED ROSS

THE GOOD SHIP NMU docked last week in New York port after a successful two-year voyage to be refitted for another trip on the economic and political seas.

The CIO Maritime Union met in New York City for its ninth biennial convention, and took a strong stand on aiding rank-and-file longshoremen in their fight against racketeers.

Sunburned and looking fit after recovering from a heart attack that followed the recent successful negotiations with the Atlantic and Gulf Coast ship operators, NMU Pres. Joseph Curran recounted the union's gains to the 500 delegates representing 45,000 seafaring members.

"WE CAN SAY, without fear of contradiction, that the NMU today, after completing the recent negotiations, has the highest wages, the best hours, and the best working conditions of any maritime union in the field," Curran said.

While the convention stated in emphatic terms its opposition to racketeering in the explosive waterfront situation, it offered "the handclasp of fraternal friendship" to working longshoremen.

"We must warn politicians and reformers," he added, "that they are making a grave mistake when they smear thousands of honest and decent longshoremen in an attempt to clean out the guilty few."

HE SAID that NMU is not taking sides and holds no briefs for the AFL-chartered Intl. Longshoremen's Association, the AFL Seafarers or the AFL-expelled ILA.

(See the policy statement below.)

The convention instructed the union's delegates to the CIO convention next month to vote for the no-raiding agreement with AFL.

In speaking for the resolution, Curran warned that "if our sister organization, the Seafarers Intl. Union (AFL), violates this pact then we are free to do the same thing."

"Those groups who would attempt to destroy the CIO better be careful that they don't destroy themselves," Curran said.

Later the convention voted unanimous approval of Curran's suggestion that national officers meet with representatives of the Sailors Union of the Pacific, an SIU affiliate, to discuss mutual problems.

Curran said the union could be "proud" of its contract gains, which include $300 a month for able-bodied seamen, vacations ranging up to four weeks for 12 months service on a tanker and $3500 life, accidental death and dismemberment benefits. He added:

"We have met and defeated many kinds of factions, many kinds of groups, and the union has continued to grow, grow and grow, in spite of the facts that these groups told us that if they were eliminated from the organization it would die. It not only has not died, but it is the strongest maritime union in the field today."

OVATION—CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther waves to cheering delegates as he prepares to address the Maritime Union convention. NMU Pres. Joseph Curran adjusts the microphone while other union officers and guests join in ovation.

'Open Up Dat Golden Gate—'

The Pearly Gates are closed to most lawyers, but labor attorneys have an entry there, according to Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

A corporation lawyer, he related to the NMU delegates, died and applied for entrance to Heaven. The admission committee refused to approve him, Goldberg said, and the next applicant, a tax attorney, likewise was turned down.

Then a labor lawyer appeared before the committee, which also swung the black ball. St. Peter over heard the conversation and shouted:

"Let him in—he's been through hell already."

"That's the way it used to be; it was hell to be a labor lawyer," G dberg added to the NMU. "It is now a great privilege to represent an organization like yours."

Once Seaman On SS Hoover, Reuther Hails NMU's Gains

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther spoke from personal experience as a seaman when he told the NMU convention that the union had made remarkable progress.

He recalled that 18 years ago he shipped out of Yokohama "as a wiper on that ill-fated ship called SS Pres. Hoover, and I'm sure that no one with good sense would give a good ship that bad name."

"I know what it was like back in 1935, and I know what it is like now, because I saw the conditions," Reuther said. "I know something about the wages that seamen are making because the NMU has made that fight, and built a great union."

REUTHER also lambasted the Republican Administration for its "trickle-down theory," which he said is based on the idea that "if the banquet tables of the few wealthy families are piled higher and higher, some of the crumbs will get brushed off for the people down below."

"In 1953 we don't have a Cadillac production machine," Reuther said. "We have a high-octane supersonic jet job, and unless we get a comparable distribution machine to keep abreast of that production machine we are in trouble.

"We can raise the living standards of every family at least $1500 a year by 1960, provided we have the courage to mobilize that great productive machinery."

He called for better schools and housing, and greater consideration for the needs of the farmers with whom, he said, the CIO should work "economically and politically." He also urged increasing the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour and Social Security retirement allotments for a couple to $174 a month.

REUTHER said that "the New Deal has been taken over by the Big Steal."

"Keep your eye on Washington, because the Big Steal is just getting underway, and the biggest steal is going to be on the tax front," he warned.

Delegates Hit Move To Shut Ship Hospitals

THE CIO Maritime Union convention voiced "bitter opposition" to the Republican Administration's proposal to close U. S. Public Service Hospitals.

Seamen have received free medical care in the hospitals for more than 150 years.

The delegates also noted in another resolution that the Military Sea Transportation Service fleet is "66% larger than it was at the outbreak of the Korean war." The convention demanded that Congress pass S. 1439, introduced by Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.), and other bills "now pending before it to curb the expansionist policy of the MSTS."

CONGRESS was asked in another resolution "to prevent transfers of American-flag ships to foreign flags and to bring back under the American flag those ships which are owned by American companies but operated under foreign flags."

The delegates also called for a program to aid the shipbuilding industry "which is depressed with unemployment while American shipowners and the United States government continue to place orders with foreign shipyards."

The convention also authorized a referendum on a number of constitutional changes.

NMU Backs Rank And File N. Y. Longshoremen

Highlights of the CIO Maritime Union statement of policy on the New York waterfront situation, adopted at last week's convention, are given below:

THE NATIONAL Maritime Union follows a policy of attending to the business of the union and of not interfering with the affairs of other labor organizations. This policy has brought the National Maritime Union to its present strength with unmatched gains for its members in wages, working conditions and status. We propose to continue along this road.

We have no illusions that crime and corruption do not exist on the waterfront. But this is not a new discovery which suddenly came to public attention. It is clear that this deplorable condition could not have been tolerated all these years except for the incompetence or connivance of the law enforcement authorities.

We find no justification for permitting criminal elements to infest the waterfront and other sections of our nation—in high places and low. But we believe it foolhardy and unjust to burn the barn to get rid of some rats. Morality is not a matter of legislation or legislative body—as recent events in political circles have shamefully demonstrated. A police problem has been magnified beyond all proportion, by playing on public concern.

The approach of using government hiring halls and compulsory work registration opens the door to political control of jobs and may breed worse conditions than they are designed to correct.

We have faith and confidence in our democratic institutions. We believe in the integrity and honest purposes of our brothers who live from the backbreaking longshore work. We believe in their right as union men to choose their own unions and to solve their own internal problems without being exploited for political advantage at the expense of their freedom.

WE FULLY support the interests and objectives of the rank-and-file longshoremen. We believe, in the last analysis, these men must solve their own problems, however difficult and long the road may be. Government union-busting interference must not be allowed to operate under cover of ferreting out so-called lawbreakers. For that purpose, sufficient government agencies already exist—if they will function effectively.

Our experience in the National Maritime Union gives living proof that the struggle for a democratic union can be achieved against towering odds. We succeeded—and so can the longshoremen if given the chance.

We stand behind the working longshoremen, without taking sides, without interference, without baseball bat organization or imported goon squads, without supporting questionable politicians—but with the hand of fraternal friendship firmly clasped in theirs.

A clean longshore union can be achieved—and will be—without oppressive government interference, because working longshoremen and working seamen work together, think together and have the same goals of decent wages, good working conditions and full job opportunities.

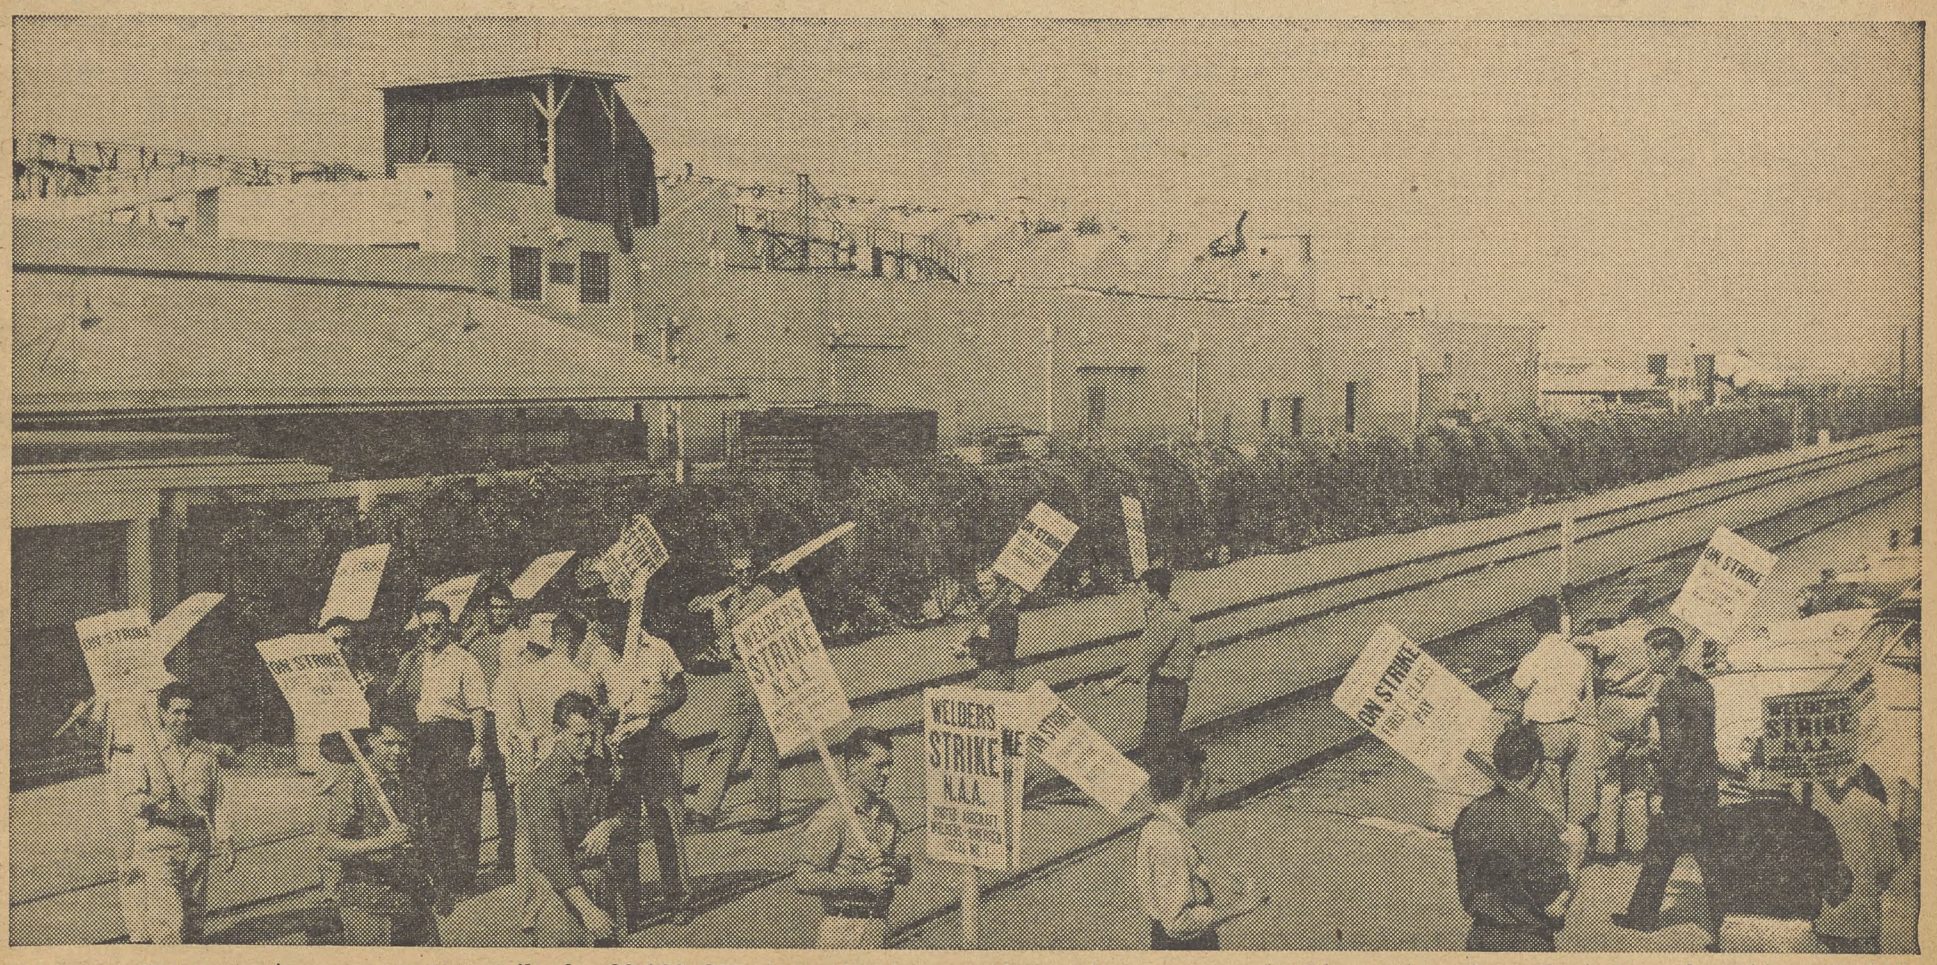
East Side— And all around the town, PAC campaign workers led by the New York City CIO Council were putting a final push in their drive to help elect Robert F. Wagner, Jr., Democratic candidate for mayor. From a Council sound truck (above), Helen Blanchard of the CIO Government Employees and Tim Cronin of the CIO Transport Workers address TWU shop repairmen. (Story on Page 9)



West Side— A cross-country strike by 33,000 CIO Auto Workers at three plants of the big North American Aviation, Inc., was under way last week. UAW pickets at the main Los Angeles plant (above) were joined by strikers from the independent Aircraft Welders. Other UAW members are out at Fresno, Calif., and Columbus, O., in fight for "first class" pay. (Story and picture, Page 3)

Signs On The Economic Horizon . . .

The contrasting positions of the nation's workers and management in the developing economic recession is indicated in this digest of recent reports:

WORK WEEK: For the first time in 14 months, the average work week for 14 million U. S. factory production workers has dropped below 40 hours. This is regarded as a key indication of economic conditions.

The average work week in mid-September was 39.6 hours, down an hour in a month (partially because of the Labor Day holiday, also because of widespread reductions in production). Average weekly earnings dropped, by $1.20 to $70.49, which means less production, less consumer buying power.

EMPLOYMENT: The cutback trend in industry was indicated by another U. S. report on employment, showing that September was the second straight month of below-seasonal employment gains. Usually total non-farm jobs climb by 500,000; this year the increase was only 200,000, "primarily due to the absence of the usual seasonal increase in manufacturing," BLS said. Actual manufacturing pay-rolls from mid-August to mid-September dropped by about 60,000.

LAYOFFS: The direct impact on industrial production and employment of the nation's farm price crisis—as emphasized by CIO spokesmen at recent House Agricultural Committee hearings—was underscored by announcement of the Caterpillar Tractor Co. at Peoria, Ill., that it will lay off another 2000 employes. The General Motors Chevrolet-Shell division at St. Louis will lay off 1100 workers.

PRODUCTION: An economic survey by U. S. News and World Report estimated total factory output has dropped by 4% from the 1953 peak, predicted a further 10% decline by next spring. By industries, a 20% cut in steel production was predicted, with other declines of from 7% to 16% predicted for metal working, furniture, lumber, textiles, chemicals, rubber, oil, paper and coal mining.

PRICES: A consumer price index for 10 major cities, reported by the National Industrial Conference Board, climbed again in September to set a new high for the third straight month. The board figured the 1939 dollar now is worth 54.7c, compared with 55.6c a year ago.

CONSUMERS: With consumers' debts now at a record $21 billion, a survey by the Wall Street Journal of 12 cities reported: "Delinquencies in payments on consumer and personal loans generally are on the rise. Repossessions of autos and appliances . . . are at post-war highs for many lenders."

EARNINGS: Giant U. S. Steel Corp., the world's largest steel producer, last week reported its third quarter earnings climbed by 130% and voted its usual 75c quarterly dividend.

Big Steel earnings were $61.7 million or $2.12 a share on common stock compared with $30.4 million and 92c a share during the strike period a year ago.

General Motors, which for years has set world-wide profit records, announced it made more money during the first nine months of this year than any other company has ever made in a full year period. Nine-month sales were $7.9 billion which is a 43% jump over the $5.5 billion chalked up during the same period last year.

The Commerce Dept. reported U. S. corporation dividend payments in September were up 6% over the same '52 month, while gain for the year is 4.5%. Some of the gains by industrial groups: Electrical utilities 11%, railroads 12%, communications 16%, gas companies 23%.

What do businessmen think of the economic setback? The Union Voice, bulletin of CIO Auto Workers Local 6 at the Melrose Park, Ill., plant of International Harvester, quotes Edward L. Ryerson, chairman of the Inland Steel Co. and a Harvester director:

To which the UAW bulletin adds: "Next time you see a laid off worker around, try that one on him."

Living Costs At New Peak For 4th Month In A Row

THE COST OF LIVING hit its fourth consecutive all-time high in the month ending Sept. 15, the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics announced with an air of embarrassment last week.

The announcement—and the bureau's slightly pink cheeks—came only a week after Pres. Eisenhower told a news conference that living costs were flattening out despite the peaks reached in the previous three months.

The index figure went up two-tenths of 1% between mid-August and mid-September, from 115 to 115.2. It was the seventh straight month it has moved upward by a total of 1.2% from the 1953 low of 113.4 on Feb. 15. That was less than a month after the Republican Administration took office, the echoes of its campaign pledges to halt the rise still echoing in a hopeful public's ears.

The latest jump reflected higher prices in every item in the BLS market basket except food. A drop of three-tenths of 1% in that item, however, was not enough to offset other hikes.

THE LARGEST increase was in apparel costs, which went up 1% during the month. Rent and medical care each rose seven-tenths of 1%. Other items showed fractional increases.

The drop in food prices was sparked by the fact that fresh fruits and vegetables showed a seasonal decline amounting to 5.4%. Meats, poultry and fish were off one-half of 1%, but egg prices soared 4.5%.

The index reading showed the cost of living 1% higher than a year ago, and 13.2% above the figure on June 15, 1950, just before the Korean war started.

It has no effect on major union contracts with cost of living clauses, all of which are keyed to other dates.

The U. S. Dept, of Agriculture's Bureau of Agricultural Economics predicted last week the country will have about the same amount of food and pay about the same prices in 1954 as it did in 1953.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS Index:

Period	Index		Period	Old Index	New Index
1939 monthly average	99.4		1950: June 15	170.2

'—They're Keeping Their Promise'

The Ohio CIO newsletter tells this story of the Eisenhower promise to reduce taxes.

In a Cleveland plant recently a long list of workers scheduled to be laid off was posted on the bulletin board. In answer to an "I like Ike" comment scrawled at the top of the list, another worker wrote across the bottom:

"The GOP promised to reduce taxes. They're keeping their promise. When you can't work you don't pay taxes."

Optical Union Wins 7-Month Boston Strike

THE SEVEN-month strike against Marine Optical Co. in Boston has ended with a better contract won by the employes, members of CIO Optical Workers Local 208.

All efforts on the part of management to break the union, including attempts to subcontract his work in Petersburg, Va., were defeated.

THE AGREEMENT contains the union shop, check-off, seniority rights, eight holidays with pay, two weeks vacation for most employes, a satisfactory grievance and arbitration machinery.

Another positive feature is leave of absence for maternity, eight weeks before and eight weeks after delivery, with no loss of seniority. The company has many women employes.

Optical workers throughout the country gave all-out assistance to these fighting employes, and support came also from many other CIO and AFL unions.

D. C. Contracts To Bar Racial Bias

Contractors doing business with the District of Columbia must end discriminatory practices, it was ruled last week.

Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell announced future contracts will contain an anti-discrimination clause similar to those written with the federal government. Race, creed, color or national origin will no longer be tolerated as employment bars for those hired by concerns doing business with the nation's capital city.

IUE Urges Action On New England Layoffs

WHILE PROFITS in the electrical industry soared, a CIO Electrical Workers delegation arrived in Washington last week to seek federal action to check growing unemployment in New England.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey declared the delegation's mission was urgent because of the worsening economic conditions in New England's electrical, radio and machine industry.

He said that a survey made by the union showed that 60 days ago the largest New England plants under contract to IUE-CIO employed 69,000 workers. Current and projected layoffs, Carey added, will put on the streets 6000 workers, or about 8% of the total.

The group, who represented IUE-CIO's New England locals, also called on the heads of defense and procurement agencies. Officials of the Massachusetts CIO Council accompanied the delegation.

An IUE survey of General Electric plants showed that at Lynn, Mass., 1700, or 10% of the work force, will be laid off by the end of the year, and at Bridgeport, Conn., between 200 and 300 have been laid off and the total will mount to 1500 by next April.

At Pittsfield, Mass., 400 have been laid off, and 400 more are marked to go by the end of 1953. Other sections of the country will be affected by GE layoff including those at Philadelphia and Erie, and Schenectady, N. Y., where GE's largest plant is located.

DAVID LASSER, IUE's research director, said that GE management attributes the layoffs to cutbacks in the military program, which is directly contrary to a statement GE Pres. Ralph Cordiner made to the meeting of the company's directors that voted an extra dividend to stockholders of $28.8 million. Cordiner was quoted as saying there would be no plant cutbacks.

Earlier, Carey wired Cordiner that GE was "helping to promote a recession" by voting the dividend while laying off thousands of employes.

Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) pointed out the gravity of the New England unemployment situation in a letter to Pres. Eisenhower, and called for prompt action.

"Talk of special tax amortization incentives, RFC loans or set-aside contracts for such areas has thus far resulted in nothing," Kennedy wrote the President. He urged swift steps "to remedy this inaction, to help our communities and businessmen help themselves."

MEANWHILE, the Bureau of Labor Statistics announced that ready money to pay jobless workers has hit a new high, but since the number of workers covered has also risen, there is no gain in protection.

BLS said state unemployment insurance funds totalled $8.8 billion by Aug. 31 and the number of covered workers rose to more than 36 million.

There is a wide variation in the ability of states to meet claims, BLS estimated, with 11 states able to tap reserves at the present rate for 15 years while the reserves in seven states could run dry in less than five years.

Jobless Pay Wait Period Prolonged

Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell revealed last week that the Labor Dept. recommended that states pay unemployment insurance bi-weekly instead of weekly, as an economy move.

This came out when he replied to a letter to Rep. Lane (D. Mass., who protested a directive issued by the Massachusetts Director of unemployment security which required the jobless to wait two weeks before they receive their pay checks.

NO-RAID PACT IN ACTION—"We pledge you 100% support . . . until victory is obtained," said AFL Machinists when some 33,000 CIO Auto Workers struck North American Aviation. At big Local 887's strike headquarters, IAM Rep. D. D. Reed (dark coat) shakes hands with Pres. Paul H. Schrade of the Los Angeles local. Other UAW locals backed strikers, who also are out at Fresno, Calif., and Columbus, O.

'North American Wanted Strike'—33,000 Out In 3 Big Plants

THE STRIKE of some 33,000 UAW-CIO aircraft workers against the North American Aviation Co. "is one the company has repeatedly attempted to force on the union," John W. Livingston charged last week.

The walkout began at the company's main Los Angeles plant and at Columbus, O., and quickly spread to a third plant in Fresno, Calif.

Livingston, Auto Workers vice-president and director of the union's Aircraft Dept., said the basic issue in the dispute "arises out of North American's refusal to meet the wage and contract standards already established in comparable industries which also do aircraft work."

In Columbus, a local judge held an extraordinary Sunday court session for a hearing which upheld an earlier temporary restraining order severely limiting pickets, although both company and union sources reported that picketing had been peaceful.

IN LOS ANGELES, North American got a temporary restraining order directing pickets to maintain a distance of 20 feet apart and to walk in single file. The order requires pickets to yield the right of way to persons or vehicles entering or leaving the plant.

Secret-ballot strike votes, taken about a month after negotiations began Sep. 1, resulted in "approximately 95% majority authorizing the strike action," Livingston said.

A mass meeting of between 9000 and 10,000 workers in Columbus and 14,000 in Los Angeles the morning after contract expiration reaffirmed the union's action with overwhelming votes to reject the company's so-called "final offer" of a flat 4% raise. The 1000 production workers at Fresno joined the strike a day later.

UAW's wage demand, Livingston said, "is based on the differential of approximately 25c per hour which exists between NAA and auto companies doing aircraft work." The union is also seeking severance pay and pensions, a skilled trade differential, and elimination of multiple wage-level classifications and job inequities.

THE UNION sent a telegram, signed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Livingston, to Defense Sec. Charles Wilson prior to the strike, advising him of the strike authorization and offering to "review the matter." The Defense Dept., Livingston said, informed him that neither it nor the Air Force was interested and regarded the problem strictly a bargaining matter. North American builds Sabre Jet fighters.

In a similar deadlock last year, the issues were submitted to a panel named by former Pres. Truman.

"The panel," Livingston said, "repudiated the arguments of the company and supported the union's position with regard to the aircraft wage inequity." It ordered an additional 5c wage increase, pointing out that this did not correct the wage inequity, but was all that could be allowed under the existing wage stabilization program.

Livingston said the union accepted the panel's decision that the differential should be handled through collective bargaining at such time as the parties where not bound by any stabilization program. "But this year the company has refused to give any weight to the decision," Livingston said.

USA Gains On Ore Carriers

THE CIO Steelworkers have negotiated contracts with three more Great Lakes shipping companies providing wage increases of from 8.5c to 13.5c for ore boat seamen.

The first company to sign with USA-CIO was Inland Steel. With the completion of the three additional contracts, some 625 seamen on about 25 vessels are covered by USA-CIO pacts.

The ore boat seamen also won 10 paid holidays, a modified union shop and vacations up to three weeks for 15 years' service. USA-CIO negotiators were headed by Joseph P. Molony, district director, who is also chairman of the Great Lakes Seamen organizing drive.

U.S. Action On Farmers, Israel Rapped By CIO

"SHOCKINGLY" strong action by the U. S. government in suspending the aid program for Israel was described as "an affront . . . to the cause of world democracy" by the CIO Executive Committee at its meeting in Washington last week.

"We recommend," the committee said, "that our government take steps not to penalize the government of Israel, but to develop a constructive program for Arabs and Jews alike, to develop a peace in the Middle East that will make possible a settlement of current disputes over the borders of Israel, over the development of the River Jordan Valley and over other existing problems in that area."

U. S. AID had been suspended because of a dispute over Israel's Jordan River water diversion project. The CIO Executive Committee statement was issued as Israel acceded to a United Nations' request that it suspend work pending settlement of differences with Syria, and the U. S. cancelled the suspension.

Sec. of State John Foster Dulles announced that $26 million has been allocated for the period ending Dec. 31.

The CIO statement praised U. S. policy toward Israel since it was founded as "just and humanitarian . . . an important part of the promotion of America's self-interest in supporting free, democratic countries."

"We have recognized through this entire period," it continued, "that the reactionary leaders of the neighboring Arab states have resented the establishment of a bastion of democracy in that area . . .

"TWO CIO delegations to Israel in the last four years have noted that Israel was surrounded by hostile neighbors who were in constant violation of its borders, who sought to harrass its economic and political development and who, on many occasions, have called for the destruction of this young republic . . .

"We are convinced that it (U. S. suspension of aid) will lead to a strengthening of the arrogance and belligerence of the reactionary undemocratic leaders of those Arab nations—and, consequently, will tend to encourage them to further aggression against Israel."

UNLESS Congress repudiates the Eisenhower Administration's "misguided" approach to the farm crisis, the country will see a "general economic turndown which can only result in widespread depression," the CIO Executive Committee warned last week.

Expressing alarm at recent developments in the Administration's agricultural policies, the committee repudiated the action of "timid men" in Washington in attributing farm ills to overproduction and a "readjustment" in farm economy, "as though falling farm prices were necessary and even desirable."

At a meeting in Washington, the top officers of the CIO described both explanations as "short-sighted, unrealistic and heartlessly negligent of the farmer's increasingly hazardous plight."

"ALREADY, the 13% drop in farm prices since the last election has forced farmers drastically to curtail purchase of farm implements made by city workers," they said.

"In some states, employment of CIO members in farm implement plants has been cut in half. In Iowa alone, layoffs and short work weeks have cost workers more than $1 million a week. Corresponding cutbacks have followed in steel and fabricating plants and throughout the economy.

"As city workers' incomes fall, they must—due to inadequate savings and low unemployment compensation—reduce their purchase of farm products. Farm 'surpluses'—often the result of inadequate purchasing power rather than a reduced need—develop.

"THESE UNSOLD farm products tend to depress farm prices further and an economic cycle is started that, unless checked, only leads to general economic collapse."

The committee expressed the belief that the farmers themselves are best able to determine a fair program, and made no effort to spell out a detailed plan.

However, it reaffirmed the CIO's historic support for parity between farm and non-farm incomes. (For details on farm situation, see Pages 6 and 7.)

CIO Backs Reciprocal Trade, With Safeguards For U.S. Labor

THE CIO will maintain its support of the continuation and extension of the reciprocal trade program, Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of education and research, told the special Presidential Commission on Foreign Economic Policy last week.

The commission, of which Pres. Clarence Randall of Inland Steel Co. is chairman, held hearings in Washington. Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers is a member.

"We realize the great dependence of many American industries upon the importation of raw materials from abroad," Ruttenberg said in prepared testimony explaining the CIO's position, "and, in turn, the reliance of many U. S. industries upon the exportation of their products."

He added what he called "this extremely important word of warning":

"The dollar gap created by U. S. exports exceeding imports cannot be eliminated even if the U. S. were to remove all its barriers to trade, including duties, tariffs and quotas."

Ruttenberg listed several additional factors he said the U. S. must recognize. Our trade barriers constitute more of a psychological block than an economic block, he said, and if the dollar gap problem is to be solved, "solutions other than complete removal of barriers must be found."

Additional areas of solution, he said, may be found in elimination of inter-European trade barriers; development of mass markets in Europe to make customers for potential European products, and development of underdeveloped nations.

Investment policy in underdeveloped countries should be directed toward development of natural resources, rather than industrialization, he explained.

In addition, a more extensive system of three-way trade should be developed, he said. Under it, the U. S. would purchase raw materials from underdeveloped countries, which in turn could buy semi-finished products from Europe with the dollars they get, and Europe in turn could use the same dollars to buy U. S. products.

He also suggested that the commission study how to aid American plants, workers and communities seriously affected by increased imports. Such help might, he said, take the following forms:

Workers: retraining, relocation, moving and transportation of families and dependents, and supplementary compensation during a transition period.

Plants: loans of the RFC type to strengthen their competitive positions by becoming more efficient, or to enable them to shift to new products.

Ruttenberg also pointed out that a sound maritime industry, with a healthy merchant fleet and construction and operating subsidies, is vital to foreign trade as well as to national defense.

The Labor Dept.

Willard Shelton, the veteran newspaperman who writes the column, "It's Your Washington," on the adjoining page, has an alarming story this week.

He writes that a lot of New Deal-Fair Deal people at the Labor Dept. are going to lose their jobs, because certain Administration leaders don't want hold-overs from the Roosevelt-Truman era in any key posts.

Mr. Shelton has a reputation for accuracy. We would hope in this case that he is wrong; or we would hope that, if his story is accurate, those Administration leaders will quickly change their minds.

The Labor Dept., the smallest unit of government, was not established to be a political football. It has built up a corps of loyal and devoted public servants with great technical skill and knowledge of their field.

To strip the department of these people on the basis of the fact that they were appointed by Democrats would be to destroy labor's confidence in the department—a confidence that has been shaken already by the Durkin affair and the appointment of a man from business to the Secretary's post.

Mr. Shelton's story, it seems to us, deserves quick comment from Sec. Mitchell or the White House.

The Labor Dept., by statute, is designed to serve the nation's working people. That service cannot be performed if the public servants below the policy level of assistant secretary are to be thrown out brutally in a political purge.

"What's Good For . . . "

Nine months ago, you may recall, Sec. of Defense Charles E. Wilson coined the classic phrase that "what's good for General Motors is good for America."

Now GM reports its profits after taxes for the first nine months of 1953 are the highest ever reported by any corporation—to be exact, $453 million, or over a million and a quarter a day.

On the same day, the government announced that the cost of living had reached an all-time high, for the fourth successive month; and the cattle growers and farmers were frankly saying they were smack in the middle of a depression.

Obviously, those million-and-a-quarter a day superprofits are good for General Motors; but a lot of workers and farmers can't quite see how they're good for them, too. Perhaps Sec. Wilson can give us an answer.

Horror Story

Every American will recoil in horror at the story behind the grim Army statistics about the murder and torture of GI's who fell into enemy hands in Korea.

Some 6113 Americans, says the Army, were probably victims of this brutal inhumanity; and, in total, it revealed some 26,499 "probable" war crimes cases of all sorts.

In a sense, there is no surprise about these stories. We have heard their counterparts wherever the Soviet Communists have control—in the slave labor camps of Russia and Siberia, in the prisons of the satellites.

The stories are further proof—if need for proof there be—that the Communists' propaganda about their belief in humanity and peace is strictly hokum.

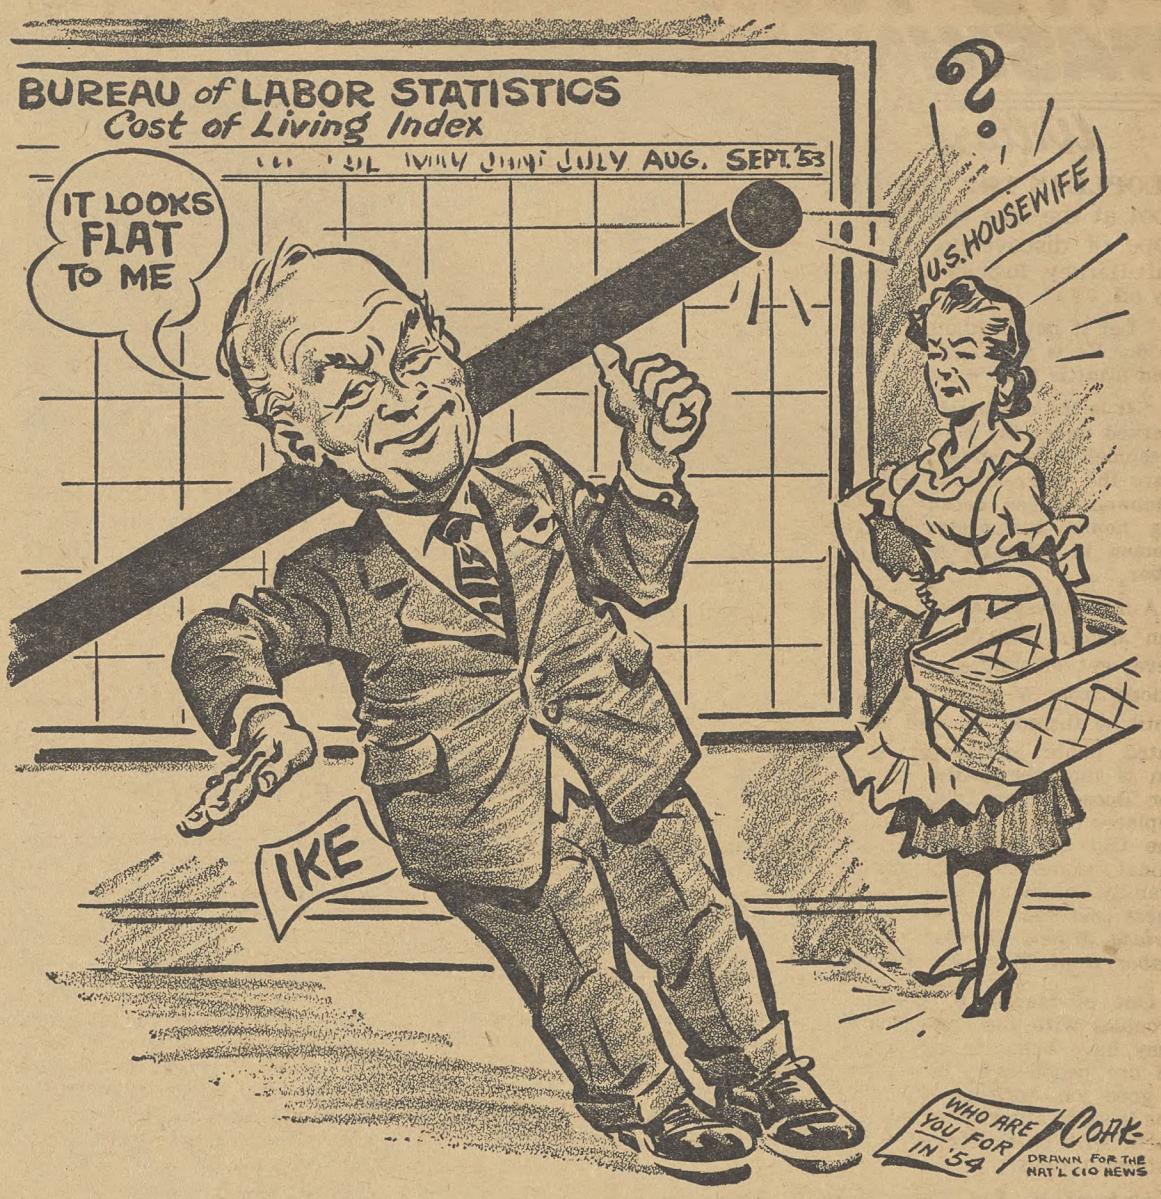
Optical Delusion



In Other Words—

Another Grab Aimed At Parks

Continuing his discussion of GOP Administration threats to U. S. parks and other national resources, CIO Commentator John W. Vandercook discussed the Ellsworth Bill as one of the "biggest steals" of all. An excerpt from a recent Vandercook broadcast on ABC Radio follows:

By JOHN W. VANDERCOOK

ONCE IN A WHILE, I think a commemtator ought to go back and kind of neaten up after himself.

For instance, the other day I spoke on one of these broadcasts of the neglect much of our great national park service was suffering from reduced, penny-pinching budgets, cut-back in personnel, and frequently gross under-payment of the devoted hard-to-replace park employes who still remain.

Half-jokingly, I said that the silent, small-scale, war of attrition which the Administration and the Congress seem to be waging against our national parks almost suggested a deliberately hostile intention toward them, as if the will—the purpose—somewhere existed to do our public park or lands intentional damage for someone's private profit.

Apparently, I wasn't being very funny. A bill marked H. R. 4646, which I didn't know about, has just been brought to my attention. It's a lulu.

The bill in question was introduced last April by Republican Rep. Ellsworth of the 4th Dist. of Oregon.

Among other things, Mr. Ellsworth of Oregon is the ex-manager of a trade publication of the lumber industry. His bill, to quote its heading, "provides for the exchange of certain public and private lands." And how!

Thousands of bills for every conceivable good and bad purpose of course, are introduced. Ellsworth's, though, has already got over the first big hurdle. It has been reported out of committee.

That means that there is a strong probability that H. R. 4646 will come up before Congress for final consideration soon after the legislators get back to Washington in January.

Here is what that bill provides: That "whenever the United States finds it necessary to acquire for any public use timberlands which are being operated as part of a unit to provide a sustained yield of timber for processing purposes . . . the agency responsible shall provide that similar and suitable federally owned lands . . . shall be transferred to the owners of the private lands—if said owners so elect—as compensation for the lands taken."

If the English language means anything, this, in plainer words, is what that bill calls for: It requires, no less, that if the owners of worn-out, cropped over timber land so choose, the federal government shall swap equivalent areas of public lands which are still in prime condition for the exhausted, privately owned areas . . . when a court orders that exchange.

The Bill Was Changed

It is highly interesting that in Congressman Ellsworth's original bill, it was "provided that such exchange shall not include lands within the boundaries of national parks, national monuments, wilderness areas, or wildlife refuge."

But, when the congressional committee got through with it, that exception was stricken out. So the bill, if it is passed, now would not only make it possible but more than probable that private lumber companies owning over-cropped, run-down timber lands could, with a little inexpensive manipulation, trade those more or less valueless acres for a nice fresh chunk of the nearest "national park, wilderness area or wildlife refuges."

Nor could anyone say that there had been a staggering theft of the public's property. Shucks, there'd be a law, wouldn't there? Get your law through first—preferably when no one is looking—and you can even change the meaning of the word.

Davis Is Off Air

Elmer Davis, veteran news commentator on ABC Radio, has discontinued his nightly commentaries for an indefinite period on doctor's orders.

In a special recorded announcement, Davis said: "I want to assure all my friends that I am not leaving on account of political pressure or economic pressure, only on account of blood pressure and my own at that."

Davis urged his listeners to follow the nightly news commentaries of John W. Vandercook, whose ABC broadcasts are sponsored by the CIO.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

PEOPLE IN THE OFFICE of Labor Sec. James A. Mitchell hoot at the idea that any reporter would come in with the hope of discovering the new cabinet member's plans on Taft-Hartley. Republican congressmen have effectively told him to lay off.

Let it not be thought, however, that Sec. Mitchell lacks a job to do. He is supposed to "clean up the mess" in the Labor Dept. And what is this "mess"?

It is the continuation in office of bureau and division heads who worked under the New Deal and Fair Deal and therefore must be presumed to be sympathetic toward the congressional acts on minimum wages, decent working hours, the protection of women in industry, and child labor.

A highly responsible Republican admits that Mitchell will never get substantial appropriations from a GOP Congress until he throws out such dedicated public servants, whose sin is that they once worked for Roosevelt or Truman and replaces them with members of the Old Guard. A GOP National Committee spokesman frankly comments that one of those marked for the ax is Frieda Miller, director of the Labor Dept. Women's Bureau.

One of Martin P. Durkin's troubles with the "new team" may have been his reluctance to fire people who have done a good job, honestly enforcing the laws, to allow their replacement with GOP stooges who would gut the laws by changing the interpretations.

The Latest In Give-Aways

Now that he heads a House Subcommittee with a $100,000 appropriation to investigate Social Security, he thinks it would be a good idea to toss the old age program over to private industry—that is, the big insurance companies.

Curtis tossed out the idea recently in Columbus, O., addressing the Ohio Chamber of Commerce, saying "possibly the solution to the program is a system whereby private concerns handle the entire program."

Confusion In The White House

The White House is obsessed with three notions: First, the staff thinks—or thought until the last Gallup poll—that Mr. Eisenhower's personal popularity is still at an all-time high.

Second, the staff thinks that this popularity is a transferrable asset to GOP congressional candidates, depending on whether the President campaigns or refuses to campaign for them.

Third, believe it or not, the staff thinks that a Democratic Senate, if not a Democratic House, might be "no worse" for Mr. Eisenhower than "some of the Republicans" he now must deal with.

This report must be hedged by an acknowledgment that the thinking may represent only some of the President's intimate advisers—perhaps not even a majority.

But this kind of thinking definitely exists among people who are close to Mr. Eisenhower, who work in the White House, who see the President often and have a chance to influence him.

The only rational interpretation of the White House ideas now advanced is that the gentlemen around Mr. Eisenhower are terribly confused—and that Mr. Eisenhower himself may be regretting his choice of a party as well as his decision to enter politics at all.

A President who in his election campaign last year endorsed both Sens. Jenner (R. Ind.) and McCarthy (R. Wis.) cannot change his mind after a few months in office and decide that he would rather have Democrats to depend on.

Mr. Eisenhower's personal prestige is dropping more rapidly than his close associates realize or admit. The Gallup poll—always guilty of a time-lag in reflecting public opinion—showed a 15% decrease between Sept. 15 and Oct. 15 in citizens who generally "approved" the President's conduct of his office.

Good Old Daze

Another sign that the era of Herbert Hoover has returned to Washington:

Last Thursday, on the 24th anniversary of Black Thursday on Wall St., the Washington Evening Star's first edition bore the date: Oct. 29, 1930.

Sec. Benson may be blamed for one thing, Sec. Humphrey for another, but eventually the whole responsibility rests in the man at the pinnacle under the American constitutional system, in the stark loneliness of the Presidency.

When the cattlemen's "cavalcade" cornered Sec. Benson, the bedeviled head of the Agriculture Dept. assured the assembled ranchers that Pres. Eisenhower was deeply concerned about their problems. The mention of Ike's name evoked a stony silence.

Most startling of all is the delusion that Mr. Eisenhower can whip the Old Guardsmen and hatchet-men of his own party by threatening that he won't campaign for them unless they do as he privately wishes.

Sen. Milton Young's (R. N.D.) comment was brutal; Ike's refusal to campaign will be a "great help" to Republicans in the Midwest. Young isn't up for re-election next year, but Sen. Karl Mundt (R. S.D.) is, and Mundt's response to Ike's "I shall not campaign" statement said the same thing Young said, although more courteously.

Elmer Davis Says—

The Real Target Of McCarthyism Is Rights of Free Americans

"The right of American citizens to say what they think" is what's really at issue in much of the current U. S. attack on communism, said Radio Commentator Elmer Davis in a recent article in The (LaFollette) Progressive magazine. A digest of the article by Davis, ABC Radio commentator now on leave, follows:

By ELMER DAVIS

THE PRESENT ATTACK on the freedom of the mind is the worst America has had to face since the days of the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798.

Then as now, the pretext was fear that some of our citizens were loyal to a dangerous foreign power rather than to their own country; then as now, many honest but thickheaded men were convinced that any disagreement with their own opinions was disloyalty; then as now, this sentiment was skillfully used be reactionary politicans to try to break down men and opinions which they didn't like, though there was no taint of disloyalty about them. That is the real target now.

Most of the men who profess to be attacking Communism now are really gunning for the people who are not reactionaries nor Communists either; but want to do their own thinking, and cling to the right of American citizens to say what they think.

Safeguards Against A Danger

Now how much of a real Communist danger is there? Certainly there is a little, as a matter of potential sabotage—perhaps even of potential espionage. The government's loyalty procedures seem to be quite effective in cleaning out people who think for themselves; but they might be less effective in detecting Communists, who are not allowed to think for themselves.

The headlong decline in Communist Party membership is no doubt partly due to people going underground, but there is ample evidence that many of them are actually quitting—either from fear or because they have very belatedly realized what they had got into.

As for fellow travelers and sympathizers, that species is practically extinct. Twenty years ago there were a good many of them—in the days when young people came out of college and couldn't find jobs. Most of them were cured when they did find jobs; the behavior of the Soviet government has cured practically all the others. If communism was ever a serious danger in this country—which I doubt—it is so no longer.

But vestigial communism in this country still serves one purpose—it provides a pretext for the reactionary politicians who find in ostensibly attacking communism a cover for attacking liberalism; and still more important, the avenue to publicity and power. Jenner is not very bright and Velde is so inept that the friends of freedom may reasonably regard him as our secret weapon.

But McCarthy's fingers seem to be fireproof; and he is smart. Also he has two other great advantages: a mass following which is impervious to facts; and an elite support, respectable men who regard him as the greatest asset of his party, and seem to feel that this outweights what he is doing to his country, and theirs.

The most interesting thing about these people is that while they profess to be anti-Communists, they are willing to discard the liberties guaranteed by the Constitution.

Their dominant surface emotion is hatred; but underlying that, besides an appalling ignorance, is fear.

Our national anthem describes this as the land of the free and the home of the brave; it will remain the one only so long as it is the other. If it ever becomes the land of the scared, this republic as we have known it goes down the drain.

The men who founded this republic—men whose heirs and beneficiaries we are—risked their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

We shall have no heirs and beneficiaries, and shall deserve to have none, if we permit our policy in dealing with either of these dangers to be based on cowardice.

What Skunk-Hunters Shouldn't Do—

The "end-justifies-the-means" arguments which friends of Joe McCarthy have taken over wholehog from the Communists and other totalitarians are derided by the New York Times in this recent editorial titled "What Good Senators Don't Do":

A prominent member of the United States Senate is fond of saying, as he did to a New Jersey audience a couple of nights ago, "You don't go skunk-hunting in striped trousers and a tall hat while waving a lace handkerchief." This picturesquely and typically irrelevant remark may or may not satisfy his listeners, but it may also raise some questions in their minds about other things you don't—or shouldn't—do.

You don't trifle with your country's security for purposes of self-glorification. You don't ignore the Constitution, specifically the First Amendment, in order to intimidate your opponents. You don't attempt to destroy reputations with groundless insinuations to score a political point, whether the victim is a candidate for high office of the opposing party or a nominee to high office of your own party.

You don't prove yourself willing and eager to undermine the foundations of your government's foreign policy by the most unrestrained and violent attack on our strongest and oldest allies. You don't attempt to wreck your country's propaganda program by holding a public carnival, especially when you know that needed reforms are being carefully and meticulously studied without fanfare by some of your most able colleagues.

You don't aid the Communists to erode your country's well-deserved reputation as the stronghold of liberal democracy by doing everything in your power to make it appear to be a citadel of anti-liberalism, anti-intellectualism and reaction.

You don't publicize classified military documents in order to make a headline. You don't ignore your responsibilities as a public official by promoting mistrust, suspicion and disunity among your fellow-citizens. You don't forget that our beloved country will remain the hope of the free world, which is the only kind of world worth living in, as long as its people remain true to the liberal, democratic principles on which this Republic was founded.

Mr. Big Waxes Fat On New Gimmick

"INSURANCE Sweetens Salary"—that is, for the big shots in business and industry. An article in Business Week under that title revealed another gimmick enjoyed by corporation executives—at your expense.

A fast-growing number of the big boys no longer have to worry about "building estates" for their families, or about income for themselves after retirement or during illness, the magazine related, because their firms take care of the situation with insurance policies.

Cost of the insurance premiums is charged by the corporations to "business expenses," thus reducing their taxes. And the corporation officials pay no income taxes on the handsome benefits they and their families receive. Of course, the loss in taxes has to be made up some way—guess who pays?

Business Week's article cites this example: "A New York firm employes 500 people. The two dozen top executives have (company-paid) $100,000 policies. This gives each top-level executive a sizable boost toward an estate." Well it might, since on his death the family gets $100,000 and pays no income tax on it.

But even while he's living, Mr. Big waxes fat on the gimmick, since, the article continues, "seven other types of insurance are being provided for executives." One provides for "salary continuance." That "fills a gap which worries executives who have raised their standard of living to a point where substantial income is required."

With his company paying for such a policy, an executive who becomes "too sick to work," even for many years, continues to receive a large—and tax-free—salary, the article says.

Trouble At The Grass Roots: Farmers

Administration Dodges On Drastic Remedial Action

By MILTON PLUMB

THERE'S A REBELLION today in America's farm belt and cattle country, the likes of which hasn't been seen since irate and desperate farmers tried to stop deputies and federal judges from dispossessing them in the depression days of the 30's.

No other conclusion seems possible after traveling with the House Agriculture Committee for some 3300 miles during its recent hearings on the current farm problem throughout the Midwest.

In city after city—from Minneapolis to Des Moines, then swinging east to Bloomington, Ill., Indianapolis and Columbus, O.—the committee has been impressed by the grim, determined and angry faces of the thousands of grass roots, dirt farmers who filled the hearing rooms.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Creeping Something Or Other

Trouble, without question, is brewing on the ranges and farms of this richest agricultural nation in the world.

So far, its manifestation has been only of a political nature—with betting odds on the chances of the Republicans winning the House and Senate in next year's elections falling rapidly.

Such political winds are apt to change, but there is an undercurrent of fear and resentment among the farmers which cannot be overlooked. This ugly potential bodes ill for the country unless drastic remedial action—far more comprehensive than anything yet proposed by the Eisenhower Administration—is promptly taken.

Members of the House Agriculture Committee, which under the able chairmanship of Rep. Hope (R. Kans.) has been doing an outstanding job of getting at the real facts concerning the farm situation, appear to be fully aware of the dangers inherent in the present mood and tempers of the farmers and cattlemen.

Shocked By Reaction

Apparently shocked by the violent farm reaction it ran into on the first three days of its Midwest trip, the committee (at a closed meeting in Des Moines) decided to ask Sec. of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson to join it at the next session in Cheyenne so as to get the farmers' reaction first hand.

This action, which seemed to be a desperate effort by the committee to get the real facts concerning the farmers' plight before the Administration, was taken after a dinner given for the committee by the Des Moines Chamber of Commerce.

The hearings in Cheyenne, which start the committee off on a new circuit through the farm, cattle, timber and orchard country of the Far West, are scheduled for Nov. 2. No indication that Benson would participate had been forthcoming when this was written.

Instead, both Benson and Pres. Eisenhower, who has turned a deaf ear to mounting demands from leaders in his own party for the Secretary's dismissal, have seemingly failed to realize just what is happening in the farm belt.

At almost the very moment the committee was acting to try to bring Benson to the Cheyenne hearing, the President was addressing the Future Farmers of America in Kansas City and pleading by radio with men in no mood to be put off that they be patient until his farm policy commission had helped prepare the Administration's farm program for submission to Congress next year.

Later, at a press conference, he defended Benson's policies and, reporting on his own brief tour of the farm belt, said he thought that farmers generally are very happy.

John Emblem, Boyd, Minn.: "Congress should determine the support prices on major commodities especially with the Secretary we now have."

Benson Didn't Help

Harold Starrett, Bagley, Minn.: "All-risk crop insurance would be a godsend. We lost almost half our crop this year. Too much rain, rust and blight. We had hail insurance but that was not sufficient to our needs this year."

Duane Okeson, Detroit Lakes, Minn.: Cattlemen would like to have some idea of what they are to get for their efforts. Congress should set the support rates since at present we have no Secretary of Agriculture."

It didn't help the farmers' tempers when Benson, in a Chicago speech a few days later, tried to brush aside their pleas for help by saying that the protest against his policies was just the work of "rabble rousers and demagogues."

In this charge, at least, Benson was clearly mistaken. If one fact emerges from the House Agriculture Committee hearings, it is that the overwhelming majority of witnesses appearing before it are real farmers and cattlemen, speaking directly and with first-hand concern over their own immediate problems.

Many told this reporter that they voted the Republican ticket in the last election, although they wouldn't do so now. And CIO Councils which appeared before the committee in the Midwest report that the many farmers who asked that CIO speakers be sent to address groups of neighboring farmers include considerably more Republicans than Democrats.

Moreover, what these farmers told the committee led its honest, conservative chairman to comment: "These people seem to think they are on the brink of impending doom."

Besides the farmers' widespread fear over the future and the obvious discontent with Administration farm policies which the hearings made evident, one other development stands out.

This is the lack of support among the overwhelming majority of farmers for the policies advocated by the Farm Bureau Federation.

The Bureau, like Benson, has taken a stand against the present price support program. Its officials appeared before the committee to ask that present supports be replaced by a "sliding scale," or two-price system, which would slide supports down to 75% of parity.

On The Defensive

Signs of internal dissension within Farm Bureau ranks came at several of the hearings, when county heads of that group appeared, and said they could not go along with their organization's program. They, not the official Farm Bureau spokesmen, got the farmers' applause.

By the time the tour was drawing to a close, the Farm Bureau was clearly on the defensive. In indianapolis, Hassil E. Shenck, president of the Indiana Farm Bureau, began apologetically by saying that his organization had always advocated "100% of parity." But he went on to explain that there were "different ways" of getting that and again advocated the sliding scale program.

Then, Allen B. Kline, national president of the Farm Bureau, apparently reading the handwriting on the wall, issued a statement from Des Moines charging that the committee had made up its mind to continue high crop price supports before it even began its tour.

This was strongly denied by committee spokesmen. In fact, those familiar with the situation say that, before the hearings, the Farm Bureau was probably the farm organization having the most influence over a majority of the committee's members.

Last week, in Washington, over 300 cattlemen, brought in from 35 states by the National Farmers Union, descended on reluctant Benson to demand price supports on cattle.

nd shirt-sleeved farmers were in Des Moines audience for farm group.

Benson, taking the same position as the rm Bureau, told them that they were practical. The Farm Bureau also called em "socialistic." Earlier, the President's ricultural Advisory Commission also re- ted cattle price supports.

But the House Agriculture Committee nks otherwise. It has asked Benson to velop such a program, and since the mmittee will probably be the most influ- tial group in determining the farm pro- am Congress adopts, the Administration y face a real battle if it persists in empting to prevent their enactment.

he Ultimate Move

Moreover, 16 members of the committee re polled in Iowa on whether or not they ought Congress would continue price pports. Their forecast was that all Dem- ratic members would vote for them and at only one or two Republicans would opposed.

All 16 polled—more than enough to vote n a bill out of the 30-member commit- e—indicated that they would vote for gh farm price supports.

Last week, Hershel D. Newsom, master the National Grange, which also favors "two-price" system instead of present pports, urged the Administration to con- ue the present program for another months.

That there might be political thinking hind this proposal is indicated by what rdue Agriculture Dean Harry J. Reed d the committee when he first suggested at the Indianapolis hearings.

"It would be better," he said, "if you ade minor changes now and waited until er the elections are over before working the permanent program."

Letter From CWA—

Ike Promises Are Recalled

THE CIO Communications Workers last week called on Pres. Eisenhower to carry out his campaign promises to the farmer "and thus restore confidence and security to American agriculture and to the nation as a whole."

In a letter to Eisenhower, CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne said that the relatively high level of agricultural prosperity over the last 20 years is now threatened. He warned that this would have "a detrimental effect on the market for goods and services produced by organized labor."

Beirne charged that "reluctance on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture in fulfilling your unqualified campaign pledges has led to a marked uneasiness among farmers."

"This uneasiness," he added, "has undoubtedly been accentuated by the fact that Mr. Benson has appointed so many businessmen, rather than farmers, to top policy positions in his department. Many of these appointees are outspoken opponents of the price support programs which they are given to administer."

He urged Eisenhower to carry out his promises that agriculture would receive "the benefits of price support" and to do so "in the spirit in which they were made." He said that existing "flagrant inconsistencies" in the Administration's farm program "cannot be conducive to a stable agricultural economy."

Proposal By Javits

Meanwhile, Rep. Javits (R.-Lib. N.Y.) called on Benson to appoint a Consumers' Agricultural Advisory Committee on the grounds that the interests being primarily consulted are the farm interests which are themselves directly interested in the government's farm policy.

"I believe it is especially important that consumers should be heard in a fully proportionate way in respect to farm policy," Javits wrote.

In an attack on the slow-moving drought relief program, Sen. Symington (D. Mo.) called it "an incredible administrative mess because of the rigid and unrealistic regulations" laid down by the Agriculture Dept.

Symington said Benson and "the wealthy windshield farmers he has called in to help him" have followed the "law of the jungle," which has bankrupted thousands of farmers.

Why High Prices?—

Don't Expect Much From Ezra's Inquiry

By Labor Press Associated

WHILE THE farmer is getting less and less for his products, the housewife is paying more and more. The Eisenhower Administration economists may have fancy explanations, but plain John Q. Citizen suspects skullduggery.

Since February, food prices have risen 2.6%. Each month the cost of living has been rising steadily, and setting new all-time highs. On the other hand, farmers are in trouble, and the Federal Reserve Bank in Chicago estimates that their income for 1953 will be 18% under 1952.

As Business Week puts it: "Practically everything is going up a little, and practically nothing is going down."

Farmers Get Less

So, Sec. of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson has ordered the Agriculture Dept. to investigate the price spread—to explain, if possible, how it is that the housewife is paying more and more for food and the farmer is getting less and less as his share.

And the farmer's share is smaller than ever: 44c of the consumer's $1, while middlemen, food packers and processers and retailers get 56c. And the department said that housewives aren't likely to get much benefit from any drop in farm prices expected next year.

Now, the Democrats tried to get such an investigation of where the consumer's dollar goes. Former Pres. Truman in his budget request asked a sum for the Federal Trade Commission to conduct such a study.

But the "Businessman's Administration" that came in with the Republicans didn't want the consuming public—or the farmers—to know. That item in the FTC budget was eliminated. And Congress tacked on a special rider specifically forbidding such a study, sending all proposals of Sen. Gillette (D. Iowa) for a food-price investigation to the legislative deep-freeze.

Forced Into Action

Now Benson has been forced into action by public outcry. What will come out of his investigation of meat prices?

Perhaps the best clue is contained in a recent Washington column in the New York Journal of Commerce. Nothing much will happen, the business paper reported, and this is why:

"There's no law that says in so many words that a middleman can't charge more than the traffic ought to bear. And USDA, which says it is launching its new study of 'price spreads' without any prefabricated conclusion, isn't likely to ask for such a law.

"So what happens if the USDA turns up an unduly high profit margin? True Morse, Undersecretary of Agriculture, says 'public opinion' will have to step in at that point. But will USDA stir things up by naming 'X' company or 'Y' railroad or 'Z' cut of beef as the offender? Not likely either from a 'Businessman's Administration.'"

Farm Assets Drop

American farmers will be worth about $9 billion less at the end of the first year of the Eisenhower Administration.

That was the official estimate of the Agriculture Dept., made late last week. Debt-free assets (land, buildings and money in the bank) will drop that much by next Jan. 1, the department said.

It also anticipated an $800 million increase in farm debt to an estimated $16.7 billion by the time the GOP marks its first anniversary of White House control.

CIO goes to the FAIRS!

NORTH AND SOUTH, East and West, CIO state and local councils have been going to the fairs these recent autumn weeks, telling their friends and neighbors about a good American labor organization—the CIO—and what it does for its members, the community, the nation.

At Topeka, Kans., Jackson, Miss., Reading, Pa., Atlanta, Ga., and a host of other communities throughout the U. S., CIO booths have been hits of the fair.

Typical was the work of the Kansas State CIO Council, which distributed some 190,000 pamphlets at four state fairs. One of them is illustrated on this page: "Let's Play 20 Questions!" In plain and simple language, it tells the story of CIO as "a great family of working people who serve the needs of America and the free world."

At the Kentucky State Fair, both the State Council and the CIO Auto Workers and Packinghouse Workers together manned booths, with some 8000 visitors signing for chances on Amalgamated union label clothing.

Mississippi State CIO sponsored its first state fair display, awarding trophies to high scoring teams of youngsters from the 4-H Clubs and the Future Farmers of America. CIO's pamphlet on "Farmers and Workers Win Together" got wide distribution at all of the labor booths.

In Georgia, 159 CIO unionists helped to man the CIO booth at the Southeastern Fair at Atlanta. Some 24,000 Georgians visited the display. Summing it up, State CIO Sec.-Treas. A. O. McKinney said: "A CIO fair booth is the best way to reach the public. We have found that we now have new friends among the small businessmen, the farmers and other plain citizens."

1. Is it animal, vegetable or mineral?

It's a little bit of all three but it's something else too . . . something that can't be put under a microscope or analyzed in a laboratory.

2. Is it American?

It's as American as apple pie, as baseball, as the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

3. Does it have to do with people?

4. It must be an organization then?

Right. It is not only an organization itself but it is also an organization of organizations.

5. Is it a farm organization?

It is not a farm organization though many of its objectives are the same as the objectives of the farmers . . . many of its members are the sons and daughters of farmers . . . and many of the programs it advocates are programs advocated by the farmers.

6. Is it a charitable organization?

No, but it contributes heavily to community charities. As a matter of fact, in the last Community Chest Drive in Kansas City, Kansas, part of this organization gave $58,000, the largest single contribution ever made.

It is not a [illegible] the vo[illegible] congressmen are, what issues are important to them, and it urges its members and everybody else to vote . . . for whomever they please, but to vote.

9. Is this an old organization?

Not very. It was formed in 1936, but people have been forming organizations like it ever since the birth of our country.

10. Wh[illegible] the general policy of this organization?

The general policy of this organization is to preserve, protect and extend our democratic institutions and civil rights and liberties and thus to perpetuate the cherished traditions of our democracy. Its constitution says so.

11. Who establishes the policy of the organization?

The policy of the organization is established by a convention of democratically elected delegates which meets every year.

16. This sounds like a labor organization?

You're close. It's an organization of labor organizations representing the men and women in the basic industries of the country.

18. Are its leaders democratically elected?

Yes sir. Its president [illegible]

19. Can anybody join this organization?

Yes. Anybody working in an [illegible] has members can j[illegible] support of everyone, wh[illegible] or on a farm, [illegible]

20. It must be the CIO?

You've got it right on the head. To be specific, the Kansas State Industrial Union Council (CIO) located at 726 Armstrong Ave., Kansas City, Kansas. Come in and say hello when you're around our way.

New York CIO Goes All-Out To Aid Wagner's Campaign

ALL OF THE techniques of contemporary political campaigning — from television and sound trucks to car cards— are being employed by New York City CIO unionists in support of the campaign to elect Robert F. Wagner, Jr., as mayor.

A half-dozen television programs, a million pieces of literature, auto stickers, subway ads, and busy campaign offices throughout the nation's largest city—all of these are part of the New York CIO campaign, along with PAC block workers.

In the showdown campaign week leading up to the Nov. 3 election, the New York City race —in which Democrat Wagner opposes Republican Harold Riegelman and Liberal Rudolph Halley—is shaping up as another important "off-year" test of the national issues in '54 and '56.

As Averell Harriman said at a Wagner rally sponsored by two locals of the CIO Clothing Workers, the election of Wagner would aid "continuation of the policies of Pres. Roosevelt and Pres. Truman."

Wagner is the son of the late, great Sen. Wagner—author of the Wagner Act—and now is Manhattan's borough president.

WAGNER HIMSELF has struck hard at the connections of the Dewey Republican machine with racketeers, as in the Joe Fay case. And—in the field of municipal issues—he has pledged to work for more low-rent housing, more public schools, and to work for subway fare reduction.

The New York City CIO Council has set up a special campaign committee to work for Wagner and his running mates, Lawrence E. Gerosa for comptroller and Abe Stark for city council president.

Under the direction of Council Sec.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz, CIO has set up campaign headquarters in Manhattan, Bronx, Brooklyn and Queens, with two offices in the heavily-populated Harlem slum area.

It has helped to finance a half-dozen television programs, including an hour-long telecast of a Manhattan Center rally last week. Spot radio announcements and programs in Italian, Spanish, German and Yiddish also were arranged.

More than 1000 car cards for Wagner were placed in subway cars and buses. Some 300,000 CIO-for-Wagner buttons "went like hot cakes," to quote one campaign worker, and 20,000 auto stickers also were distributed.

For several weeks, the Council's four sound trucks have been roaming the city, urging Wagner's election.

And in the final 10 days of the drive, the CIO trucks started hitting a series of plant gate rallies at shops and factories where 500,000 CIO members work.

With Wagner holding a strong lead in the New York Daily News poll, the estimated 2000 PAC block workers, CIO union representatives and rank-and-file unionists were giving a final push to the drive to help elect young Bob Wagner.

CIO Councils In Action

CONSUMERS' INTERESTS in preventing unwarranted increases in power, gas, telephone and other utility rates have been vigorously championed by the Connecticut State CIO Council in recent hearings before the State Public Utilities Commission.

Latest case involves the plea of the Connecticut Light & Power Co. for rate hikes, particularly on residential consumers. CIO says the utility has failed to prove its case, cites year-by-year increases in earnings and dividends for Connecticut Power.

In other cases, the Council has warned that a gas pipeline decision now pending before the Federal Power Commission —involving pipeline construction plans of Northeastern Gas Transmission Co. and Algonquin Gas Transmission Co.— may prove costly to hopes for lower gas bills. Earlier, Connecticut CIO battled rate boost move of the Southern New England Telephone Co.

No Sale

At the recent state fair in Tulsa, a concessionaire was selling portraits, including a fancy one of Pres. Eisenhower for $4.

Business was bad and on the seventh and last day of the fair, PAC Pipeline relates, the hawker was running up and down the aisle past the State CIO Council fair booth barking: "Is there a Republican in the House?"

When last seen he was offering the picture at $1.25 with no takers.

● Beginning in Lubbock, the Texas CIO Council and State CIO-PAC are holding a series of one-day legislative-political action educational conferences. Issues of social security, taxes, labor legislation and foreign policy are among the subjects. And each student group will send a delegation to meeting with congressman from that district.

● The women's vote is of growing importance, National CIO-PAC Rep. Esther Murray told recent meeting of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council. She cited GOP Administration's record of defending business interests as opposed to the consumers', and urged increased participation of wives and daughters of CIO unionists in political action.

● California CIO Council-affiliated locals are stepping up the drive for 1953 primary election PAC dollars through sale of legislative merit award tickets. The Council also is seeking local treasury contributions for use in state campaigns.

● Importance of increased political action was stressed by Edward M. Tod and James L. Pfaffenback, new and retiring presidents of St. Louis CIO Council. Pfaffenback, retiring after seven years to join CIO Auto Workers international staff, was honored at a recent reception. Tod, the new president, also is from UAW, was CIO liaison representative with local community chest. Oscar A. Ehrhardt of CIO Chemical Workers was returned to 12th term as executive secretary.

● An intensive community union label campaign is being carried out by the Columbus, O., CIO Council Union Label Committee in conjunction with the CIO Clothing Workers. Monthly meetings feature speakers on CIO history and the story of the union label as a trade mark of labor's progress. In just three months, some 10,000 pieces of union label literature have been distributed in the Columbus area.

● One of the newest CIO unions in Florida and a recent affiliate of the Florida State CIO Council is Tampa Local 656 of the Oil Workers. The Florida Council reports that already OWIU Local 656 "set an example for the rest of the unions in the state to follow. They have completed a 100% collection for PAC, with every man in the plan actively helping to do the job."

● The Pennsylvania CIO Council endorsed the State proposition, on the ballot Nov. 3, for holding a State Constitutional Convention to redraft the State's present patched-up constitution.

Election Calendar—

Nov. 3—Mayoralty election in New York City; CIO endorses Robert F. Wagner, Jr.

Nov. 3—Gubernatorial election in New Jersey; CIO endorses Robert B. Meyner.

Nov. 3—Gubernatorial election in Virginia; no CIO endorsement.

Nov. 10—Congressional by-election in California's 24th Dist.; CIO endorses George Arnold.

Steel Union Warned On State Curbs

A WARNING that 14 states have passed "anti-labor legislation which is sounding the death knell of organized labor" was voiced at the CIO Steelworkers Wage Policy Committee meeting in New York City.

"Woe unto you if you disbelieve or disregard the national Administration's announced policy of returning labor and all other legislative matters to the states," he said.

"They have set out on that back-to-the-states movement, with the full support of the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce."

Hoffman said 14 states already have passed "right-to-work" bills, which, he said, outlaws the union shop in future contracts. He urged the committee members to make an all-out fight against such legislation and recommended that USA-CIO locals set up legislative committees to "safeguard our interests."

Morse Raps Northwest Power Deal

GRANTING of 20-year contracts for Bonneville Dam power to four northwestern companies was described by Sen. Morse as "a sellout of public interest to private utility monopoly."

"They undercut the public preference which has been part of the federal law for close to 50 years," Morse said. "In action these contracts will hurt the industrial growth of the Pacific Northwest. Their effects will be felt throughout the national economy."

Private utility companies had been restricted to five-year contracts while public agencies and big industry had 20-year agreements on power from Bonneville.

Idaho Power Aide Gives Away Case On Hells Canyon Dam

ONE OF THE Idaho Power Co.'s own engineers has admitted that the proposed high dam in Hells Canyon would produce more power initially than three low dams his company proposes.

Center of the controversy between public power and private power advocates has been utilization of the hydro-electric potential of the Snake River between Idaho and Oregon. Public power advocates say the proposed federally-built high dam would also produce power at substantially lower cost.

The engineer said he thought the power producing advantage of the high-level dam plan would only last a "few years."

Meanwhile, Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), told an REA co-op meeting in Birmingham that every member of the rural electric co-ops, and "indeed every person interested in low-cost electric power, should be alarmed over changes now being made in our electric power programs."

SPARKMAN said the GOP Administration has set out to curtail and hamper REA services, separate the co-ops from their source of federal power supply, drive a wedge between rural co-ops and municipally-owned power systems, and destroy TVA and prevent further multiple-purpose power developments.

On the same issue, rural electric officials from 10 Missouri Basin states voted to request Pres. Eisenhower and Interior Secy. McKay to postpone new power policies until Jan. 1, 1955. If the request fails, they plan to seek an injunction.

You And Your Money—

Fee-Boosting Doctors Undercut Steel Union Health Plan Gains

"THE FORTY THIEVES are pikers alongside some of those guys," said a CIO Steelworker from the Midwest, a member of the USA-CIO Intl. Wage Policy Committee.

He was talking about some doctors and surgeons who push up their fees and charges when workers gain health and hospital insurance protection through collective bargaining, leaving some extra to pay on top of Blue Cross or similar insurance protection.

The social insurance (that is, health, hospitalization and surgical) protection of current Steelworker contracts got extensive discussion at the recent Wage Policy Committee meeting in New York City.

Present steel union contracts generally provide for a contributory social insurance program. Both workers and employers put up 2.5c hourly per employe toward the program.

A coming USA-CIO bargaining goal, it was indicated, will be a health program "based on need" and "completely non-contributory."

John Tomayko, head of the steel union's pension and social insurance department, said organized doctors have tried to nullify the social insurance program by boosting medical and hospital fees.

When a worker tells a doctor he has medical insurance, Tomayko said, the doctor raises his bill, so that the steel worker has something extra to pay.

"SO FAR we've found no way of satisfying the greed of the doctors," the USA-CIO aide said.

He suggested the best way to put some restraint on the doctors is to get the steel companies to pay the full cost of social insurance, so that mangament will be interested in preventing unreasonable medical fees.

The situation now existing, the USA-CIO discussion indicated, is another good reason for enacting a comprehensive, adequate program for national health insurance.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

A NATIONAL business writer, Elmer Roessner of McClure Syndicate, recently observed that on the one hand there's a do-it-yourself trend for building furniture, house decorating, etc., with such work made easy for the amateur by small power tools, ready-pasted wallpaper, rubber-base paints, etc.

'Ulcer Cure' Seized By U. S.

The Food & Drug Administration has seized 50 shipments of Tryptacin, widely advertised as an ulcer "cure" by the Rhodes Pharmacal Co., Inc., of Cleveland.

The multiple seizure came after the manufacturer continued a nation-wide advertising campaign, despite a federal court decision that he was violating the pure food and drug act.

FDA also reported 96 other seizures, including 333 tons of unfit food and 16 cases of adulterated drugs and devices.

But on the other hand, there's a don't-do-it-yourself trend, with much of the housewife's work eased by ready-to-eat cereals, frozen cooked dishes, etc. Roessner surmised that with the time you save by not doing your own cooking you can build your own furniture.

He's got a good point, although he may not have meant it the way we're going to take it. It's almost vital in these days of expensive housing to do much of your own handiwork around a home. But it's even more vital to avoid money waste in the foods you buy and assure your family maximum nutrition for your food dollars. The trend to commercially-prepared foods may ease the housewife's work, but there may be other ways to do that at less cost of the family's money and nourishment.

One of the biggest wastes of both money and nutrition is the widespread use of prepared breakfast cereals—all the puffies, flakes, wheaties and others that come in boxes ready to pour into bowls. A package of puffed wheat looks big for 17c, but what do you actually get? You get four ounces. The price is actually 68c a pound.

IF YOU ANALYZE the food value, the pound of puffed wheat (four boxes of the stuff) gives your family 1613 calories and 49 grams of valuable protein. Wheat flakes, another widely-used prepared cereal, yield about the same food value at the same high cost. Ready-to-eat oat cereal is a little better value. At a cost of 17c for a seven-ounce box, which is a cost of about 40c a pound, it yields more calories (1797) and protein (66 grams).

But in comparison, a box of oatmeal, which you cook yourself, costs only 17c a pound and yields 1770 calories and 65 grams of protein. Other cereals you cook yourself, especially whole-grain cereals, are great money-savers and nutrition-providers.

Moreover, scientists point out that processing methods more drastic than baking, such as to make puffed and exploded breakfast foods, impair the nutritional value of the protein in cereal. Of course if you eat plenty of animal protein foods besides (such as milk, meat, eggs, fish and cheese), the reduced protein value of the breakfast cereals will not be harmful. But protein foods are expensive. Why not give your family the best sources of it?

ANOTHER don't-do-it-yourself trend has been to cake mixes. The problem here is not one of cost so much as nutrition and quality. Some cake mixes may cost about the same as making your own at home, and produce fairly good cakes (and some don't). But the question here is the nutrition. You may have observed that the cake-mix manufacturers don't list all the ingredients.

When you prepare your own mix, you can step up the nutrition by your choice of ingredients. One of the easiest ways to add high-quality nutrition to mixes, especially when making cookies for the children, is to sift in a little extra dry milk. Cakes and cookies made with extra dry milk are not only more nourishing, but have better flavor and texture (fewer air holes and softer, silkier texture), nutritionists advise.

ICFTU Unit Presents Plan To Help Latin America

A SEVEN-POINT program by which the United States may lessen "resentments and differences" with Latin American countries has been offered to the State Dept. by the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

It was given in the form of a memorandum to John M. Cabot, assistant secretary for inter-American affairs, by an ORIT delegation that included Dr. Ernst Schwarz, ORIT assistant secretary and secretary of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee.

The memorandum pointed out that "spontaneously or by force of circumstances" Latin American nations must join the U. S. in the fight against communism, but that continental unity is being destroyed by the Communists themselves on one hand and by Peronismo, the totalitarian movement welling up from Argentina, on the other.

THESE FORCES are strengthened by dictatorships which oppress the people, because no place else is there any relief held out to the great masses, it continued. At the same time the dictators boast of their ties with the U. S., weakening this nation's position among workers, farmers and small businessmen.

To offset this, the memorandum suggested:

1. More "disinterested economic and technical" aid to Latin American countries, such as Point Four.

2. Non-intervention in internal politics of Latin American nations by U. S. companies, payment of just wages to their workers, and recognition of trade unions.

3. Development of a "liberal" policy for importation of Latin American products at just prices.

4. Strengthened relations with democratic governments, and no action that could be interpreted as support of the dictators.

5. Development of a plan of interchange of union leaders, intellectuals and artists between the U. S. and Latin American countries.

6. Attendance by the U. S. at the 10th Pan American Conference in Caracas, Venezuela, only upon condition that that nation re-establish democratic liberties.

7. Support of friendly gestures by Latin American countries to settle the dispute over the right of asylum between Peru and Colombia.

ICFTU

The ICFTU has formally called on affiliates throughout the world to contribute to the $250,000 fund established at its third world congress in Stockholm last summer to help workers of East Berlin and Eastern Germany in their struggle against oppression. The CIO has pledged $50,000.

East German Reds Get A Dumping

East German workers are having a fine time beating up Communist Party officials and even tossing them into canals and rivers, according to the National Committee for a Free Europe.

The assailants have been able to avoid capture thus far, leading the committee to conclude that the spirit of resistance of workers and other Germans alike was not broken by the brutal reprisals that followed the June 17 uprising.

CIO Church Unit Urged

THE CIO Chemical Workers executive board has called for establishment of a National CIO Committee for Church Liaison in a resolution to be presented to the CIO convention in Cleveland Nov. 16.

The union's board called attention to a statement by Dr. Elton Trueblood, a prominent minister, that "the church has become a class institution of owners, managers, professional people and white collar workers," and proposed a "program of action."

Ohio Council Hits Closing Health Office

CLOSING of the Region IV office of the U. S. Health, Education & Welfare Dept. in Cleveland, O., was scored by Pres. James P. Griffiin and Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council.

Their protests were voiced in letters addressed to Pres. Eisenhower, H-E-W. Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby, and to Ohio's two senators and 23 congressmen.

The letters appealed to Ohio's congressional delegation "to prevent a rash act which will foist hardship on deserving people, make political considerations and maneuvering more important than human beings and bring sharp censure on the national administration."

THE OHIO Council action, which was concurred in by the Cleveland IUC, called to mind a recent similar cut in federal public services when congressional penny pinching forced curtailment of offices of the U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Service and of the Labor Dept.'s wage-hour division.

The Ohio Council letter pointed out that the Region IV office of H-E-W, which covers Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky, serves an area third in population in the U. S., third in expenditures for public assistance and third in number of beneficiaries of Old Age and Survivors' Insurance.

"The fourth regional office working out of Cleveland," the letter said, "was opened in May, 1936, just a few months after the passage of the Social Security Act. It has served one of the most vital areas in the entire nation in a non-political, efficient and understanding manner."

Velde Out Of Senate Contest

Rep. Velde (R.) isn't going to run against Sen. Douglas (D.) in the Illinois senatorial contest next year. The House un-American Activities Committee chairman announced that he will seek re-election to his fifth term from a downstate district.

Price-Fixing 'Fair Trade' Law Upheld By High Court

STATE "fair trade" laws, which permit manufacturers to fix retail prices of brand name goods, remained undisturbed following the second Supreme Court decision in recent weeks.

Under the first action, the court refused to hear an appeal from a Georgia Supreme Court ruling which declared Georgia's 1937 "fair trade" law "null and void."

The second decision, resulting from a Louisiana case, found the court refusing to disturb the "fair trade" law in that State.

Two years ago the court had held that "non-signers" do not have to maintain brand name prices set by manufacturers. Congress immediately passed the McGuire Act to circumvent this decision and the recent high court decisions have the effect of allowing state supreme courts to make the final ruling on the legality of such acts adopted by their state legislatures.

Auto Local Forms New Blood Bank

A blood bank for members and their dependents has been established by CIO Auto Workers Local 23 in Indianapolis. Covering employes of the Chevrolet plant there, the bank is operated in cooperation with the Marion county blood bank.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

THE FIRST TIME in our history, at our Cleveland convention, we'll have the opportunity to gather our entire staff of CIO. It seems to me that the decision of Pres. Reuther and myself is one of the most important that we have made.

It will give the men and women who carry out the policies of CIO a chance to sit down together, to discuss mutual problems, to work towards closer relationships, and toward a greater coordination of our program.

We are a human organization. We measure our success in terms of human values rather than in dollar and cents. Our representatives have a special problem, as compared to the representatives of business and industry. The business representative can easily measure his job by totaling up a sheet of figures to show how much profit he has brought to his company. But the profit of a trade union—if you can use the word "profit"—is human welfare and dignity. How do you measure that?

MANY OF OUR MEN are just human enough to get discouraged. Many of the great changes our union has brought into the life of the nation are now so firmly fixed in the minds of the public that they no longer stand out as achievements—people take them as a matter of course. Human progress is slow. Often the spade-work done by a loyal and hard-working organizer, in bringing the union message to a community, will not show for many years.

For our part, as the leaders of CIO, we want to demonstrate to our staff the complete confidence we have in them, and their ability to do the tremendous job that lies ahead of us. We want them to know their efforts are appreciated and their voices will always be heard.

Many of the die-hard reactionaries of this country are still of the mind they can stop the trade union movement, break it. They have learned the methods of divide and conquer.

THOSE OF US who have spent most of our lives in the organizational field know how these companies work. They wait till the last few days of a campaign and then pour all the dirt and slander they can into the task of confusing workers. The reactionaries seem to be using a similar technique as our convention draws near. They are timing their propaganda of confusion to attempt to divert us from our convention job.

Our answer is simple. We plan to get together, and bring together, the responsible leadership and staff of CIO, and to fuse together our thinking into a solid and militant program for furthering the work of CIO.

We could spend a great deal of time, wasted time, answering these malicious critics. I believe no answer is necessary, other than the determination to weld together a still greater organization dedicated to a still greater program. We have before us the vision of a stronger, better America. That's the big job. Certainly, it calls for all our efforts.

'Creeping GM-ism' Gives UAW Problems At Kaiser

CREEPING "GM-ism" is still causing trouble for the CIO Auto Workers at Kaiser Motor's giant Willow Run plant.

Although UAW-CIO Local 142 recently signed an amended Kaiser contract, it is wondering what the effects of leasing additional space in the Willow Run plant to General Motors will have on the security of Kaiser employes.

Kaiser Motors Co. is negotiating with GM for leasing an additional 65,000 square feet. Should GM lease this extra space, it would be using about 45% of the 3.5 million square feet at Willow Run.

Local 142 has written Edgar Kaiser, Kaiser Motors' president, asking for an immediate meeting with Edgar and his father, Henry Kaiser, to discuss the firm's future.

THE LOCAL wrote that no settlement with GM will be satisfactory that fails to take into account job security, seniority and pension rights of the local's members.

The first lease to GM prevented Kaiser from bidding on the C-123 cargo plane contract. Local 142 said this was done after UAW "went to Washington and met with the secretary of the air force and gained the right for Kaiser to bid on the C-123 contract."

"Now the ominous shadow of GM has crept past the boundaries of the original lease," Local 142 warned.

Kaiser Motors is planning to operate with 3000 to 4000 workers instead of the 13,000 it had prior to government cancellattion of its aircraft contracts several months ago.

On the basis of this change in its plans, the firm asked to amend its union contracts. The amendments provide for a reduction in the number of UAW stewards, a change in the provision for their overtime pay, and the consolidation of many job classifications.

Lansing Station Adds Vandercook

Newest station to join the network carrying the CIO-sponsored radio program, "John W. Vandercook and the News" Monday through Friday nights is in Lansing, Mich.

The station, an independent, is WILS at 1320 on the dial, and the broadcast time is 10:00 p.m.

Vandercook is heard nationally on some 150 ABC stations at 7:00 p.m. eastern time and 6:00 p.m. in the Central, Mountain and Pacific time zones in most cities.

NLRB Curbs Vote Rights Of Unions In Oath Cases

UNIONS will not be permitted to appear on the ballot in representation elections if any officer is under indictment on a charge of filing false non-Communist affidavits, the National Labor Relations Board announced in a statement of policy last week.

Where such unions have filed election petitions, the board announcement said, action will be deferred until the courts decide the guilt or innocence of the officer in question.

Stressing that it draws "no inference of guilt from the issuance of the indictment," the board declared that under its new policy a conviction "would necessarily invalidate any certifications or other official action taken by the board in reliance on the truth" of the affidavits, which are required by the Taft-Hartley Act.

The new policy will affect all locals of two international unions which were expelled from the CIO because of Communist domination.

They are the Fur & Leather Workers, whose president, Ben Gold, is under indictment, and the Marine Cooks & Stewards. Hugh Bryson, president of the latter group, also is awaiting trial on a charge of filing a false affidavit.

FOUR LOCAL union officers have been indicted on similar charges. They are Ernest M. Hupman, United Electrical Workers Local 801, and Walter C. Lohman, UE Local 768, both of Dayton, O.; Milton E. Jencks, Local 890, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, El Paso, Tex.; and Olga Zenchuk, Local 69, CIO Packinghouse Workers Detroit.

The new board policy was indicated when Chairman Guy Farmer said in a speech that a "stringent program" was being prepared to deal with "the dangerous abuse" of NLRB processes by Communists.

TWUA Saves 200 Jobs As Mill Reopens

SOME 200 members of the CIO Textile Workers were assured of re-employment when TWUA-CIO signed a contract with the new owner of a Plymouth, Mass., mill which closed two years ago.

The new contract guarantees payment of accumulated vacation pay and old age severance pay, and maintenance of established seniority rights.

"WE ARE glad to enter into this new contract which apparently insures survival of the Mabbett mill and a measure of security for the workers who have worked there so loyally and so long," said TWUA-CIO Sec.-Treas. John Chupka.

"We are particularly pleased by two rather special aspects of the change in ownership. The first is Goldfine's confidence that good management, with a will to stay in business, can operate a textile mill profitably in New England.

"Our union has always held this viewpoint, not because we have any sectional interests or prejudices, but because we believe the migration of industry is an unnecessary economic waste which unfairly penalizes the workers and the community without providing any lasting benefit to the employer."

Guild Gets Pact On Canada Radio

Negotiations covering almost a year won wage increases and other benefits for some 60 CIO Newspaper Guildsmen employed in the radio and television newsroom by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.

ANG-CIO also obtained a 40-hour week, improvement in holiday pay, night shift differentials, overtime pay, paid vacations and sick leave. Negotiations began in the fall of 1953 and were concluded late in the summer of this year.

O'Connor Denies Contempt Case

Harvey O'Connor, former public relations director for the CIO Oil Workers, has pleaded innocent in U. S. District Court in Washington to a charge of contempt of Congress.

The charge grew out of O'Connor's refusal to tell Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) and his Senate Investigations Subcommittee if he were a Communist. OWIU-CIO is backing O'Connor's stand.

Gerhard Van Arkle, one of O'Connor's lawyer, said the case involves "an important constitutional and civil liberties question affecting all citizens."

O'Connor relied on the First Amendment to the Constitution, guaranteeing freedom of speech, in refusing to tell the committee whether or not he was a Communist when he wrote books distributed to U. S. information centers. Later he freely told reporters he was not and never had been a Communist.

A GOAL of "freedom, peace and security in a world without discrimination" was reaffirmed by some 500 delegates from Michigan locals of the CIO Auto Workers at a recent state conference on fair practices and civil rights in Detroit. At left, W. H. Oliver, UAW Fair Practices Dept. co-director, greets Caroline Davis, Lillian Hatcher and Harry Ross of union staff. Center, UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey greets Gov. G. Mennen Williams, who addressed conference. At right, a round-table of experts who answered the delegates' questions on local, U. S. FEPC.

Chemical Workers Hit A-Plant Closing

ANNOUNCEMENT of plans to "virtually abandon" an expensive Atomic Energy Commission plant near Dayton, O., brought a protest from the CIO Chemical Workers, who last week urged Pres. Eisenhower and heads of the AEC to investigate the matter.

Telegrams sent out by UGCCW Pres. Elwood Swisher, on behalf of the union's executive board, said that the present highly trained personnel is being "scattered to the four winds," and the Dayton plant and equipment which cost hundreds of millions of dollars are idle and "without present plans for participation in future operations of the AEC."

LOCAL 420 at the Mound Laboratory in Miamisburg, near Dayton, brought the problem to light in a telegram to Pres. Eisenhower protesting plans to put plant, equipment and about 1000 skilled workers on standby status.

"We are anxious that these facilities be used in the national interest," the local said, "and that present waste of equipment, skills and personnel be ended."

Robert P. Buchanan, Gas-Coke board member and the union's director for Ohio, said the Miamisburg Chamber of Commerce and other interested parties had joined forces with Local 420 and were preparing for a march on Washington to protest the action in person.

The AEC, in an official statement to the press, said the cutback was only 30%. But the union's board said that official information available showed a 90% cutback would in effect by Jan. 1 when a staff of 600 skilled technicians, physicists and scientists would be reduced to about 40.

IN ANOTHER action the UGCCW board proposed scenic restoration of Niagara Falls with financing to come at least in part by fees from public power development of the American side of the falls under treaty with Canada.

Stephen G. McMullen, board member and Niagara Falls area director, said the competitive disadvantage of high-cost power in northern New York state has resulted in an exodus of chemical and other industries to cheaper power areas.

CWA Protests Strike Move By Military

THE CIO Communications Workers last week protested for the second time in as many months against military strike-breaking.

CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne wrote Defense Sec. Charles E. Wilson that the intervention occurred in Norfolk, Va., during a recent, brief CWA strike against Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of Virginia.

Beirne wrote "it appears that this case is not quite the same" as the earlier one. Some 30 cots were moved from the Norfolk Navy operating base to a telephone company building for use by strikebreakers.

THE FIRST instance occurred at several locations in Maryland, when 300 cots and blankets were lent to the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of Baltimore for use by strikebreakers. CWA-CIO also protested to Wilson in that case.

CWA also announced that its defense fund paid out $756,000 for assistance during four victorious strikes and still has about $1 million on hand.

Most extensive use of the fund came in the 59-day strike against Indiana Bell when $450,000 was paid in direct aid to strikers.

Stronger Drive For Civil Rights Set By Michigan Auto Workers

A WIDE-RANGE program for expanding fair practices on the job and in the community and to win enactment of local, state and federal civil rights legislation was drafted at a recent Michigan-wide conference of the CIO Auto Workers.

Some 450 delegates and 50 resource experts participated in the Detroit conference, which was co-sponsored by the UAW-CIO Fair Practices & Anti-Discrimination Dept., and the five auto union regions in the state.

General theme of the conference, said William H. Oliver, Fair Practices Dept. co-director, was "freedom, peace and security in a world without discrimination."

AMONG MAJOR conference decisions and resolutions were:

- A call for "redoubling of efforts to obtain FEPC legislation in every Michigan industrial city." (Pontiac and River Rouge are among cities with local anti-bias laws; one was defeated some months ago in Detroit.)
- Continued full support of the fight to end filibustering rules in the Senate, a roadblock to federal civil rights laws.
- A recommendation that the UAW-CIO Skilled Trades Dept. seek guarantees of equality of opportunity under all joint union-management apprenticeship programs.
- A call for increased construction of low-rent public housing open to all tenants without racial or religious restriction.
- A call for the UAW to confer with Michigan policy officials toward a uniform policy of enforcement of Michigan's civil rights law for equal public accommodations.
- Full support to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in its legal fight in the Supreme Court against segregation in public schools.

Both UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey and Vice Pres. John W. Livingston related instances in which the union's Intl. Executive Board had moved speedily to correct discriminatory practices in compliance with the auto union's constitution.

Roy Reuther, union political action coordinator, emphasized the importance of PAC work to bring into being the conference's numerous legislative proposals.

Among conference participants were George L-P Weaver, director of the National CIO Civil Rights Committee; Frank Shane, executive secretary of the CIO Steelworkers Civil Rights Committee; and James Turner, assistant director of the CIO Rubber Workers Fair Practices Dept.

ACWA Gives $1000 To NAACP Fund

The CIO Clothing Workers have contributed $1000 to the "Fighting Fund for Freedom" of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."

"The NAACP is doing a magnificent job to end discrimination and intolerance," said Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the ACWA.

Other recent CIO contributions to the NAACP fund came from CIO Auto Workers Local 9 and CIO Electrical Workers Local 917, both of South Bend, Ind.

'Workers Are People,' UAW Reminds Harvester Bosses

WORKERS are people, the CIO Auto Workers reminded International Harvester Co. in full-page ads which appeared last week in major newspapers across the nation.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the company that "labor is not a ton of steel." He said labor may have been regarded as a commodity formerly but "we have now established the principle that collective bargaining agreements are a matter of human relationships and that they have to do with people and human values . . ."

Contending that the contract is "a living document" and subject to change with the times, the UAW-CIO asked International Harvester to meet the terms set with other firms in the auto and farm implement field.

The union seeks conversion to the new BLS price index, an annual improvement factor adjustment, health and welfare coverage for retired workers and adjustments in base rates, wages for skilled trades and in pensions.

Cited in the ads was International Harvester's treatment of the grievance clause. With two impartial umpires fired and no umpire in 18 of the past 33 months, UAW claimed 1800 grievances had piled up.

The company's profits, the ads claimed, were $38.5 million after taxes for the nine-month period ending July 31. This was a slight increase over the same period a year ago.

Putting "profits above people" was behind the firm's attitude towards its workers, the Auto union ads concluded.

IUE Gains New Wage Boost At Wagner

FOR THE SECOND time this year CIO Electrical Workers have won wage increases for 5100 members at Wagner Electric Co. in St. Louis.

This means that the over all raises for the year for the Wagner workers are several cents an hour above the national pattern in the industry, the IUE said.

The recently won hikes, all of which are retroactive to Aug. 3, provide 2c to 4c an hour more for production workers, and $6.93 a week more for clerical employes.

THE UNION won 10c in general wage increases, three days paid leave for death in the family, seven guaranteed paid holidays and a 25c an hour additional increase for janitors and watchmen at the Hillard Corp., Elmira, N. Y.

IUE-CIO also obtained 6c to 14c hourly wage increases at the Bendix Friez plant in Baltimore. Also won were boosts of 9c to 10c an hour and incorporation of a previous 13c hourly cost-of-living increase into the base rate at Standard Register Co., Dayton, O.

'Let 'Em Eat Cake'

Incredible suggestion that workers "follow the industry" when a plant moves out of a community was the contribution of Deputy Assistant Sec. of Commerce for Domestic Affairs Carl F. Oechsle to solution of unemployment problem posed by delegation from New England Dist. 2, CIO Electrical Workers, in conferences with government officials in Washington. Here Sec. of Commerce Weeks gets figures on startling rise in New England joblessness in last six weeks from some of the IUE-CIO group. Fair Dealers Win In Local Elections

Fair Dealers Win In State, City Elections

"HIGH-HANDED" big business policies of the Republican Administration came up for the test at the polls in state, congressional and more than 100 municipal elections last week.

And as the final returns came in on Nov. 4—just a year to a day after the 1952 Republican presidential and congressional victories—it was plain that Fair Deal sections of the Democratic party were on the rebound.

Democratic victories in New Jersey—winning the governorship and a special congressional contest—and the landslide victory of Robert F. Wagner, Jr., for mayor of New York City highlighted the results. They were matched by Democratic victories in a half-dozen other cities.

CIO-PAC block workers were out in force in several of the campaigns, and the results were hailed by National PAC Dir. Jack Kroll. He said:

"The results of the election were the people's answer to the high-handed methods of big business in taking over and running the government of the United States.

"They have expressed their anger and resentment in unmistakable terms. I hope the Administration will take heed and change its course."

In New Jersey, particularly, GOP National Chairman Leonard Hall had gone all out. Pres. Eisenhower voiced a blanket endorsement of Republicans. The Citizens for Eisenhower outfit was revived. But it all failed.

AFTERWARDS, at a White House press conference, the President said "I've lost skirmishes before." He predicted things will look better next year for the GOP.

Another Republican, Rep. Reed (N.Y.), blamed GOP defeats on their failure to carry out their 1952 campaign promises. Former Pres. Truman said the results show "the Democrats still believe in the New Deal and the Fair Deal—and so do the people."

First in Wisconsin and then in New Jersey, the Democrats have won by-elections in districts which previously never sent Democrats to Congress. The House lineup now is 218 Republicans, 215 Democrats, one independent, with a vacancy to be filled Nov. 10 in California.

NEW JERSEY: Ten years of Republican domination were ended by the twin Democratic victories for Governor and in the 6th Congressional Dist.

A GOP record of corruption and links to racketeers was emphasized by Robert B. Meyner in the campaign that won the top state office. He scored a majority of more than 156,000 over GOP Paul L. Troast, contractor and friend of Joe Fay, convicted labor extortionist.

In the industrial and suburban 6th Dist., centering around Elizabeth and Plainfield, Harrison A. Williams won by a narrow, 2000-vote margin over GOP George F. Hetfield. The by-election was for the seat formerly held by Rep. Case (R.), who won a year ago by 54,000 votes.

Williams, a young attorney and former CIO Steelworker, was aided by a strong CIO-PAC campaign organization. Some 2000 poll workers were out on election day, reflecting strong CIO union organization in Union County.

The congressional result was described as "a clear cut victory for the return of liberal government" by State CIO Council Pres. Carl Holderman. And he said that Meyner's gubernatorial election was "an outstanding victory for clean and decent government. It should be a warning to the Republican party that corruption will not be tolerated..."

Holderman pointed out that Williams won on a liberal platform against Hetfield's ultra-conservative "platform of support for Eisenhower," and said the result "is a definite indication of the fears the people have about the big business Administration."

In state legislative contests, two CIO members won races for the State Assembly. They were Frank Meloni, president of the South Jersey CIO Council in Camden, and Thomas Lazzion, president of CIO Auto Workers Local 300 in Passaic.

NEW YORK CITY: A landslide mayoralty vote for young Wagner, Manhattan borough president and son of the late Sen. Wagner, also brought Democratic control of the City Council.

Wagner gained a plurality of more than 360,000 votes over Republican Harold Riegelman and Liberal Rudolph Halley. The Democrats won 20 out of 25 City Council seats, four of the five borough presidencies, and 10 of 11 judicial posts.

The Wagner victory was aided by a vigorous labor campaign spearheaded by the New York City CIO Council, and bitter daily press editorial attacks on the Council and Michael Quill, City CIO and Transport Workers president.

The results also strengthened Fair Deal forces in the New York Democratic party in preparation for next year's gubernatorial campaign.

CIO Council Sec.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz hailed the results, said "the important job facing us is to translate this mandate into a victory in the state in 1954. The first 10 months of Wagner's Administration will have a heavy bearing on '54. If his government operates for the people in the best New Deal-Fair Deal tradition, a state victory can be achieved."

PENNSYLVANIA: Strongly supported by the Steel City CIO Council and other labor forces in Pittsburgh, Mayor David L. Lawrence was re-elected for an unprecedented third term by a 55,000-vote majority. In Philadelphia, Republicans won local judicial contests.

OHIO: In Cleveland, a CIO-PAC endorsed independent Democrat, Anthony J. Celebrezze, defeated Republican William McDermott by 30,000 votes. In Cincinnati, CIO Steelworker Al Jordan—strongly backed by the CIO Council in a campaign protesting local runaway rent boosts—was successful in his contest for City Council.

MICHIGAN: Four CIO-endorsed members of the Detroit Common Council were re-elected in light voting. They were Mary V. Beck, Edward Connor, Louis C. Miriani and Eugene Van Antwerp.

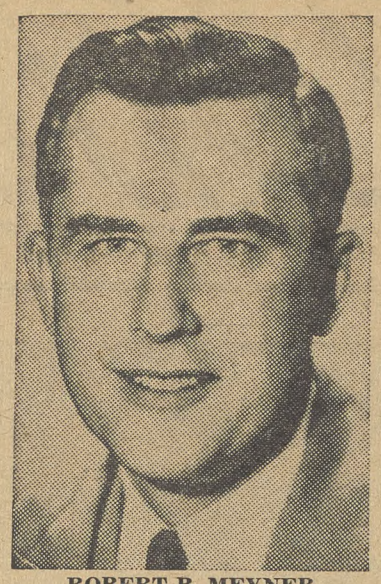
ILLINOIS: In mixed results in Chicago, Democrats won four out of five aldermanic contests, while the Republicans took seven of 13 Cook County judicial posts.

IOWA: In industrial Davenport, Walter Beuse became the city's first Democratic mayor in 20 years.

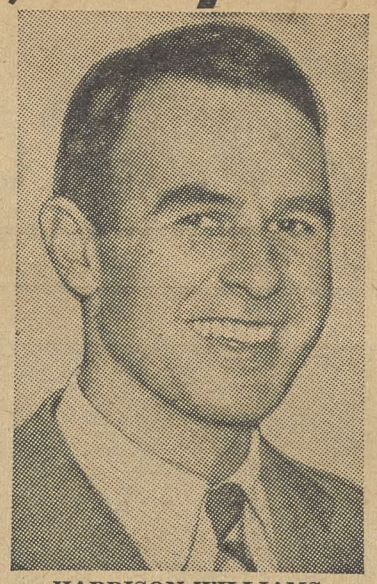
VIRGINIA: The Byrd Dixiecrat organization (which backed Eisenhower in '52) was given a comparatively close contest by the growing state Republican party (which in the past has aided Byrd in Democrat primaries). The Byrd Democrat, Thomas Stanley, won by a 5-4 lead over Republican Ted Dalton.

TENNESSEE: A series of CIO-endorsed constitutional amendments which abolished the poll tax, lengthened the governor's term to four years, upped legislators' pay and extended local home rule were approved by voters.

"Okay, Now Give Us That Old Smile"



ROBERT B. MEYNER



HARRISON WILLIAMS

ROBERT F. WAGNER, JR.

The White House announced Pres. Eisenhower supports "Republican candidates everywhere." Then the Democrats won the governorship and a congressional by-election in New Jersey while Wagner's New York sweep led a series of municipal election victories.

The Big Spenders Were Big Losers

It cost the Republicans five times as much to lose the New Jersey gubernatorial race as it cost the Democrats to win it.

Figures filed with the State showed that Republican nominee Paul L. Troast reported in a preliminary statement spending $45,201 of a $46,072 fund. The new Democratic Governor, Robert B. Meyner, listed an expenditure of $8316 out of a $10,277 fund in his preliminary report.

Unquote

"The Republican plutocracy, recently substituted in Washington for the Democratic government wrought by Thomas Jefferson, fought for by Andrew Jackson, liberalized by Woodrow Wilson and immortalized by Franklin Roosevelt, should be appropriately and indelibly branded in '53; courageously and effectually sterilized in '54 by the election of a Democratic Congress, and inexorably and eternally exiled by the election of a Democratic President and Congress in '56. I have come not to praise this Administration but to help bury it."

—Sen. Matthew M. Neely (D. W. Va.) in a speech in Utica, N. Y.

CWA Cracks Open Shop Front In Northern Ontario

CIO COMMUNICATIONS Workers in Canada have won a precedent-setting check-off provision from the Northern Telephone Co., whose operations spread across 1000 miles of sparsely-settled northern Ontario and Quebec.

In addition, CWA won a wage boost of 4c an hour across-the-board, retroactive to July 1, and an additional 1c an hour effective Jan. 1.

A closely-united well-heeled employers' group has until now avoided agreeing to this fundamental union objective, the deduction of union dues.

This is the same rough gold-mining territory where mine owners, fighting the check-off, several months ago forced several thousand hard rock miners—members of the CIO Steelworkers—to go on strike. They are still out in the gold fields.

CWA's contract with Northern Telephone expired June 30. Workers didn't go on strike, but pushed the case through the steps of the government's mediation machinery.

Around Oct. 1 the mediation service, which unlike that in the U. S. has the right to make recommendations, proposed a wage increase and other improvements but did not recommend the check-off.

Settlement came at the end of a marathon bargaining session starting on the morning of Oct. 27 and continuing to 4 a.m. the next day. Other gains won include a jointly paid-for hospital, surgical and in-hospital medical payment plan for all employes, with employes having the right to enroll their dependents at the full rate. One job was reclassified upward.

Officers Meet In Cleveland As CIO Convention Nears

PRELIMINARIES to the 1953 National CIO convention will get under way this week in Cleveland, with the five-day convention opening on Nov. 16 in the Public Auditorium.

Pre-convention sessions of top CIO and national union officers will begin on Armistice Day, with a one-day session of the CIO Executive Committee. On Nov. 12, the full CIO Executive Board will meet.

The convention resolutions committee, headed by Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers, has scheduled a session on Nov. 13.

A meeting of the full CIO staff, from national headquarters in Washington and field offices around the country, has been called by Pres. Walter P. Reuther for Nov. 14.

Also over the pre-convention weekend will be a two-day meeting of the CIO Editors & Public Relations Conference.

Several national figures have accepted invitations invited to address the convention, including Sec. of Labor Mitchell, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Chester Bowles, former ambassador to India, and Fred Hinkel, president of the Missouri Farmers Association.

IUE Protests Mounting New England Layoffs

THE STONY advice that workers should "follow the industry" when it moves to another part of the country was given a delegation of CIO Electrical Workers that carried word of spreading unemployment in New England to government officials in Washington last week.

This course was suggested by Earl F. Oechsle, deputy assistant secretary of commerce for domestic affairs, after Sec.-Treas. Anthony Cimino of IUE-CIO Dist. 2 warned that the combined effects of runaway employers, plant dispersals and armament order cutbacks were becoming a major threat to the area's economy.

Cimino promptly retorted that most New England employers who moved South "certainly aren't encouraging the workers to follow the industry." He said that when workers follow the General Electric Co., which has moved some plants to low-wage areas, they are hired only at lower pay scales.

Jobs Drop By 6000

The delegation was sent to Washington by the district council after a survey showed a drop of 6000 in employment of large New England plants, under contract to the union, in the last few weeks. The statistics it presented were more up-to-date than those available to top government officials.

In the Commerce Dept., in addition to Oechsle, they saw Sec. Weeks and Lothair Teeter, assistant secretary for domestic affairs. They also saw Sec. of Labor James P. Mitchell, Dir. Arthur Flemming of the Office of Defense Mobilization, and Army, Navy and Air Force representatives. A delegation called on Sen. Green (D. R.I.).

To the government officials and Green, the group presented a program for administrative and legislative action aimed at easing the situation and strengthening the economy nationally.

Weeks, expressing surprise at the recent rapid growth of unemployment in New England, invited a committee from the delegation to return to Washington for a conference later this month.

A few days after Mitchell and Flemming indicated to the group that new plans were in the offing, the latter announced a program to aid "chronic heavy unemployment" areas. CIO spokesmen said it did not go far enough, but that it was a step in the right direction.

CIO Position Told

The plan called for rapid tax amortization benefits for construction of defense plants in such areas, and reinstated one of the less effective portions of old Manpower Policy No. 4.

The CIO, while opposed to hopped-up tax amortization generally, has approved it as a means of stimulating job opportunities in chronic unemployment areas. However, it has maintained the benefits should be allowed all industry, not just defense ventures. Flemming himself admitted that defense plant expansion is about completed.

From Manpower Policy No. 4, Flemming picked up a provision authorizing the award of government contracts to firms in labor surplus areas in case of tie bids. He did not reinstate bid-matching, under which firms in such areas were allowed to match lower bids by companies in other sections.

Flemming suspended bid-matching about four months ago after attacks on it in the Senate sparked by Sen. Maybank (D. N.C.) and Republican Majority Leader Knowland.

The IUE-CIO delegation reported it was not particularly cheered at the results of its meetings. Cimino and Vice Pres. William Nichols, of GE Local 201 at Lynn, Mass., agreed that "they left us with the feeling that they had no grasp of the situation."

The IUE-CIO program called for assurance that defense work be prosecuted vigorously; that New England get a fair share of such contracts; that plant dispersal in the interest of national safety not be abused by employers seeking to flee unionism and decent wages and working conditions.

Also, a government-sponsored tax program to encourage industry to locate in New England and take advantage of its large reservoirs of skilled and trained labor, including tax amortization to industries expanding in labor surplus areas; measures to stimulate consumer buying power; higher unemployment compensation benefits; increasing the minimum wage to $1.25 a hour, and preparation of a program of federal public works in cooperation with the states.

Bay State CIO Council Joins IUE Locals In Jobless Protest

The warning that unemployment is spreading rapidly in New England was given government officials in Washington last week by a delegation of 15 members of nine locals in the CIO Electrical Workers Dist. 2 and three officers of the Massachusetts CIO Council.

The Massachusetts CIO Council was represented by Pres. J. William Belanger, Vice Pres. James J. Kelley, a member of IUE-CIO Local 201, and Joseph Cass.

Jobless Total Low As Workers Quit Labor Force

REAL unemployment figures are being under-estimated by several hundred thousand workers, it was estimated last week, after the Commerce Dept. reported national unemployment is at the lowest since 1946.

The government figures brush over the growing shift of women workers, older men, and younger workers out of the labor force and out of the labor market—and hence out of the number of workers counted as unemployed.

NO EXACT figures are available for this total. However, one clue is contained in Labor Dept. reports on the number of working women. This figure has been declining for more than a year.

The withdrawal of women workers (often a second paycheck earner in many families) plus the shortening of factory working hours to an average below 40 hours has meant sharp cuts in cash income for many workers' families—at a time when living costs each month set new records.

Some clue of these shifts in the labor force—and unemployment actually much higher than the official estimates of 1,162,000 in October—is contained in the latest Commerce Dept. report.

The agency reported a slight monthly drop in employment, from 62.3 million in September to 62.2 million in October. And press dispatches added "the decrease resulted from a reduction in the overall labor force."

A check of figures on a year-to-year basis gives a clearer indication that the U. S. economy is failing to provide jobs for the 700,000 new workers who each year join the labor force, or to prevent what economists call the "washout" of workers now on the job.

While 700,000 new workers each year join the labor force, the actual number of workers on the job in the past year climbed by only 380,000. The October 1952 employment figure was 61.8 million while the figure for last month was 62.2 million. The total labor force increase was less, only 268,000. From October to October, the figures were 63.1 million and 63.4 million.

The Commerce Dept. said "almost all major industries" in September reported lower employment and shorter working hours. The rate of personal income dropped for the second month in a row, as result, to an annual rate of $285 billion. That's a $2 billion decrease.

Real take-home wages of factory workers, according to the Bureau of National Affairs, declined by 1.8% for single workers and 1.6% for married workers in the month to mid-September.

CONTINUING layoffs were reported last week in a number of industries. Chrysler Corp. will drop 1000 employes when it stops production of Army medium tanks. Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. has gone on a four-day week and has closed six open-hearth furnaces.

Steel Firms Lead The High Profit Parade

WITH STEEL companies leading the profit parade and showing a gain of 73.1%, U. S. corporations as a whole reported a whopping 18% average profits increase in the first nine months of 1953 over the same period a year ago.

The figures compiled by the New York Journal of Commerce also showed that three out of four firms had a better year.

Aircraft firms were second on the list of increased profit percentages with a gain of 50.5%. Next came mining and metals with 34.4%, textiles with 23.5%.

U. S. Steel profits were up 91% for a tidy $166 million. Bethlehem Steel made $93.5 million compared to $41.4 million in the first nine months last year.

FOR JONES & Laughlin the figures were $25 million and $5 million, a 380% increase. Acme Steel's net was $1.84 a share against $1.40 last year, Carpenter Steel netted $2.45 a share compared to $1.64, and Pittsburgh Steel was $2.84 versus $1.34 a share.

Alcoa set a record, too, netting $40 million, a 31% gain on sales of $544 million.

E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., the nation's giant chemical corporation, reported a net of $173 million or $3.62 a share for the first three quarters of 1953 compared to $156 million or $3.26 a share in 1952.

Standard Oil of California was up to $140 million over $130 million, Standard Oil of New Jersey up 18% to $415 million over $391 million, Union Oil up to $28 million from $19.4 million.

Consolidated Edison was high up on the list of utilities with a net of $50.5 for a 20% increase and its best earnings in 20 years. The Pennsylvania Railroad raked in $28.6 million compared to $19.9 million last year.

The Elections

The Nov. 3 elections are strong evidence of discontent in many sections of the country.

Not only in New Jersey and New York—the most publicized of the voting areas—but in scores of cities around the country, Republicans took it on the chin. What's perhaps even more surprising is that the Republican National Committee admits its chin is sore from the kick.

As Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee, pointed out, the results were "an answer to the high-handed methods of big business in taking over and running the government of the United States. They have expressed their anger and resentment in unmistakable terms."

The "anger and resentment" came from farmers in the recent Wisconsin congressional elections, and from white collar people and industrial workers in New Jersey.

It's significant that throughout New Jersey generally, as well as in the 6th Congressional Dist. there, CIO-PAC did a sound, steady, thorough-going job of getting people registered, presenting the issues, and urging them to vote.

It proved once again that it doesn't do any good to mumble your protests into the television screen. Your protests register only when you vote—as the folks did last week in New Jersey.

Mayor Wagner

The job of being mayor of New York has been described as the second most important elective job in the country. Whether that's true or not, New Yorkers have elected a famous-name Fair Dealer to the job.

Robert S. Wagner, Jr., the son of the sponsor of the Wagner Act, was elected by a tremendous plurality over his two opponents—and his strong endorsement from New York CIO unions certainly helped build the size of his victory.

As mayor of the world's biggest city, Bob Wagner has a magnificent opportunity to turn back the tide of creeping reaction that has been moving over American government at the city level. We wish him well.

At the same time, we congratulate those hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers who ignored a vicious smear campaign conducted by the Republican candidate and many newspapers against the CIO.

The smear was on the same low level as the "clear it with Sidney" line used by the GOP in 1944. It was equally unsuccessful.

Some day, perhaps, the Republicans will learn that labor has the right to make political endorsements; that liberal candidates who receive those labor endorsements are not thereby converted into "puppets" of the unions; and that a large proportion of the voting public wants public servants interested in the welfare of workers.

Perhaps it's idle to expect the GOP to learn that lesson soon. But the Grouchy Old Party won't be a consistent winner until it does.

In Other Words—

Speaking Out In The South

Speaking out in the South on civil rights, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey addressed the recent North Carolina CIO Council founding convention. A portion of the remarks of Carey, who is chairman of the CIO Civil Rights Committee and president of the Electrical Workers, follows:

By JAMES B. CAREY

I AM TOLD that civil rights is not a proper subject to discuss when you are south of the Mason-Dixon line. Some well-meaning friends have even said to me, "Jim, you can't talk about civil rights in the South—you can't say in the South the same thing that you say when you are speaking in the North." Well, the hell I can't.

I don't believe any man has the right to make a speech in one section of the country and be afraid to say the same things some place else.

I objected to it last fall when Candidate Eisenhower was talking about "hot" issues in those geographical areas where the issue was not hot—and was afraid to mention that issue some place else.

I would be derelict in my duty, and unfaithful to myself, if I failed here today to talk with you about the importance of civil rights, and about the role which we in the CIO confidently expect your Council will take in this field.

A Tragedy Of America

America has a great heritage of freedom—and an equally great heritage of equality. That's "equality" for all men—not for just one group. And one of the tragedies in our country is the fact that we have failed to insure both freedom and equality for all men—regardless of race, creed, color or national origin.

There is only one way this ideal—this American ideal—can have real meaning and sustenance. That is for each individual to have useful employment at his highest skill—and full economic and political opportunity. Race, color, creed—these are not measures of skill.

And those who erect artificial barriers, to keep some men from achieving complete economic as well as political freedom—those who would deny equality of opportunity to all men—are disloyal to our great American heritage.

You and I well know why some men raise this artificial barrier. They believe that so long as minority groups are denied equality of opportunity, there will be a low-paid, hungry, desperate group in our society. It is this group that they hope to use to undermine the wage standards, the living conditions, the economic well-being of all the rest of us. With them it is simply and solely a matter of money.

We in the CIO, which was founded on the proposition that all men will enjoy freedom and equality, can tolerate no exception to that proposition.

We have fought at the collective bargaining table—and we have achieved some gains. We have fought in the courts—and we have had some measure of success. We have fought in the state legislatures and in the Congress of the United States with some, albeit less, success.

We'll Continue To Fight

The important thing is, however, that we have fought and that we shall continue to fight for equality of opportunity—not only before the law, but equality of opportunity in employment and in enjoying the fruits of our labor. And I say to you with moral certainty that we in the CIO shall never cease fighting until we have achieved that goal—and achieved it everywhere in the country.

Discrimination, segregation, all the evils of minority persecution in this country are daily ammunition for the propagandists behind the Iron Curtain. Every time we give the Communists a single item of propaganda ammunition, through a single violation of the civil rights of any individual in the country, we are hurting the cause of freedom, democracy and liberty everywhere.

We can't win converts to the cause of democracy and freedom by words alone. We must match our words with our deeds. We can't beat Communism by merely being anti-Communist. We must be pro-democratic and that means we must practice, as well as preach, democracy.

But even more important than eliminating this propaganda weapon is the fact that we must push this fight for civil rights because it is the decent and honorable and American thing to do.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

TO KEEP THE RECORD straight, two congressional special elections, both of which the Democrats won sensationally, do not necessarily constitute a "trend." Democratic victories in many municipal elections do not inevitably predict what the voters will do next year.

Nevertheless, Pres. Eisenhower's slip is showing. The reason is exactly what this reporter has defined previously: The President shows few signs of knowing how to use the office of the White House.

He was nearly 63 years of age when he was inaugurated and he had spent all his mature life as a military man and staff officer, insulated from the civilian hurly-burly of politics.

After Victory, What?

He sometimes seems as helpless in dealing with the selfishness and turbulence of pressure groups as Harry S. Truman might have been if after a lifetime in politics he had suddenly been placed in command of soldiers, ships and air forces in 1944 and directed to liberate France.

This observer, lacking confidence in the capacity of a military man to do a politician's job, had no sympathy for the 1948 attempts of some Democrats to dump Truman and draft Eisenhower as their party's candidate. The "plans" existed but they didn't work because Mr. Truman knew a lot more about the temper of the American people than his opponents did.

Mr. Eisenhower finally harked to the blandishments of Republican leaders, and decided, in 1952, that he owed the people a duty to rescue them from 20 years of Roosevelt and Truman. And the people voted for the five-star general.

The trouble is that having won the job the President quickly revealed that he didn't know how to employ his victory.

It was clear from the start that he either had to run the Old Guard GOP or surrender to it. Mr. Eisenhower did neither, but took refuge in the eventual appointment of commissions to tell him what he ought to advance as a program.

When The Commissions Report

The commissions, headed by Herbert Hoover, Dr. Clarence Manion and Clarence Randall, will "report" next year.

Suppose Randall's commission on foreign economic policy proposes lower tariffs? The report will run up against Republican Old Guard committee chairmen in Congress already vengeful toward the President and ready to fight him bitterly in 1954.

Suppose the Hoover and Manion commissions propose some give-away and sell-away programs for the federal government? A good many Democrats, delighted by the Manion-Hoover attacks on the Tennessee Valley Authority, are prepared to take their stand with the Republican Abraham Lincoln: The government's business is to do for the people what they cannot do individually for themselves.

Leonard Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee, is candid enough to admit that the Great Crusade is creaking and lumbering. He claims that he thinks, however, that when the Eisenhower "program" is finally presented the anti-Republican tide will be reversed.

He is whistling as he passes a graveyard. Innumerable events might occur, within the next year, that would pave the way for a Republican victory—a war, a sensational spurt of prosperity, some blunder by the Democrats. But the Eisenhower "program" won't win many elections.

A Vacuum Of Leadership

There is a vacuum of leadership. The President has good will and honest intentions, but he trusts mainly millionaires and his old military companions. He was persuaded that the people made a mistake, across two decades in electing Roosevelt and Truman, and he let himself to be trapped into running as the candidate of a party whose hard core really wanted to repeal the 20 Century. He doesn't dare allow himself to think he might have been wrong about the whole proposition.

★ Mr. Eisenhower can occasionally be pushed around by the press. He thinks it an indignity that reporters pry on his golf and fishing, but he surrendered abruptly when Edward Folliard, a reporter for the Washington Post, publicly demanded that he alternate news conferences between mornings and afternoons so as to give fair breaks to all newspapers. This was the system that Roosevelt and Truman followed; Mr. Eisenhower tried to hold all his conferences in the mornings, so that the afternoons would be free for golf. After Folliard's request, two of the next three news conferences were held in the afternoon, giving late news breaks to the morning papers.

★ One comment on Agriculture Sec. Benson's problems is this: His entire top-ranking "advisory committee" is made up of middlemen, "people who have made money out of farming farmers."

Angel

H. L. Hunt, the Texas oil zillionaire, is revealed as the source of cash to print tens of thousands of copies of a Senate committee report on alleged Communists in government.

Chairman Jenner (R. Ind.) was in favor of this report. He was opposed to a subcommittee report on the operations of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) and the type for that anti-McCarthy report was promptly smashed. No zillionaires volunteered to spread that report around the country at their private expense, and within a few days you couldn't buy, beg or borrow a copy.

Behind The Headlines—

What's Good Enough For Old Abe Lincoln Is Not For Manion

By Labor Press Associated

THEY ASKED Dr. Clarence Manion whether he would agree with Abraham Lincoln that the government should do for the people that which they cannot do for themselves, or that which they can not do so well for themselves.

And Dr. Manion said, "I do not agree."

They asked him, "Do you agree that the test should be not whether the states should have the power but whether or not it is necessary for the federal government to take certain action on what to protect and advance for the general welfare of all the people to the greatest good of the greatest number." And Dr. Manion said, "No, I don't."

Dr. Manion, former dean of law at Notre Dame, gave these answers on a TV program discussing "Has the Federal Government Too Much Power?" He thinks it does. Further, he said TVA should be sold to a private business and that the government should never have built TVA.

Asked if he thought anyone but the federal government could have brought about the rural electrification program, which has brought electricity to nine out of every 10 farms, he replied "I certainly do." The program was promoted by the Rural Electrification Administration (REA).

He's Already Decided

Now, this is a free country, and a man has a right to his opinions. But it so happens that Dr. Manion heads Pres. Eisenhower's Intergovernment Relations Commission. When Eisenhower proposed creation of the commission, he set as its task "to review and assess, with prudence and foresight," the proper roles of federal, state and local governments.

Dr. Manion evidently does not need to "review and assess." He already has taken a stand. His defense, on the TV program, was that (a) he was not biased and (b) his views were "pronounced and well-known before I got this appointment."

So here we have another example of Eisenhower's "middle of the road" approach to the nation's problems.

Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) declared too many of Eisenhower's special "study" commissions are tackling problems with a prejudiced viewpoint, said their minds are closed.

As a matter of fact, Dr. Manion's commission has nothing to do with TVA. His group is supposed to study the relationships between local, state and federal governments. The job of wrecking TVA and public power is really up to the Hoover Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch. However, it doesn't really matter, since Hoover wants the government to get out of the power business, and sell TVA.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

"While The Getting Is Good"

Eisenhower himself said last June that TVA was an example of "creeping socialism," but the Manion statement was too much for him. He called the Manion proposal pretty drastic, pointed out that TVA is a historical fact, and said he does not see how TVA could be sold without wrecking its usefulness.

As regards REA, the record itself proves Dr. Manion woefully wrong. When the rural electrification program was started, the Roosevelt Administration begged the power industry to take over the job.

The power industry refused, because it said there was no money in it, and that the farms then (1935) had all the electricity they needed. The facts are that in 1935 only one farm in 10 had electricity, and that today nine out of 10 do. The answer is that the farmers themselves, through co-operatives, did what the electric power industry refused to do.

Washington Window—

Does Public Power Pay Its Way?

By Public Affairs Institute

THE CHAIRMAN of the House Public Works Committee, Rep. Dondero (R., Mich.), recently addressed a letter to 2000 editors and publishers in the seven-state area serviced by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

He wrote, in part, that public power projects can charge lower rates for their electric energy only because they do not pay taxes, interest and other costs like private power firms.

The private utility companies have frequently made this argument a major point of debate in the heated public-private power controversy.

Does public power carry its own load? The Public Affairs Institute has examined the question:

Cost of a Public Power Project—TVA is used as an example. The total investment cost of TVA's federally-owned generating and transmission systems is $977 million. The present depreciated cost is $856 million. Of this total, $723 million was provided by funds appropriated by Congress or through bonds. The remaining $133 million came from the earnings of the power business.

The municipalities and cooperatives distributing TVA power have assets valued at $400 million but this was raised by the people of the Tennessee Valley.

Federal Taxes—TVA, of course, is not required to pay federal income taxes. Under present laws, however, TVA will return to the U. S. Treasury, within 40 years, the funds provided by Congress to pay for the TVA power system. Such payments will soon be running in the neighborhood of $50 million a year.

Individual Federal Income Taxes—Since 1933 the seven states of the TVA region have almost doubled their share of Federal income tax payments.

Year	TVA Area Income Taxes	National Income Taxes	TVA Area % of Total
1933	$11.9 million	$351.4 million	3.4
1952	2.0 billion	32.7 billion	6.2

This means that in the single year of 1952 the people of the TVA area paid $900 million more in individual federal income taxes than if they had paid their same proportion of taxes as in 1933. This alone would have paid for the entire federal government's investment in TVA. It has eased the tax burden of the rest of the U. S.

State and Local Taxes—In 1952 TVA paid seven states and 136 counties and a number of local governments slightly more than $3 million in lieu of taxes. During the same period municipalities and cooperatives distributors of TVA power made tax payments to cities and counties totaling $4.7 million. Total taxes: $7.7 million.

Taxes of Private Power Firms—Private utilities pay taxes but their payments have been eased considerably in recent years through rapid tax amortization. As of June 1953, 636 such certificates have been issued to private electric power firms for projects estimated at $3.9 billion. It gives them tax savings of some $770 million during the first five years.

All this is convincing evidence that consumers of TVA power are paying their own way.

The Nation's Health

Two Harbors

By GERVASE N. LOVE

ON THE BEAUTIFUL North Shore of Lake Superior, where the summers are short and the winters tough, a handful of people have joined battle with two of the most powerful reactionary forces in America.

They total 3460 men, women and children in 1252 families, and they make up 65 to 70% of the 5000 residents of Two Harbors, Minn., and its immediate vicinity.

If it were not for the socially tragic overtones, the situation would seem a little ridiculous, because all these men—most of them workers who belong to railroad unions—and their families want is the kind of medical service they feel they need and can pay for.

Like most Americans, the people of Two Harbors want better medical care at a reasonable cost.

They've been seeking it through a co-op health plan, for which they want a better hospital. Hence, a blacklist by the AMA and bitter opposition by a Big Steel subsidiary.

It's as simple as that. But to get it, they have been forced into a bitter fight against the American Medical Association and the U. S. Steel Corp., neither of which is exactly a lightweight.

The dispute has resulted in a split that is growing between merchants, professional people, etc.—who are playing ball with Big Steel—and the great bulk of the people in the city and its environs.

Get CIO Assistance

The people are not alone in the battle. The Minnesota CIO Council, which hasn't a member in the community, is solidly behind them, as a matter of principle. Delegates to the recent State CIO convention voted to ask local unions for contributions to a war chest at the rate of 25c per member, a move designed to raise about $13,000.

Also fighting beside them is a six-state conference of trade unions, cooperatives, health cooperatives and farm groups which doesn't like to see people pushed around. An interim committee, with headquarters in St. Paul, the State capital, has been organized to channel support.

The story is a rather complicated one, and the battle is being waged on two fronts, but here is a brief summary:

1. Two Harbors has a cooperative, prepaid health plan, with a clinic and a hospital, staffed by five physicians of unchallenged professional competency and democratically operated by a lay board of directors—practically all of them Big Steel employes.

2. The clinic and hospital building, where people have been taking their illnesses for half a century, has been condemned by the State as a firetrap, a ruling conceded to be reasonable.

The Duluth, Missabi & Iron Range Railroad, U. S. Steel subsidiary and largest employer in the area, has flatly refused to contribute to a new building until the hospital is approved by the AMA and is run by an executive board it seeks to dictate.

A Strong Co-op Tradition

But there is a strong anti-monopoly tradition in Minnesota. There also is a strong cooperative tradition that finds expression in many fields. So the people of Two Harbors and their doctors reacted about as Minnesotans might be expected to.

They filed suit against the AMA's St. Louis County "local," charging conspiracy in restraint of trade, an attempt to monopolize, unfair competition and boycott.

They are asking a declaratory judgment and an injunction against the medical society.

It would be barred from refusing membership to qualified applicants because of their connection with the health plan, from discouraging other physicians from joining it, and from interfering with the campaign for funds for the new building. Damages totaling $315,000 also are sought.

Then they turned on Big Steel's railroad. Over it the wealth of half of Minnesota's famed Iron Range is carried to waiting ore vessels at the two double piers that thrust themselves into Lake Superior a few hundred feet from the hospital and clinic.

In blithe disregard of the fact that most of them—directors and members—work for the ore railroad and might feel their jobs are at stake, they began a campaign to raise $700,000 needed to construct the new 40-bed hospital building on a 10-acre site they already own. Located on the main road along the North Shore, it overlooks Agate Bay, one of the bays from which Two Harbors got its name.

They started a drive among themselves by selling family life memberships for $100 each. Already they have raised nearly $130,000 in this way—an impressive amount in view of the size of the community and the strength of the opposition.

Then they moved to tap another potential. Two Harbors operates a municipal liquor store with an income of about $70,000 a year. Under Minnesota law, the citizens by a referendum vote can earmark a proportion of the funds for hospital purposes.

A campaign for some 500 signatures to a petition for a referendum was begun, with Mayor Cyrus Magnuson playing a leading role. Before it ended more than 1300 voters had signed—far more than the usual number of votes cast in a Two Harbors election.

Election Coming Up

The petition called for allocation of $20,000 a year of the liquor store funds to the proposed group hospital for 10 years. The city attorney ruled it wasn't that kind of a hospital. But the State Attorney General reversed him—and the voting will take place Dec. 8.

Spearheading the twin battles are the board of directors, seven of whom are railroad employes; the medical staff headed by the chief, Dr. William Kosiak; William J. Dettweiler, executive director of the hospital; Magnuson—and the wives of all of them.

Robert Hassett, board chairman, is a railroad tinsmith. Other members who work for the railroad are two boilermakers, a locomotive engineer, a conductor, a shop employe and a pipefitter. They serve with a rural mail carrier and until recently with the local Methodist minister, Rev. Donn Downall, who has transferred out of the area.

AMA Plays Usual Role

The fight with the AMA follows the classic pattern of conflicts between the "doctors' lobby" of organized medicine and health cooperatives democratically operated for service, not profit, by the people who both own and patronize them.

It is a pattern that has ended in defeat for the medical monopoly wherever the challenge has been accepted—in Washington, D. C., where the court first ruled against the local AMA; in Seattle, Wash., and San Diego, Cal., where similar rulings were handed down, and in Elk City, Okla., where the AMA quit the fight on the eve of trial.

The legal staff of the Two Harbors group includes Thurman Arnold and Weston Hamilton of Washington. As U. S. Dept. of Justice officials, they won over the AMA in the Washington fight several years ago, and at Elk City more recently.

The medical society has been pretty cagey about what it has put in writing. But its leaders have been quoted as in

A Mayor Who Won't Be Bossed

The U. S. Steel Corp.'s Duluth, Missabi & Iron Range Railroad may dominate Two Harbors (the health center, with 35 employes, is the city's second largest employer), but it definitely does not dominate Mayor Cyrus Magnuson.

Magnuson, a former health center director and a leader in the campaign for a new hospital, makes his living teaching history at the big Lake County High School in Two Harbors. He is a former vice president of the AFL State Federation of Teachers and president of the Minnesota Coaches Association.

Like other teachers, he has done building maintenance for the railroad during the summer, work which sometimes kept him away from home for long stretches. Last summer he asked for a job that would keep him in the city, and got one guarding a crossing.

Seven days later he was fired. Pres. Paul Van Hoven of the IM&IR was quoted as saying "citizens" complained to him that it was "incompatible" for Magnuson to be working for both the railroad and the hospital.

So now he has an insurance business on the side.

Challenges AMA, Big Steel

PROGRESS of drive is chalked up by Robert Hassett.

It wasn't so particular when the hospital was under private ownership. Then the railroad deducted $1 a month from the wages of each employe and gave it to the doctor-owners. The employes had no freedom of choice except to go elsewhere; there were no other doctors in Two Harbors.

Since the hospital came under group ownership with a lay board of directors in 1944, when the retiring owner could not find a purchaser, the AMA has liked it less and less.

But membership is voluntary. Dues are checked off by the railroad for about 900 families, the remainder pay directly. And there are now five doctors in the health center, and two others in the city not connected with the co-op, and the people of Two Harbors have less "interference" and more choice of doctors than ever before.

And as for "dictation" to doctors by lay directors, which the AMA also professes to fear—

"They don't come down there and tell us how to practice medicine any more than we go down to the yards and tell them how to run a railroad," snorted Dr. Kosiak.

Co-op Hospital Is Okay For Uncle Sam—But Not AMA

TWO HARBORS is 27 miles northeast of Duluth, Minn., and has a smoke problem worthy of Pittsburgh in its worst days.

Brisk winds off Lake Superior send clouds of grit and fumes from ore docks and vessels, steam engines and the power plant swirling into the city. The creamy yellow paint on the health clinic building has been sadly begrimed in the two short years since it was put on.

But inside, all is bright and clean, though crowded. The building is three stories high, with a basement.

The top floor houses that part of the staff which "lives in." The basement contains laboratories, kitchen and staff dining room. The five doctors' offices and the administration office, with waiting rooms, are on the first floor, operating and delivery rooms on the second. The 33 beds, most of them in double rooms, are divided between first and second floors. The nursery, with eight bassinets, also is on the second floor.

A Preventive Practice

Medical operations are under the direction of Dr. William Kosiak, who went to Two Harbors in 1946. A graduate of the Univ. of Minnesota Medical School, he belonged to the Stearns-Benton County Medical Society when he practiced in St. Cloud, Minn., but has consistently been denied admission by the St. Louis County branch.

A slender, intense man with thinning hair who believes devoutly in a democratically-operated, prepaid health center that includes clinic and hospital—the most effective means, he claims, of practicing preventive medicine—he has gathered about him four young physicians who believe pretty much the way he does.

Dr. Moyer's wife and the health center's volunteer publicity director, the former Angela Honey, before her marriage was a CIO Newspaper Guild member in Worcester, Mass.

There are also eight registered nurses, six technicians and about 15 nurses' aides. Their services to the members are helped by more than $50,000 worth of the latest diagnostic and therapeutic equipment.

Membership costs $4 a month for an individual, $7.50 for two persons, and $9 for larger families. Staff doctors also can practice privately, turning over a portion of their fees to the health center in lieu of rent for office space and equipment.

The hospital facilities are open to nonmembers as well as to members, and are available for the use of non-staff physicians.

The hospital may not satisfy the American Medical Association, but it's good enough for the U. S. government. The U. S. Public Health Service has designated it for treatment of ailing seamen from the ships that carry the iron ore out of Two Harbors to the nation's steel mills down the lakes.

Health Plans Next Target

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

THE SIGNS are multiplying that organized doctors and big insurance companies are out to hamstring, if they can't destroy, the growing number of labor union health centers and union medical programs.

Their war cry is that they are protecting ethical standards, fighting only "the unauthorized practice of medicine," have only the good of their patients in mind, and that their major concern is better medicine for more people.

Actually, the medics are talking about pocketbooks—their own.

The American Medical Association itself is aware that its attacks on all plans to give the people a better break in health care have backfired. So it is keeping out of the limelight, letting state and county medical societies carry the ball.

Group Practice Hit

Such societies have attacked comprehensive group practice medical care plans, especially those operated by consumer groups. They have charged that group practice means the patient does not have "freedom of choice" in his physician. They have opposed employment of doctors on anything but a fee-for-service basis. They have opposed control of any plan by anyone other than doctors.

They have denounced the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York, which operates like union health centers. They have attacked the Two Harbors, Minn., plan, the Permanente plan in the San Francisco-Oakland and Los Angeles metropolitan areas, and the Springfield, Ill., clinic.

The California Medical Association has been busy for some time "helping the public understand." In a pamphlet, "Health Insurance Is Good Medicine," it plumps for insurance, but says any such plan "should emphasize free choice of doctors."

The pamphlet stresses that medical insurance should be for "serious illness or injury," and that you should pay your own "small" medical bills and thus save money on the insurance. This is the line taken by commercial insurance companies.

Nothing Of The Kind

The Lycoming Medical Society (Williamsport, Pa.) has a speakers' bureau and a speakers' handbook which defines compulsory health insurance as "a medical system featuring government regulation of both patients and doctors." It is, of course, nothing of the kind.

The CIO and AFL charge the AMA "would deny to organized labor and to the consumer the right to choose the type of medical insurance program which most nearly meets their needs." They said the medics' organization "is clearly motivated by a desire to protect the income of its member doctors without regard to the financial plight of the public."

The commercial insurance companies aired their views at a recent hearing by the House Commerce Committee presided over by Rep. Wolverton (R. N.J.).

They used it as a springboard for an attack on union health and welfare plans, and for beating the drum for "co-insurance" as the answer to the staggering problem of catastrophic illness.

Typical of the testimony was that of Vice Pres. Edmund Wittaker, of the Prudential Life Insurance Co. He said there is a tendency, particularly among unions, to promote plans under which many persons receive many minor benefits, "rather than insuring against the tremendous medical bills which occasionally ruin even the most prosperous families."

He claimed "co-insurance" is necessary because unless the patient has a stake in the bill, "the cost will skyrocket."

NEW INTENSITY of interest in workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation was shown by 475 delegates to Ohio CIO Council school. Council Pres. James P. Griffin urged political action (left), students asked questions, heard "profs" explain workings of laws.

CIO Compensation School Sees PAC As Path To Better Benefits

What does a fellow do when an arm is lost in the shop? What happens to a widow and her kids when the man of the house is killed on the job? Do you have to go to a company doctor? And if you quit your job are you entitled to unemployment compensation?

Questions like these, and many much more complex, got the attention of 475 Ohio CIO members who assembled recently in Columbus for the fourth statewide Workmen's Compensation - Unemployment Compensation School.

Sponsored by the Ohio CIO Council, the school was composed of two sections. The first, with 175 "students," was for beginners. The second group of about 300 delegates was made up of advanced students.

The "professors" were members of the council staff, lawyers, doctors and representatives of the Ohio Industrial Commission and the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation.

The beginners concerned themselves with the history and background of workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation, the filing of claims, problems associated with occupational diseases, preparation of cases, reopening of cases, and hearing room techniques. Legal discussions involved interpretation of the law, and there were question periods.

The advanced group concentrated on more complicated legal and medical situations, with mock hearings for demonstration purposes. Prominent physicans in the fields of orthopedic surgery and occupational diseases lectured on their specialities.

The instructors were smothered with searching questions, indicating an extraordinary interest in these fields.

JAMES GRIFFIN, president of the State CIO Council, at both sessions emphasized the need of political action to rectify existing gross inequities in workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation.

"Workmen's compensation in recent years, over the entire country, has suffered severe retrogression," he said.

"These recent years of prosperity have not kept pace with the early idealism which brought workmen's compensation into being.

"We must make it clear to employers and legislatures that it is time for a change; that injured and unemployed workers must be treated with humanity and dignity; that a sound, American standard of living must be maintained for those who are hurt and unemployed.

"These are profound objectives which should be on the agenda for immediate political action."

ONE OF THE highlights of the school was a discussion of occupational disease control led by Dr. Thomas F. Mancuso, chief of the Ohio Industrial Hygiene Div.

He called on unions to be more alert in the discovery and elimination of occupational diseases which are not now recognized, and suggested that detailed data be accumulated by locals on health complaints and occupational disease claims of members.

The school was set up by Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman and Assistant Sec.-Treas. John Rooney of the State CIO Council.

"This has been one of the most exciting and practical educational conferences we have had," Clayman declared.

"There seemed to be a new intensity of interest among our delegates. They showed a keen will to understand the law and its operation, and appreciation of the shortcomings of the law, and a desire to remedy them. The impact of this school can well mean millions of dollars to Ohio's injured and unemployed workers in the coming years."

CIO Tells Union Stake In Forestry Policies

A PLEA for management of America's forests "in such a manner as to meet all human requirements" was voiced to the 4th American Forest Congress in Washington on behalf of the CIO by Associate Research Dir. Nathan Goldfinger and other CIO representatives.

Goldfinger pointed out that CIO Woodworkers, Textile Workers, Paper Workers, Newspaper Guildsmen, Furniture Workers and Chemical Workers all have a direct stake in a continuing supply of lumber for direct use as well as for materials for paper, chemicals and synthetic textiles.

He charged that "the price of lumber has risen out of all proportion to other prices in recent years," and said the only way to solve the problem "is to expand the productivity of our forests sharply."

GOLDFINGER said "multiple-use forestry depends on direct federal regulation of the big interests in timber, on substantial technical and federal aid to small timberland owners, and on a broad extension of public timberland holdings."

Henry D. Paley, research director for the CIO Paperworkers, called for operation of commercial forests on a "long-rotation basis," which will produce good saw-timber, and at the same time selective thinning and utilization of wastes will produce materials for the paper and chemical industries. He said:

"We need some publicly-owned pilot-plant operations which will demonstrate the feasibility of an integrated wood industry all the way from the forest through lumber to pulp, paper, plastics and fuel alcohols."

DONALD MONTGOMERY, Washington representative for the CIO Auto Workers, told the group the standards used to determine how well privately-owned timber lands are managed "were seriously impaired under pressure from the big corporations."

"When pressures of this kind are being brought to bear on the gathering of federal government statistics, the situation is a bad one for research and education, and for forestry in America," Montgomery said.

Anthony W. Smith, secretary to the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, condemned a proposed re-examination of federal forest holdings on the grounds that "some people think the political climate is favorable to the dissolution of the National Forest System by transfer to the states and then to private interests, or by direct transfer to private ownership."

Wage Talks Resume In Plane Strike

NEGOTIATIONS between the CIO Auto Workers and the North American Aviation Co. were resumed last week as 33,000 members of three locals of the union stood firm in their strike for wage parity with other airplane plants.

First sessions of six union representatives, representing locals at Los Angeles and Fresno, Calif., and Columbus, O., and six management spokesmen bore no fruit. Additional meetings in Los Angeles were scheduled by Federal Counciliator John Fenton.

MEANTIME Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol of the California CIO Council promised a strong fight in the Legislature to win repeal of the law which permitted the company to secure an injunction limiting picketing at Los Angeles to one striker every 20 feet.

Los Angeles UAW-CIO Local 887 complied fully with the restraining order. It set up what it called the longest picket line in the world—a half-mile circle of 200 strikers 20 feet apart in front of the main office. All picketing, both before and after the injunction, has been peaceful.

The company makes Sabre Jet fighters. The union is asking a pay boost of 25c an hour to increase rates to the levels of those in auto plants with plane contracts, and other contract improvements.

5 Michigan Stations Add Nunn Newscast

CIO councils and locals in five additional cities in the upper half of Michigan's lower peninsula are now sponsoring weekly newscasts by Guy Nunn, CIO Auto Workers' radio and television director.

The program is heard Mondays from 9:15 to 9:30 p.m. over Stations WTCM, Traverse City; WATZ, Alpena; WMBN, Petofskey, and WATT, Cadillac, and from 12:45 to 1 p.m. over WATC, Gaylord.

Top Social Worker Gets The Political Boot From Oveta

JANE M. HOEY, one of the country's outstanding social workers, was fired last week as director of the Bureau of Public Assistance in the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

Her ouster was announced by Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby, who said it was to make room for "an Administration representative to the policy-making post." Mrs. Hobby made it clear that the firing was political and was not a reflection on "Miss Hoey's long record of service in both public and private work."

Miss Hoey, a registered Democrat, has never been active politically. She was named to the job in 1936 by the late Chairman John G. Winant of the Social Security Board, a Republican. She was offered a chance to resign and also another post in the department, but turned down both.

"I wanted to make the issue clear that my removal was for political reasons and not personal reasons," she declared. "There is nothing political about poverty."

HER POST was one of those removed from Civil Service and placed in a catch-all Schedule C in the Republican Administration's grab for jobs. The schedule is supposed to include only policy-making and confidential posts. Miss Hoey pointed out that her job was only policy-recommending, and that its policy is made by Congress.

The bureau supervises the federal-state program of aid to the needy aged, dependent children, the blind and the permanently disabled.

PAC Roll Call Gives The Score On Oil Lands

THE SECOND issue of Roll Call, published by CIO's Political Action Committee, records the vote of each senator and congressman during the first session of the 83rd Congress on the offshore oil give-away.

Roll Call details the whole story of offshore oil, estimating its value at "anywhere from $50 to $300 billion."

"If you agree that we should keep our nation's wealth for the benefit of all and that it should not be given to private individuals for private exploitation," says Roll Call, "join with your CIO-PAC to help elect Representatives and Senators who will protect your inheritance and that of your children."

Copies of Roll Call are available from CIO-PAC, 1346 Connecticut Ave., N. W., Washington 6, D. C., for $3 a hundred.

North Carolina CIO Forms New Council, Raps Benson

By ED LASHMAN

THE NORTH Carolina CIO CIO Council was born last week with a lusty yell of protest at falling farm prices while living costs for consumers are rising to all-time highs.

In a strongly-worded resolution supported by a number of speakers from the floor, the 300 delegates to the first constitutional convention of the Tar Heel Council recorded their belief that "higher incomes for family type farms mean better markets for the goods and services our members produce."

The resolution said Agriculture Sec. Benson's "flimsy alibi" that farm prices began to fall under the Democrats "is statistical trickery. Farm prices were at 100% of parity at election time last year. Parity ratio is now about 93%, or lower than at any time since 1941."

IN OTHER important actions, the delegates called for redistricting of the State Legislature, condemned a law passed in the last legislative session providing for secret sessions of appropriations committees, supported the proposed "no-raiding" agreement with the AFL, sought repeal of the state's anti-union shop bill, took a strong stand on civil rights and reaffirmed their support of TVA.

CIO Sec.-Treas James B. Carey outlined to the new council its area of responsibility in CIO affairs and, as president of the CIO Electrical Workers, reported on organizing campaigns in progress in North Carolina.

Jonathan Daniels, publisher of the Raleigh News & Observer, reminded the group that "our state has a liberal tradition of support for labor that reaches as far back as the Adamson Act of 1916 which established the eight-hour day and time and a half for overtime for railroad workers."

JACK KROLL, CIO-PAC director, pointed out that "almost every other eligible voter in North Carolina stayed away from the polls in the last presidential election." He said that as a result "a lot of bad characters got sent to Washington," and that they, and others like them, are "trying to steal the pennies you put into the Social Security reserve fund so they can balance the budget. Then they'll hit you with a sales tax to take care of the old folks."

The CIO Textile Workers were represented by three speakers. John Edelman, Washington representative said that "less than 125 consumer representatives are trying to save our natural resources and fight for the people, while nearly 1200 big business lobbyists are waging a well-heeled campaign for special interests."

John Chupka, TWUA secretary-treasurer, warned that "a low-wage South will mean an eventual end to the 'new South.'" He predicted the "collapse of the Eisenhower Administration," and said "the danger lies in the possibility that in collapsing, the Administration will lead us to an economic collapse as well."

Boyd Payton, TWUA Southern Organizing director, reported on progress of new organizing campaigns in the industry. He said, "we have seven active campaigns going, involving about 5000 people, 11 build-up campaigns involving 8000, and 14 'probing or survey' campaigns involving approximately 10,000 employes."

Other convention speakers were: R. J. Thomas, assistant to CIO's Exec. Vice Pres. John Riffe, C. A. McPeak, assistant director of councils, and Carey Haigler, assistant to Southern Dir. Lorne Nelles.

H. D. Lisk, TWUA, Charlotte, was elected president of CIO's 43rd state council, and Milton R. Schwichtenberg, IUE-CIO, Winston-Salem, was elected first vice-pres. Other vice-presidents are: Richard Hamme, UTSE; Frank Clay, UFWA; Carlee Drye, USA-CIO; Margaret Hopkins, TWUA; Sam Scott, US&APW; Jim Boyette, UAW; C. R. Royal, CWA; and Anna Mae Jolly, UPWA. The new board will elect a full-time executive secretary.

CIO Councils In Action

A VIGOROUS, reaffirmed policy against housing discrimination has been adopted by the Cook County (Chicago) CIO Council as result of anti-Negro race riots recently in Trumbull Park public housing project.

Chicago municipal officials, the Council charged, "have been derelict in their duties as public servants" in allowing pressure moves to bar Negroes from low-rent units.

"Immediate steps," CIO said, "should be taken to process all applicants regardless of race, color or creed in all projects based on their eligibility."

The Council called on city and state officials to "put into effect a program that will make clear the rights of all citizens to live where they choose and make certain they will have the proper protection if necessary" and warned that "the continuation or a repetition of the present situation not only will destroy our own community but will seriously harm the American reputation throughout the world."

● Michigan CIO Council reports a developing campaign for bi-partisan state election machinery in place of the present Republican-controlled apparatus. Latest proposal came from Neil Staebler, State Democrat Party chairman, suggesting a three-man State Board of Canvassers composed of the secretary of state and Republican and Democratic nominees.

● Failure of the Indiana General Assembly to boost unemployment insurance was rapped by Indiana CIO Council newsletter. Citing increases of $2 to $6 weekly voted by 15 legislatures in recent sessions, CIO warned "this failure by the Indiana General Assembly in the field of unemployment compensation takes on greater meaning with the reports of rising unemployment expected to reach alarming proportions next spring."

● A recent Salt Lake City meeting of the Utah Labor's Joint Legislative Committee, including CIO affiliates, heard William Lavelle, a legislative representative of the CIO Steelworkers. Scoring record of GOP 83rd Congress, Lavelle said "getting the facts on issues and candidates to the people is the only answer we have under a representative democracy."

● At Fairmont, W. Va., the Marion County CIO Council has joined and urged local unions to affiliate with a General Development Fund designed to (1.) seek new industries for Fairmont and (2.) to create jobs for many unemployed coal miners, now laid off by the thousands in West Virginia.

● On the television scene: The Minnesota CIO Council, St. Paul CIO Council and CIO Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson are preparing for a weekly, public service TV program in support of the state safety campaign . . . At Buffalo, N. Y., CIO Council Pres. James Miller is member of 25-man committee drafting plans for a local educational TV station . . . In Los Angeles, Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol of California CIO Council was named to advisory board of the Hancock Foundation's Channel 28 educational TV station, soon to go on the air.

Final total of contributions from Connecticut CIO unions to the Massachusetts CIO Council Tornado Disaster Relief Fund rose to $3504.36 with a $721 check sent by Sec.-Treas. John Driscoll to Massachusetts Council Pres. J. William Belanger. The contribution was in addition to more than $100,000 raised within the Bay State for the drive.

The Greater Cincinnati CIO Council received public recognition for its part in Old Newspaperboys Day to raise funds for the Hamilton Council for Retarded Children. Cincinnati CIO members, who represent 5% of the population, raised 12.5% of the funds for the children's organization in this year's annual sale of special editions of local papers.

In Columbus, O., staff members and office personnel of all the CIO union offices increased their giving in this year's United Appeals campaign by 39%, according to Reg. Dir. George DeNucci.

'Holy Land Of Runaway Shops' Decried By Carey

A PLEA for North Carolina to honor its great liberal tradition—a tradition dating back to 1775—was voiced by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey at the North Carolina CIO Council's founding convention.

Carey reminded the convention that the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence was adopted a full year before the declaration of the 13 colonies which proclaimed their independence.

"Those men in political office who have perverted this great liberal tradition and who have attempted to make of this State a stronghold of reaction, certainly do not have the best interests of the people in their hearts," Carey said.

HE ATTACKED those who want "to make North Carolina the Holy Land of the run-away shops" which he described as "the shops which seek to avoid union organization in an effort to enhance their owners' fabulous profits."

Such politicians, Carey said, want to make North Carolina "a haven for the employer who would return to the days of the sweat shop." He added:

"In Asheville, in Sanford, in many more places in this State, the run-away shops are now located. And the statistics of their wage rates tell the whole story of this effort to bar unions from North Carolina.

"THESE plants today are paying about 75c to 85c an hour in wages, that is anywhere from 35c to 65c an hour less than those plants were paying before they tried to run away from union organization," Carey said.

The CIO official promised that employers would not "get away with this nefarious scheme."

"We have followed them—and we will continue to follow them. And we will organize these run-away plants," he said. "And as soon as unionization is completed, the wage rates will go up to the levels where they should be. For North Carolina workers should be paid the same rates as workers everywhere.

"And you can bet your last dollar that my prediction is going to come true."

Civil rights issues figured largely in Carey's address during which he stressed that CIO, "which was founded on the proposition that all men shall enjoy freedom and equality, can tolerate no exception to that proposition." (See text excerpts, Page 4.)

UPWA Gains 5c Boost At Cudahy

Cudahy Packing Co. fell into line with the agreements previously signed between Swift and Armour and the CIO Packinghouse Workers. The new contract provides a general wage increase of 5c an hour and a fully-paid health insurance plan.

'End To Bias Would Really Boom The South'

A PREDICTION that "elimination of all discriminatory practices would result overnight in general economic prosperity for the South," was voiced by John W. Edelman.

The Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers told a South Carolina conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People "this would be the greatest single contribution that could be made towards the national defense."

Edelman told the group that, despite enormous economic gains made by the South in the past 20 years and despite amazing industrial expansion, "your rate of advance is constantly hampered by substandard earning power of practically the entire colored population and more than half of the white industrial workers."

Edelman said the present national income rate of $375 billion "can and must be raised" to $500 billion by 1960 and indicated this could only be done by raising per capita income.

"If the South will rid itself of its outworn inhibition in regard to racial discrimination, it is perfectly feasible to raise the income of all families below $4000 to that level within 10 years," he said.

"Public officials and business people in the South who are part of the open conspiracy to keep unions out and Negroes 'in their place' are losing literally billions of dollars in purchasing power."

Edelman charged that "farmers, businessmen and politicians in the South who attempt to create a political credo out of 18th Century plantation economics, in this atomic era are "merely making an economic straight jacket for the people on whose welfare their own future depends."

You And Your Money—

Climbing Price Index Is Still Another Depression Warning

FAILURE of the Eisenhower Administration to halt inflation may lead possibly to a depression, CIO Commentator John W. Vandercook warned in a recent ABC broadcast.

"The inflationary movement has not been stopped," he declared after citing the seventh successive monthly rise in the consumer price index. "The efforts of the Republicans to call a halt to rising prices, after 10 months in office, have failed.

"Few of those additional millions of dollars, which are in some sense circulated by higher living costs, are going to labor. None of them, certainly, are going to farmers. Higher prices, insofar as higher prices ever benefit anyone, are rather benefitting those Americans who own property, who distribute goods and sell 'services.'

"It's easy to exaggerate. To say that the rich are getting richer and the poor getting poorer would be a foolish over-simplification. But these honest figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics do honestly show that that is the tendency—a tendency, if it's allowed to drift, which all experience in every modern country has shown can lead, sometimes with surprising swiftness, to serious economic consequences.

"Bluntly—to depression.

"The first faint warning signals are at the top of the flagpole where they should be heeded. Personally, the only thing that has given me any feeling of uneasiness is this possibly typical statement by John McCaffrey, who is president of International Harvester.

"He predicts 'a general business decline of between 10% and 15%.' Then he says, 'I'm not alarmed at all about business. But there comes a time when we have to come down a little, then level off.'

"To talk of a decline in production, and of a falling off in business if Mr. McCaffrey will pardon my saying so, as if it were some natural and unrepealable law, like the movements of the planets, seems to a lot of people to be nonsense, and worst of all, unimaginative nonsense."

Atlanta Tops 'Em All

Atlanta tops all cities in price hikes since 1949, according to the latest consumer price index. Its index figure on Sept. 15 was 117.6%.

Surprisingly, of the 10 large cities surveyed, New York showed the least change with an index figure of 113.2. Second highest index was St. Louis with 117.1. Others, in order, were Detroit and San Francisco, 116.9 each; Chicago 116.6; Los Angeles 116.2; Cincinnati 115.3; Philadelphia 115.2.

'Women Voters Are More Important'

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

ESTHER MURRAY, National CIO-PAC representative, came "home" to Los Angeles recently to be greeted by a breakfast in her honor attended by CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhood and Democratic leaders.

Mrs. Murray, once a candidate for Congress in a Los Angeles district, was guest of honor at the gathering called by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council.

Mrs. Murray said that women were in the majority among the nation's citizens of voting age.

She pointed out that four-fifths of the vote which elected Pres. Eisenhower was cast by women voters.

Organized labor must pay increased attention to women voters in its political action programs, she said.

"It is a plain and simple matter of political statistics," she said. "There are 1.5 million more women in the United States over 21 than there are men. In Los Angeles, there are 80,000 more women."

MRS. MURRAY said that in her travels around the country, she had been impressed by the amount of Republican activity by women, and, she added, "I am sorry to say I have yet to find a group of Republican women who are pro-labor."

Later Mrs. Murray addressed delegates to the Los Angeles CIO Council, reporting on the Washington political situation.

Asking "whose interests are being protected in Washington since last January?", she told of cuts in the appropriations for Wage-Hour Law and agencies intended to protect consumers.

Women Workers Lag On Wages

More married women are working these days, the Women's Bureau of the Labor Dept. reported.

The report said that about 27% of all married women have jobs and that about half of the 19 million working women are married.

According to the bureau, working women average less than half the income of men. Only 5% earn $5000 or more in a year, compared with 12% of men. Of those who earn $2500 or less a year, 81% were women, the bureau said, and 37% men.

JOINT LABOR breakfast of CIO, AFL, and railroad brotherhood leaders honored Esther Murray, National CIO-PAC representative, on a recent visit to Los Angeles. Chatting with her are Mrs. Thelma Thomas, AFL Central Labor Union, and Albert T. Lunceford, Los Angeles CIO Council secretary-treasurer.

CIO Protests Limit Gas Rate Boost

THE CONNECTICUT CIO Council won a victory for electric power users when the State Public Utilities Commission agreed with its arguments and cut almost $1.5 million from a rate increase asked by the Connecticut Light & Power Co.

The company sought a rate boost that would have added $3.1 million to its income from power sales. The State CIO spokesmen held the amount was "way out of line," and the PUC agreed with them, closely following CIO's reasoning in reaching its decision.

Council Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff, commenting on the Commission's decision, said, "We are grateful that the CIO was a participant in proceedings which resulted in a saving of nearly a million and a half dollars to customers of Connecticut Light & Power Co.

"ALTHOUGH the Commission did not cut the company's request for increases in gas and water rates, we believe it may be possible in the near future for us to make a new and separate attack on the gas rates, at least."

Sviridoff gave credit to the Commission's special counsel, William R. Connole, for "conscientious representation of the public interest in the case."

The State CIO Council was represented at the PUC hearings by John R. Thompson, associate professor of law at Yale Univ., a specialist in utilities. Thompson presented facts and figures to back up CIO claims that the company was greatly exaggerating its need for a rate increase.

How to Buy

FEDERAL TAX RETURNS on 1953 income aren't due until Mar. 15, but already the tax experts are busy advising higher-income taxpayers on what they can do before the end of 1953 to minimize their tax payments. One of the chief bits of advice is to delay the receipt of income until the beginning of 1954, because next year income tax rates are scheduled to drop 10%.

It's tougher for a wage-earner to get into the game of tax avoidance, which has become a national pastime second only to baseball. (Not that there's anything new or illegal about it. One tax expert points out that back in the '30's the public was startled to learn that J. P. Morgan had paid no income tax for three years straight.)

A wage-earner is generally not able to postpone income until 1954. For one thing his family can't postpone eating that long. Your opportunities for reducing the amount of your taxable income in this year of higher rates lie chiefly in paying off before the end of the year certain tax-deductible expenditures, providing you make an itemized deduction instead of taking the standard 10% allowance for them.

How To Save On Taxes

Among tax-deductible items you may be able to pay off by the end of this year are:

Interest fees on cars, appliances, your house, other goods bought on installments, or cash loans. (But if you prepay interest, see that the lender or finance company rebates to you a proportionate amount of the interest fee.)

Property or use taxes you may owe, as on your house.

Meedical expenses. If you find your medical expenses so far are approaching 5% of this year's income, it may be wise to pay any bills owed before the end of the year, or undertake needed dental or medical work before then. Only that part of your medical expense in excess of 5% of your income is deductible. If this year's medical costs won't come to 5% of your income, then it may be wiser to postpone payments until the new year.

Under "medical" you can deduct for eyeglasses, arch supports and other appliances; medicines, including patent medicines whether or not prescribed by a doctor as long as a condition existed requiring them, like cold and cough preparations. You can also deduct premiums on accident and health insurance, including Blue Cross, private insurance and medical cooperatives.

Work Clothes, Tools: You may also be able to advance the purchase of work uniforms and tools. Only such work uniforms that are generally not wearable away from work are tax deductible. Ordinary dungarees are generally not deductible, although some tax offices seem more lenient than others about permitting a reasonable deduction. If your work clothes meet the test of deductibility, then any costs of upkeep and repair are also deductible.

Also deductible is any special safety clothing you may have to buy for your job, such as helmets, goggles, safety shoes, protective aprons, etc.

Depreciation Of Tools

You can also deduct for instruments, patterns, technical books, manuals and journals and similar supplies you may have to buy to earn your own living. On small tools or supplies that have a short useful life, deduct the entire cost at one time, but "depreciate" expensive tools: that is, take off a proportionate amount for each year of the tool's estimated usefulness. You can also deduct for repairs and other costs of keeping equipment in operating condition.

Following are typical depreciation rates of tools wage-earners frequently buy for work use, as taken from the Treasury Dept. Bulletin F. If because of hard use or other reason, you find tools depreciate faster than shown in this list, you can use a faster rate as long as it is reasonable and consistent (that is, you deduct the same rate each year).

	Estimated Life in Years	Yearly Depreciation
Hand Tools	4-5	25-20
Scientific Equipment	10	10
Machine shop:
Grinder	20	5
Lathe	25	4
Saws: Hand and Electric	3	33⅓
Welding outfits	10	10

If you use a car in your work, the typical depreciation rate is 33.3%. If you use the car partly for work and partly for personal transportation, you would depreciate a corresponding proportion of the car's value (as well as its expenses).

Memorial Mass For Murray

The first anniversary of the death of the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray was to be observed Nov. 9 with a mass in St. Patrick's Church, Washington, D. C., solemnized by the Rev. George G. Higgins, assistant director of the Dept. of Social Action of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

Murray, for 12 years president of the CIO, died in San Francisco on Nov. 9, 1952. Father Higgins last week was elected to the Board of Public Advisers of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation as successor to the late Most Rev. Francis Haas, Bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

MY TRIP to Dayton, O., last week, was a pleasant duty. We had the opportunity to sit down with the representatives of our international unions in that area to map out a concerted organizing drive. Later, at a meeting sponsored by the McHenry County CIO Council, several of the major problems that face the American workingman, his family and his neighbors' families were thrashed out.

The American people have come to the realization, hard as it is, that so far as the present Administration is concerned, the nation is actually leaderless. We have yet to see any signs of a realistic, liberal program to meet the problems that are pressing in on us. In these facts, there is a challenge to American labor, and I discussed this challenge with our brothers in Ohio.

We, of labor, have a program. We have the organization to bring this program before the people at large. We have the vigor and vitality of a militant trade union movement to keep our program moving forward. But what we must examine carefully is the coordination of our efforts, the tightening up of our organization, the establishment of the best possible means of cooperation between the groups within our union who must do the work in the field. Those groups are primarily the councils.

I believe I can speak for Pres. Reuther as well as myself when I say that the role of the council is broader than ever before in our history. The council is the grass roots of trade unionism. It's the home folks in action.

THE RECENT elections testify to the hard work and fruitful efforts our councils have within their reach. In New Jersey, a Democratic governor was elected for the first time in 10 years. A Democratic congressman was sent to the House from a staunch Republican district.

The political party labels mean very little. The big fact is that the winners represented a progressive and fair-minded program that would benefit the great mass of people in that State. Neither of the gentlemen involved is unaware of the tremendous value in the all-out support of the New Jersey State Council and of local CIO councils. Political observers agree that the educational effort of the CIO councils was a major factor in the success of both campaigns.

IN NEW YORK, the City CIO Council sought out a proper man for the job of mayor of the country's largest city and found him in Robert F. Wagner, Jr. The role of the City CIO Council was one of leadership in a confused and even discouraging political situation. The sweeping victory of Wagner is evidence of how wise the council was in its choice and its recognition of his program as one that was earnestly desired by the people.

Because our union does speak for the American industrial worker, our responsibility is heavy. Because we are a democratic organization, ever attentive to the desires and hopes of our membership, we are ready to meet that responsibility.

There is truly no cause to be discouraged. These are stirring days, calling for all that is best in us. In spite of those prophets of doom who were singing the "break-up" of CIO, we enter our 15th convention a harder, bigger, stronger organization than ever before.

We have in our hands a banner of economic justice that has given our democratic nation a greater depth of spiritual and material well-being than any other nation in the world. It is a standard about which all men of good will can gather.

Time Earns $20 Million, Stalls On Guild Contract

CIO NEWSPAPER Guildsmen in New York last week accused the management of Time, Inc., of "ignoring all the articles which have appeared in its own pages about proper employer-employe relations."

The charge came after Time, Inc., refused during two full months of bargaining to offer one single contract improvement despite what the ANG said was "the biggest year in its history."

"FROM the standpoint both of readership — which Time, Inc.'s Guild employes have a considerable function in building—and of profits, the operation in 1953 has been overwhelmingly successful," the New York Guild said.

The ANG unit estimated company profits for 1953 before taxes at $20 million compared to $17.4 million last year.

"Yet management wants to extend the old two-year contract which was subject to wage stabilization regulations while seven New York newspapers and Newsweek magazine have Guild contracts more realistic in today's economic situation," Guild sources said.

A major issue in the negotiations is a "suitable job security clause." The Guild proposed the clause now in force in the Newsweek contract, but Time management "refuses even to agree to the words 'job security,' and refuses to agree to the arbitration of any dispute involving a dismissed employe."

Time, Inc., which also publishes Life, Fortune and Architectural Forum, has not made any wage offer.

Kelley Joins CIO News Staff

Appointment of Eugene A. Kelley as an assistant editor of The CIO News was announced last week by Henry C. Fleisher, editor and CIO Publicity Dept. director.

Kelley is a former Lawrence, Mass., newspaperman and Lawrence Joint Board staff member of the CIO Textile Workers. He also had worked for the Mutual Security Administration.

Union Shop Gained In Shoe Pact

DAY BEFORE a strike deadline, the CIO Shoe Workers settled its major contract with International Shoe Co., winning the long-sought union shop and other contract improvements.

The new agreement, reached Oct. 31 at St. Louis, marked successful conclusion of joint bargaining efforts by USWA-CIO and the AFL Boot & Shoe Workers, which signed an identical agreement with the CIO union.

The CIO Shoe Workers represents some 11,000 International Shoe employes belonging to 34 locals in Missouri, Illinois, Arkansas and New Hampshire plants. The AFL represents workers in 18 plants.

ALONG WITH the union shop, the new two-year agreement provides for a one-way wage escalator clause. It provides for a 1% wage adjustment every time the U. S. consumer price index goes up 1%, with openings every six months for such increases.

The union shop—a major bargaining issue, for which the USWA had been prepared to strike—takes effect after a 90-day probationary period for each employe.

A non-contributory hospital plan—fully paid for by management, instead of by workers as in the past—also was negotiated. Along with a high schedule for medical care, the plan also provides benefits of $15 to $25 weekly for workers laid off during sickness or as result of accidents.

THE NEW contract also improves the vacation section, granting three weeks vacation after 15 years of service.

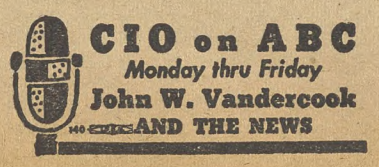
Negotiations were continuing in St. Louis with the Brown Shoe Co., where CIO and AFL unions each represents some 4000 workers.

McDonald And Big Steel Head Set Plant Tour

PRES. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers and Pres. Benjamin F. Fairless of the U. S. Steel Corp., will begin a long-projected joint tour of the company's facilities on Nov. 17 with visits to plants in the Cleveland-Lorain, O., area.

A week later, on Nov. 24, the two will start a tour of the firm's installations in the Pittsburgh area. Plans for visits to other production centers will be announced later.

The two leaders are taking the tour to promote a better union-management understanding at the plant level. The plan was agreed to by Fairless and the late Philip Murray, then president of both the CIO and the USA-CIO, after settlement of the long steel strike in 1952.



THANKS FOR THE HELP.—A classic Jerusalem Bible, illustrated by Dore, is presented to CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald (right) by Moshe Bitan, U. S. representative of Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation. USA-CIO has awarded a $5000 scholarship fund for immigrant boys at Histadrut vocational training schools, with Israeli group adding $5000.

CIO Applauded At Far West Farm Inquiry

By MILTON PLUMB

THE CIO drew heavy applause from farmers and cattlemen in response to its testimony before the House Agriculture Committee at hearings last week in Cheyenne, Wyo., and Pendleton, Ore.

Both hearings reflected sharp disagreement between cattlemen over proposed direct price supports on cattle.

At Cheyenne, tempers flared into the stormiest booing session the committee has yet encountered on its cross country circuit. Cattlemen favoring and opposing supports seemed about evenly divided.

In Oregon the hearings proceeded more quietly, but again opinions on the question of cattle price supports differed sharply.

Knight Testifies

CIO Vice Pres. O. A. Knight, who is president of the Oil Workers, led off for four CIO spokesmen at the Wyoming hearing which opened the current far western committee tour.

Others who appeared for the CIO at Cheyenne were Laroy Purdy, director, CIO Communications Workers Dist. 8; Franz Daniel, CIO regional director for Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Idaho and Montana; and Eugene Rosati, vice president of Denver Joint Council 102, CIO Packinghouse Workers.

At Pendleton, Chester C. Dusten, CIO assistant organizational director for Oregon, Washington and Idaho, appeared on behalf of both CIO and the CIO Woodworkers.

Cattlemen Split

The division between the big stockmen's organizations, which generally follow the American Farm Bureau Federation in opposing supports, and small, independent farmers, who generally cry out that such supports are needed, was more clearly pronounced at Pendleton than at Cheyenne, where even some of the big cattle growers sided with the little producers.

At both hearings, farmers expressed dissatisfaction over Sec. of Agriculture Benson's reorganization and cut-back in the department's soil conservation activities. As in the Midwest, Bensons's policies again came in for strong criticism.

As the committee gathered in Cheyenne the day before beginning its western hearings, both Cheyenne and Denver newspapers prominently featured a declaration of CIO farm policy by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

In a letter to Knight, Reuther declared:

"I wish you would take the occasion of your appearance before this committee to make clear that we in the CIO have never given consideration to the idea that we should organize farmers and that we do not intend to do so now or at any time in the future."

Reuther said that not only does labor not know the problems of the farmers well enough to presume to represent them. But "the compelling fact," he said, "is that the farmers must do the organizing job for themselves if they expect to do it well and derive real strength from it."

The CIO president said that while labor would like to see all farmers joined as members of bona fide farm organizations, farmers "owe it to themselves to unite for the promotion of their interests. And they owe it to the nation to unite for the promotion of their interests. And they owe it to the nation to unite for the advancement of the general welfare."

He pointed out that workers and farmers have many common problems, and added: "We shall move toward our common objectives far more effectively if we organize separately but work together."

Problems Of West

Knight in his statement dealt with agricultural problems of the West.

"The wage earners who make up our unions are greatly concerned with the welfare of farmers because we recognize that the economy as a whole cannot be sound if unstable economic conditions prevail in agriculture," he declared.

"In the long run, an ample supply of food and fiber is the greatest basic need of wage earners and all other citizens of the nation," he said.

Knight said that the present temporary excess of production over market demands for some agricultural products should be thought of as underconsumption rather than overproduction.

"While we recognize the necessity of production controls under some circumstances," the OWIU president said, "we believe that the fundamental philosophy of the nation should be to encourage as high a rate of agricultural production as is consistent with sound soil and conservation practices, and to encourage full consumption of this production."

Sound Conservation

Knight said that the CIO fully supports government programs for irrigation and soil conservation and favors particularly these projects which hold water on the acre on which it falls through the use of terraces, contour plowing, small retaining dams, etc.

Purdy called for a reversal of the trend toward retrenchment and elimination of rural electrification, soil conservation and lowcost public power which has developed under the Eisenhower Administration.

He also expressed CIO's concern over moves to "give-away" grazing lands, parts of the national forests and other segments of the public domain.

Unemployment Up

At Pendleton, Dusten pointed out that declining farm income within the last year "has had profound effect on the lumbering industry which represents a major portion of this region's annual income."

He said that woodworkers are being laid off in increasing numbers. Unemployment in Oregon in September was 50% higher and in Washington it was 2% higher than a year ago.

"Helping the farmer," Dusten said, "will do more to put the lumbering industry back on its feet and stabilize the economy than anything we can think of at this time."

Benson Ignores Protests, Junks Soil Conservation

THE CONTROVERSIAL Agriculture Dept. reorganization plan was ordered into effect by Sec. Benson last week despite mounting indignation and a growing wave of protests from the nation's dirt farmers and their friends, including the CIO.

Strongest objections to the plan are based on Benson's determination to junk the Soil conservation Service by closing its regional offices and shifting its functions to the state extension services.

This is what the Association of Land Grant Colleges, made up of the schools that run the Extension Service, and the big business-oriented American Farm Bureau Federation have been working toward for years.

THE RESULTS of this phase of the reorganization were described in a letter sent all CIO regional directors and industrial union councils, asking them to request members of Congress to oppose it, by Anthony W. Smith, executive director of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

"It will strip it (the SCS) of all its technicians in the national and regional offices, although soil conservation is technical and cannot be achieved without experts," Smith wrote.

"The reorganization will strip the SCS of its regional offices. It will make it impossible for the federal government to maintain any satisfactory policy relationships with state and area offices and with the soil conservation districts.

"Individual farmers, SCS districts and area and state offices will have to turn to the state land grant colleges and the Extension Service for such help as these agencies may be willing and able to give. These . . . do not have the staff or the finances required and no arrangements are being made to provide them.

"As a result of such a reorganization there will be no more integrated farm planning, taking all resources on the land into consideration, such as soil, woodlands, wildlife, crop production, and erosion and flood control."

SMITH POINTED out that the CIO has supported the SCS program for years. The nation has already lost one-third of its topsoil and one-fourth of its agricultural land through erosion, he said, and without good soil management, city workers must eventually pay higher prices for inferior food.

The reorganization also abolished the Production & Marketing Administration and the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

Quote

Under-Sec. of Agriculture True D. Morse gave soil conservation a cavalier dismissal in a speech at Memphis, Tenn., last month. "Soil conservation," he declared, "is out of date on our best managed farms, ranches and plantations."

Double-Talk By Commies Hit By CIO At Hearing

"DISHONEST double-talk" by Communist-line organizations at recent hearings of the House Agriculture Committee was strongly condemned by a CIO spokesman when the committee met in Cheyenne.

Franz Daniel, CIO regional director for five Rocky Mountain states, was heavily applauded when he told the committee that CIO's testimony had no connection with "other so-called labor unions" which have sought to use the hearings as a forum for the Communist party-line.

As an example, he quoted from a statement made at earlier hearings by the United Electrical Workers calling the cold and Korean wars "extremely injurious."

"CIO wants it clearly understood that this sort of dishonest and presumptuous double-talk by so-called labor organizations that are in fact transmission belts for the propaganda of Communist imperialism should not be confused with honest statements by bona fide free democratic American trade unions," he said.

"It is equally important that proved and tested farm programs essential to a full production, distribution, and consumption and employment economy should not be smeared in guilt-by-association because such organizations as the UE may have given lip service endorsement and support in order to insinuate and ingratiate themselves with American farmers and the American people."

Packinghouse Union Sets Drive Against Job Bias

A NEW drive to break down all remaining forms of discrimination in their plants by the end of 1954 came at the CIO Packinghouse Workers' first national anti-discrimination conference in Chicago.

The three-day conference brought together delegates elected by UPWA locals from coast to coast as well as a delegation from Puerto Rico.

Of special concern to the delegates was "Jim-Crow admitting practices" in hospitals. The union has recently won a company-paid hospitalization plan and it was pointed out that refusal of most hospitals to admit Negro patients will "rob thousands of UPWA members of the full benefits of the plan."

Declaring that "discriminatory practices can only weaken the unity of the workers," the delegates agreed that segregated locker rooms, cafeterias, drinking fountains and other plant facilities must be abolished. Job opportunities, the conferees said, must be opened wide to all comers, without regard to race, creed or color.

THE CONFERENCE heard a special report on discrimination against Mexican and other national groups and voted to pay increased attention to their problems. Another report by a special panel of the conference dealt with discrimination against women, citing pay differentials and closed job opportunities.

A report on the world-wide aspects of the fight for equal rights insisted that U. S. foreign aid programs should contain "safeguards to guarantee adequate wage levels and working conditions, and also provide the recognition of existing trade unions and the right to work."

Reuther Urges 'New Effort' For Peace, Crusade Against Poverty

THE CIO is at the strongest point in its history, both in respect to the size of our membership and our financial structure. Our unions are growing. Our economic gains, won through collective bargaining or on the picket line, are tangible and substantial. Our members are united in the cause of good unionism and good government.

CIO Hits GOP 'Malicious Attack' On HST

By AL ZACK

THE CIO Executive Board last week unanimously adopted a resolution condemning the "malicious attack" on former Pres. Truman by an Eisenhower Administration leader and Republicans in Congress.

Calling Truman "one of the greatest living Americans," the board—in a pre-convention session at Cleveland—said the attack was not on the former President alone.

"It is a dangerous and un-American attack on the fundamental principles of American government," the board charged.

Purpose of the "vicious and ill-conceived accusations," said the CIO leaders, was to "place in the public mind for partisan political purposes, the wholly false concept that Harry S. Truman of Independence, Mo., was 'soft on communism.' ".

Truman, the board said, "needs no defense from any American concerning his attitude toward communism at any time in his long span of years in public office."

CIO Strongest Ever

At a press conference, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said: "the CIO has never been stronger — financially or physically."

Reuther reported the CIO had gained 500,000 members during the last year and now exceeded its peak membership reached before the expulsion of 11 Communist-dominated unions resulting from the action of the 1949 CIO convention in Cleveland.

The CIO president reiterated the organization's opposition to any form of federal sales tax, "no matter what its guise." He called it a "regressive and unfair type of taxation."

"The American people," he said, "must pay for their freedom but the form of taxation must be based on ability to pay."

He said that sufficient funds to meet anticipated federal deficits "can be raised by continuing the excise tax and plugging the loop holes through which wealthy corporations and families escape paying a fair share of the burden."

Economic Trouble Feared

Reuther commented on trouble spots on the economic horizon, saying "we need aggressive and intelligent leadership, however, to isolate these trouble spots before they affect the general economy" and create a recession or depression.

Reporters asked whether he thought the Eisenhower Administration was providing such leadership.

"I do not," Reuther responded crisply.

The CIO board's vigorous condemnation of Republican attacks on Truman's patriotism was voiced a day before the former President was under subpena to testify before the House un-American Activities Committee in Washington.

A boiling political controversy has developed in the past week, since Atty.-Gen. Brownell leveled a broadside against HST in the case of the late Harry Dexter White. Brownell charged that Truman promoted White from a high Treasury Dept. post to the International Monetary Fund despite FBI reports naming

Donovan Of Steel Union Dies At 57

A VETERAN district director of the CIO Steelworkers, William F. Donovan, died last week at his home in a Cleveland suburb after several years' illness.

W. F. DONOVAN

Donovan, 57, was director of USA-CIO Dist. 28 with headquarters in Cleveland. Active in CIO, civic and community, he was former president of the Cleveland CIO Council and vice president of the Ohio CIO Council.

Funeral services on Nov. 12 were attended by a large number of CIO Steelworkers.

Named as acting district director was Frank N. Hoffman, the union's Washington legislative representative.

MESSAGES of condolence were sent to the family by Gov. Lausche, Sen. Burke (O.) and E. J. Magee, director of industrial relations for Republic Steel. Burke, until recently Cleveland's mayor, said of Donovan:

"I thought he was an outstanding labor leader. He fought the good fight for his men and his union while at the same time upholding respect for contracts."

Donovan is survived by his widow, five children and three grandchildren.

Donovan was chairman of the USA-CIO national negotiating committee with Republic Steel and director of Dist. 28 since 1939. He was a World War I veteran and during World War II served on government manpower agencies.

Factory Layoff Rate Doubles

The factory layoff rate in September was more than twice as high as a year earlier, the Bureau of Labor Statistics estimated.

The factory layoff rate in September was 15 per 1000 workers, and seven per 1000 a year earlier. The September rate was only slightly under the September postwar high of 18 per 1000 set in 1949.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

PRES. EISENHOWER had the decency to say flatly, when he was questioned, that it was inconceivable to him that former Pres. Truman deliberately appointed any American official knowing that man to be a "spy."

But that deliberate act, the conscious, malignant appointment of a Soviet "spy," is exactly what Eisenhower's attorney-general, Herbert Brownell, charged against Truman in a speech to a businessmen's audience in Chicago.

When Brownell exhumed the name of the dead man, Harry Dexter White, and talked about "the White House" having received "FBI reports" calling White a spy, he unmistakably insinuated that Harry S. Truman knowingly acted against the interests of our country and to advance the interests of Russia.

He said, by unmistakable implication, that Truman received an FBI report on White, that the FBI itself called White a spy, that Truman believed it and still, with malice aforethought, promoted White to the International Monetary Fund.

New Level of McCarthyism

This is McCarthyism on the cabinet level, the surrender of the so-called "modern-minded" wing of the Republican party, the Dewey East Coast wing, to the fanatical, reckless, vengeful Midwestern hard core.

Eisenhower didn't want to admit this. He refused to agree that reporters were correct in their "premises" about Brownell's purposes. But the premises were correct whether the President admitted it or not. And it is fundamentally Eisenhower's responsibility—not the subordinate cabinet official's.

The President opened a Pandora's box of evils when he allowed Brownell to try to stampede the nation politically by charges reflecting ignominiously on Truman's loyalty and integrity.

Now he lifts his eyebrows and denies seeing any of the demons that emerged.

The former President was served with a subpena as if he were a thief, a potential fugitive. And the recklessness of this is not removed by Eisenhower's mild admission that, just personally, he would not have done this.

Brownell, not being a fool but only an unscrupulous GOP lawyer-politician, knows that an FBI "report" on anyone is not a conviction of guilt.

He undoubtedly knew that a federal grand jury, receiving the testimony contained in the report and also hearing testimony from White himself, refused to indict him as a "spy." Yet a grand jury returns a true bill, an indictment, if as few as 12 of 23 members believe there is even a prima facie case.

Any FBI document reporting the self-confessed espionage of Elizabeth Bentley, or anyone else, is not conclusive proof that everyone "named" in 1945 was guilty of the acts and motives Miss Bentley herself admitted.

Recalling The Record

Truman is the former President who, when the Amerasia "espionage" case was breaking early in his 1945 regime, personally telephoned the FBI agent in charge and demanded full exposure and prosecution—regardless of what some State Dept. people thought might be adverse effects on our Russian relations.

This was while we were still at war with Japan and we wanted the Soviets to enter the war—and it was months before the FBI report from Elizabeth Bentley on Harry Dexter White.

Eisenhower and Brownell unleashed the demons. It is understandable that Truman's first reaction was stunned disbelief that he could be attacked in this manner by the five-star general he honored with the NATO command—to defend the West against Russia—and the general who, even in the heat of political campaigns, he always said he "liked" and "respected."

GOP Wins California House Vote

THE CONGRESSIONAL by-election box score wound up two to one in favor of the Democrats as Republicans took the California 24th Dist. race.

An unofficial tally gave Glenard P. Lipscomb, Nixon Republican and former state assemblyman, 42,880 votes to 34,545 for Democrat George L. Arnold. The Los Angeles district has sent a Republican to Congress in five of the last six elections.

A bare half of the 165,000 eligible voters turned out for a four-way election in which the Harry Dexter White case became a last-minute issue. Republican John Collier polled 3616 votes and Democrat Irving Markhein, who made only a token campaign, polled 1158.

ARNOLD said during the balloting that Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell's charge against former Pres. Truman in the Harry Dexter White case "was brought up to interfere with the election. Breaking it just before the election was obviously done for political purposes."

The GOP now has a four-seat margin in the House of Representatives, 219 against 215 Democrats and one Independent.

'Children's Lobby' For Schools Urged

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has called for a non-partisan "children's lobby" to seek greater federal aid for education.

"Our negligence as a free nation in meeting our responsibilities on the educational front," he told the Missouri State Teachers Association in St. Louis, "is robbing millions of American children of their rightful educational opportunities."

Michigan CIO Veteran Dies

Robert L. Poe, legislative representative in Lansing for the Michigan CIO Council and oldest council staff member in point of service, died recently of a cerebral hemorrhage.

Poe, 47, was one of the first members of CIO Auto Workers Local 596 in the Pontiac Fisher Body plant.

Report To The CIO Convention

Reuther Urges Crusade Against Poverty, War

A CALL for a crusade for peace and freedom, and for a war on poverty, disease and ignorance, was sounded by Pres. Walter P. Reuther in his report to the 15th CIO convention opening Nov. 16 in Cleveland.

Making his first report as CIO president, Reuther said the CIO "is at the strongest point in its history, both in respect to the size of our membership and our financial structure."

Hailing the armistice in Korea for marking the halt of aggression by dictators, he said "we are hopeful that the Korean truce may mark the first step in a new and successful effort at world peace—a peace that is hungrily sought by the hundreds of millions of human beings who inhabit this troubled world."

Reuther warned that to achieve success in negotiations for "an honorable peace without appeasement, we must negotiate from strength, with allies, rather than from weakness and isolation."

A Positive Approach

Such a peace, he said, would permit the human race to channel its great technical resources, its imagination and intelligence, to a war on poverty, disease and ignorance.

"This positive approach to basic economic and social problems, at home and abroad," Reuther said, "Is the guage by which we must measure the intentions and the intelligence of our national Administration in Washington in the year ahead.

"Such a war against poverty, such a crusade for freedom and a better life, will bring forth the constructive talents of all people, and will knock down the puny barricades which men of little faith and little hope have sought to erect against the inevitable tide of human progress."

On the domestic scene, Reuther said the steps which the CIO has taken to "increase its organizing capacity, to strengthen its administrative machinery, to improve its public relations program, and to coordinate in greater degree the activities of the various headquarters departments, are the more important because of the times in which we live."

"There can be no denial," he said, "of the fact that the Republican Party—brought back to power largely through the name and appealing personality of a great and respected military leader—has embarked the country on a reactionary political course which, if its direction is not soon turned, will provide tremendous difficulties for the people of America and for our country's leadership role among the free nations of the world."

Judge Ike By His Record

Reuther recalled that when Pres. Eisenhower was inaugurated, "we in the CIO made clear that we would lend our full and wholehearted support to Pres. Eisenhower and his Administration when we felt that they were right, and that we would, of course, criticize when we felt they were wrong."

"We will judge them not by a narrow standard of performance directly affecting the CIO, but by the record of activities as it relates to the people as a whole," he explained.

"We have consciously avoided resorting to criticism for criticism's sake, or presenting an obstructionist viewpoint on each and every issue that has arisen in Washington."

Reuther cited a number of affirmative actions which the President has taken which brought approval and support from CIO. Included in this group were his rededication of America to a policy of international cooperation; his cooperation with the West German democratic government in establishing food depots for the exploited people of East Germany; his statement at Dartmouth College against book burning—"a statement unfortunately modified in later remarks."

On the other hand, Reuther pointed out that CIO's criticism of the President has ranged over a number of issues stemming from the "extremist right wing of the Republican Party." This group he labelled one that "has little sympathy for international cooperation, civil liberties, government activity to promote continued full employment and government support of civil rights measures.

"But we, in all frankness and good conscience, must recognize that the President's opposition to this hard core of Republican Party reaction has often been vacillating and without the strength which the President's popularity in the 1953 election gave to him," he added.

Describing the 83rd Congress as one that "bids fair to out-do in destructive selfishness and narrow-mindedness even the 80th Congress, the last previous one controlled by the Republicans," Reuther warned of major drives to undermine "much that remains" of the New Deal and the Fair Deal. Among them:

- The National Association of Manufacturers is working tirelessly to foist upon the people an economically disastrous national sales tax in the guise of a manufacturers' excise tax.
- The Chamber of Commerce is working steadily to undermine the social security system by a so-called "pay-as-you-go" system that would bring benefits down and endanger our entire social security fiscal structure.
- The American Medical Association is now turning its guns on the hospital services of the Veterans Administration and the U. S. Public Health Service.
- The National Association of Electric Companies and its allied pressure groups are working to strip down such tremendously successful pioneering experiments as the TVA.
- Great financial interests which control factory-farms and ranches are agitating for turning over the great grazing reservations of the West, tremendous forest preserves and sizable portions of our national parks to special interests for private exploitation.

CIO president calls for war against poverty, crusade for better life.

Reckless Drivers

Debunking Pres. Eisenhower's description of his Administration as a "middle-of-the-road" one, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said most of the men and women directing the Administration's policies would have difficulty in recognizing the middle of the road.

"They are, instead, driving their Cadillacs down the right-hand sidewalk—and the poor pedestrians are forced to scatter for safety," he said.

'Reactionary' Political Course Of GOP Rapped

T-H Still Unchanged

He pointed out that the Taft-Hartley Act "stands unchanged despite Republican campaign promises to bring fairness and justice" into the law.

The "big business" character of the Administration came in for attack as he recalled Defense Sec. Wilson's "unforgettable phrase that the interests of the American government should, in effect, be tailored to the interests of General Motors."

Reuther noted that in every department of the government, representatives of the business community have moved in and representatives of labor, the small farmers, the small businessmen have been kicked out.

He said it is hard to believe, in the light of many statements of Treasury Dept. officials and the comments of well-informed business writers, that certain sections of the Administration have not been deliberately seeking a "controlled recession." Such a recession, Reuther warned, would squeeze out great numbers of smaller businesses from the competitive markets and further enhance the profit position of the great corporations.

Political Action Call

In the face of all these facts as well as the "dangerous acceleration of the drive against traditional American liberties," and the failure of Republican campaign promises on civil rights to materialize, he said increased political action is needed.

"We must endeavor quickly and effectively to strengthen the role of the CIO Political Action Committee," he said. "The CIO-PAC has rolled up a noteworthy record of performance in many states, cities and congressional districts; it has deserved the support which it has received from the CIO, our affiliated unions and our members and their families."

Noting that the 1954 elections will be of "obvious and crucial importance," he said CIO will continue its non-partisan policy of supporting liberals and opposing reactionaries in either of the major parties.

Organic Unity

On the subject of organic unity in the American labor movement, Reuther said, "the CIO's position is clear and I fully support this position."

"We want unity," he said. "We seek honorable organic unity based firmly on the principles of free democratic unionism. We will do everything in our power to achieve this goal. We will continue our discussions with the AFL. We are convinced that AFL Pres. Meany and his associates are negotiating in good faith. Our attitude is the same.

"In these negotiations we will not sacrifice any of the basic principles for which the CIO stands, and which are essential to the building of a strong, democratic and socially responsible labor movement."

The CIO Convention

Twin problems at home and abroad—of shoring up the nation's economy, building for full employment in a world of peace and decency—will provide important issues for the several hundred CIO unionists meeting in CIO's 15th Constitutional Convention in Cleveland this week.

Their importance was evident throughout the first report of Walter P. Reuther as CIO president.

In the year since the death of Philip Murray and Reuther's election at Atlantic City—and the death a few weeks later of Allan S. Haywood—the CIO has demonstrated, in Reuther's words, that "we are living up to that heritage left us by Philip Murray."

The calamity howlers have been wrong—as many times before. The CIO, as Reuther noted, "is at the strongest point in its history."

It is good for American labor and good for the nation that that is so, for there are tough problems of leadership facing CIO to answer the needs of the nation's workingmen and women.

On the economic scene, the clouds are darkening—the old pattern of big-scale layoffs and unemployment is returning amid rising prices and rising profits.

On the political scene, the Eisenhower Administration (which CIO has supported when it was right, opposed when it was wrong) is coming increasingly under "domination by the extremist wing of the Republican party."

On the world scene, as Reuther suggested, the halting of Communist military aggression and the Korean truce is an opportunity for "a new and successful effort at world peace—a peace that is hungrily sought by the millions of human beings who inhabit this troubled world."

What Reuther proposed is a world-wide war against poverty, a crusade for freedom and a better life. And, he added, "this positive approach to basic economic problems, at home and abroad, is the gauge by which we must measure the intentions and the intelligence of our national Administration in Washington in the year ahead."

Memo To The Justice Dept.

"Fear of communism is being manipulated by a few to create hysteria. Fear is a great silencer. Too many people are being quiet for fear of being called Communists. When people are afraid to speak or explore new ideas, then freedom is really in danger."—Former Pres. Truman, addressing the American Jewish Congress in New York City.

The Local Elections

There's an encouraging picture in the recent local elections of increased participation by trade unionists as good citizens in campaigns for city offices.

Along with the noteworthy victories for liberal forces in the New Jersey gubernatorial and congressional races and in the New York City mayoralty, there were a number of cities in which trade unionists from CIO and AFL were elected to local offices.

Such was the case in Cincinnati, Ottumwa, Io., Pueblo, Colo., Niagara Falls, N. Y., Bristol, Pa., and Lima and Lorain, O.

This pattern of local election results is another demonstration of "Citizen CIO" at work for the good of his community. The trade unionists who won did so because they had earned the confidence of their fellow citizens, because of their interest in good government. As CIO members, their responsibility in public office is that much the greater.

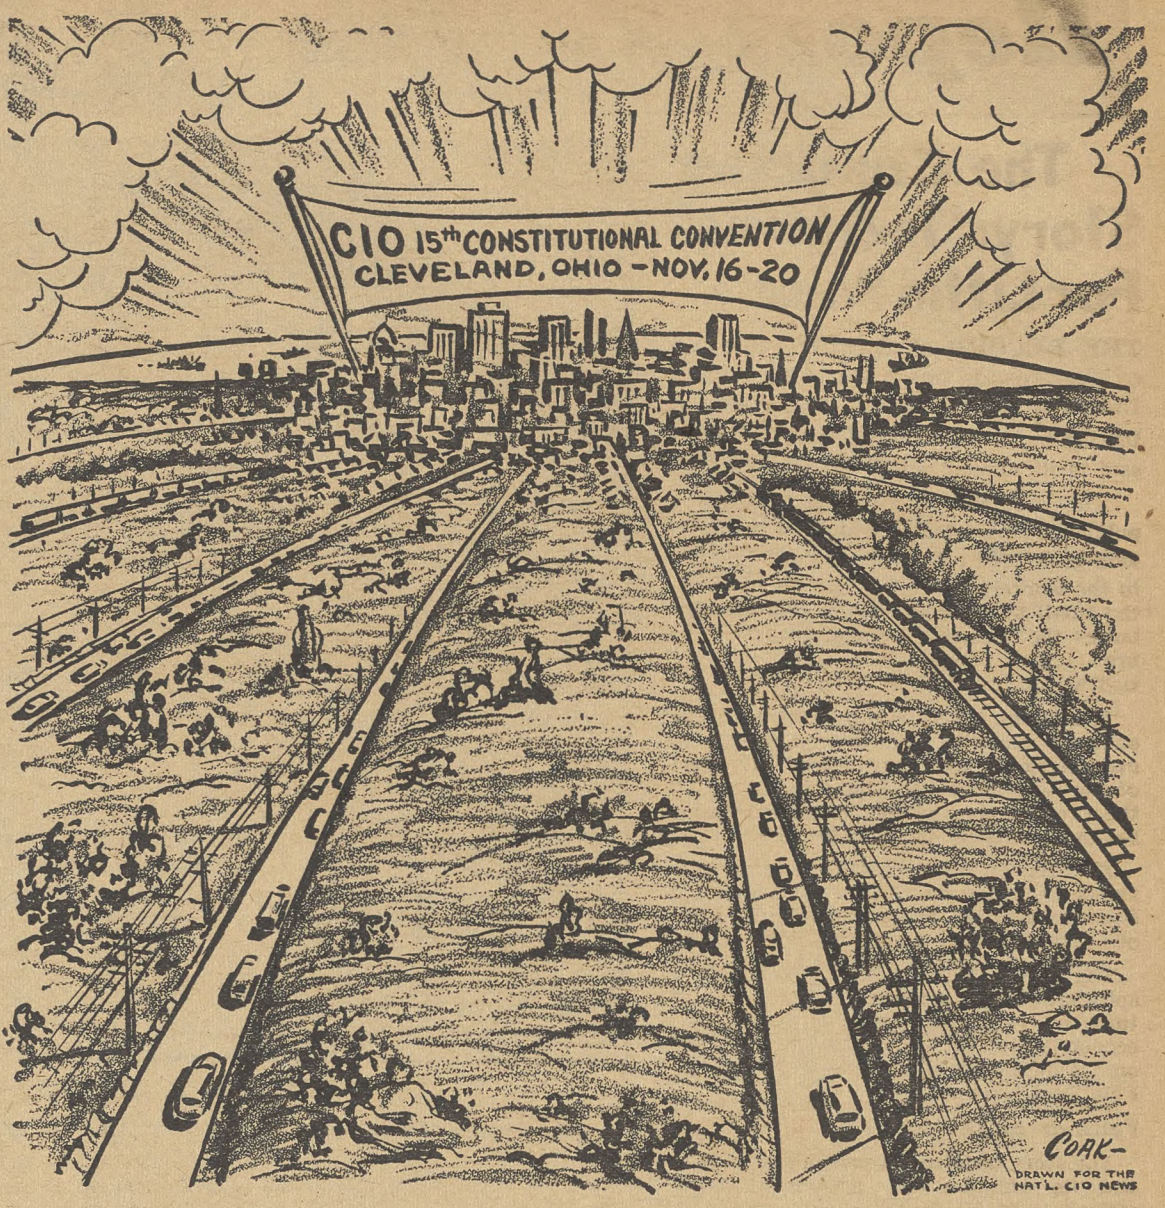
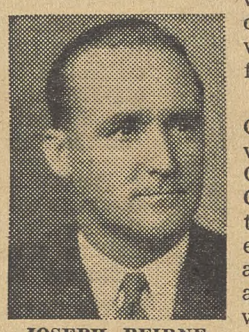
All Roads Lead To Cleveland



'Citizen CIO' Sets New Activities

THREE NEW activities were developed during the past year by the CIO Community Services Committee in cooperation with local CIO councils, local unions, and public and voluntary health and welfare agencies.



JOSEPH BEIRNE

Chief among these was a CIO program for retired workers and their families. Other new fields for CIO-CSC are securing representation for CIO and consumers on Blue Cross boards and executive committees, and multiple screening for workers in industrial plants.

The committee expects to receive technical guidance in the development of these "Citizen CIO" programs from its newly established advisory group composed of 20 distinguished leaders in the field of health, welfare and community organizations.

Notable examples of CIO-CSC work were furnished when disaster struck at Flint, Mich., and Worcester, Mass. As a result of its experience with these disasters and others, the committee plans to institute several regional training sessions on disaster relief for its full-time representatives and for officers of local and state community services committees.

CIO-CSC reported that strike assistance continued to be one of its major programs. The committee's staff helped organize such programs for the CIO Auto, Electrical, Communications, Transport, Brewery and other unions.

A strike relief workshop was held during the year in Washington, attended by representatives of 16 CIO affiliates. The two-day discussions with public and voluntary agency members developed improved techniques.

The committee's program of "giving once for all" has helped to establish a number of united funds throughout the country that promote federated fund-raising and community-wide budgeting on the basis of relative need. This system has eliminated a great deal of waste and duplication in fund raising. CIO-CSC now has 15,000 men and women serving on the boards and committees of community agencies.

The committee expressed pride in the growing corps of trained union counsellors. There are now more than 18,000 counsellors in 90 communities.

The committee: Joseph A. Beirne, chairman; John Brophy, treasurer; Ted F. Silvey, secretary; Leo Perlis, national director; Irving Abramson, Harry Boyer, Joseph W. Childs, John J. Grogan, William J. Hart, Al Hartnett, Bessie Hillman, Louis Hollander, Emil Mazey, Thomas Rusch, August Scholle, Sol Stetin and M. Hedley Stone.

New Foundation Honors Murray

THE ESTABLISHMENT and work of the Philip Murray Foundation were reviewed by the foundation trustees in a report to the CIO convention.

EMIL RIEVE

Within a few months after the CIO Executive Board last Nov. 29 authorized the establishment of the foundation, the $1 million established as the foundation's goal had been received in cash or commitments. The contributions came from the National CIO, affiliated CIO unions and their members, other CIO affiliates and individual contributions.

The most recent activity of the foundation was the dedication of hometown memorial plaques to Murray and the late Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president. The plaques were placed in the Miners Welfare House, Blantyre, Scotland, and the Yorkshire Miners Association, Barnsley, Yorkshire, England.

The first gift of the foundation was the contribution of $15,000 to equip the Philip Murray Room at the new headquarters of the American Association for the United Nations in New York City. The foundation is considering other projects.

A public advisory board, including former Pres. Truman and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has been named.

The foundation's officers: Emil Rieve, chairman; James B. Carey, sec.-treas.; Arthur J. Goldberg, director. Trustees: Walter P. Reuther, John V. Riffe, Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, O. A. Knight, David J. McDonald, Jacob S. Potofsky, Michael J. Quill, Frank Rosenblum and James G. Thimmes.

Report To The CIO Convention

The Congress Story: 'Too Little For Little People'

THE RECORD of the first session of Congress is one of "too little for the little people and too much for the big boys," the CIO Legislative Dept. said in its annual report.

"The Administration's supporters and publicists have tried to make that record look good," the report pointed out. "But to the worker, the consumer, the farmer, the small businessman—to the people at large—the record is one of dismal failure. It is a record which hurts our nation as much abroad as it does at home.

"The story is one of no progress, and of much reaction. The record is, however, being written slowly, and the efforts of the Republican Old Guard to wipe out the progress of the last 20 years thus far only partially have born fruit."

The report noted that in many instances reaction was defeated or slowed down by fighting liberals in both houses of Congress.

The good remaining in the record despite efforts of congressional leaders "to turn the clock back" so far as social and economic matters are concerned, it went on, "is merely a continuation of New and Fair Deal programs."

Tycoons At The Helm

The story of issues concerning the CIO and its affiliates the department described as "not a pretty one."

"It is one that reflects the policies of a big business-dominated Administration," it added. "But such policies do not reflect the wishes of the American people . . . There is no evidence that the people intended to vote for reaction when they named Dwight Eisenhower President."

The report reiterated CIO support of Eisenhower when he is right, and expressed the hope that "in the years to come he will be right more often than in the past session."

The report is divided into six major sections. These deal with labor, national security, economic affairs, "give-aways and take-aways," social legislation and civil liberties.

The section on labor looked with grave concern at the Administration's dismal failure to carry out the President's campaign pledges to revise the Taft-Hartley Act and to strengthen the Dept. of Labor.

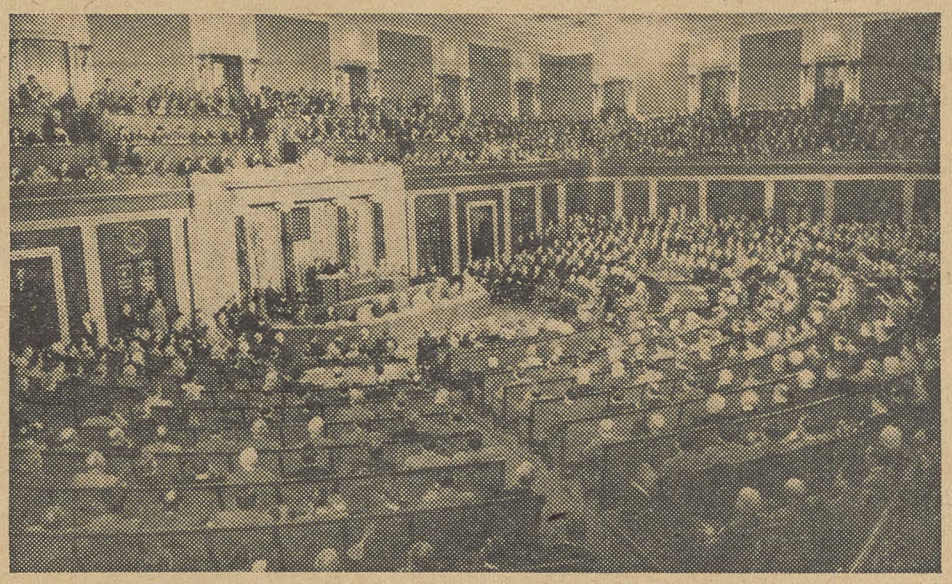
What Was Missing

It recalled that the President, while still a candidate, promised "justice and fairness" in the country's basic labor law. It recounted also that Senate and House Labor Committees held lengthy hearings at which CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg summed up National CIO views and 17 spokesmen for affiliates also testified. Then it continued:

"Throughout all these hearings, however, one thing was conspicuously missing. No Administration spokesman was present. In spite of the President's clear words on T-H, his Administration was not prepared to offer legislative proposals."

The report also cited the President's change of position. While he had said in his State of the Union message that "experience has shown the need" for corrections, a few months later, in a message to the AFL convention, he declared T-H is a "substantial contribution" to sound labor-management relations.

In discussing the Labor Dept., the report described this smallest of all government departments as "now truly a skeleton in the Eisenhower Administration's closet" as a result of "savage" budget cuts "in line with underlying bias of this Congress against labor."



Pres. Eisenhower addresses first joint session of the 83rd Congress back in February—a Congress which fell far short of meeting the people's needs.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther pointed out the human implications in these slashes in a letter to Chairman Bridges (R. N. H.) of the Senate Appropriations Committee. The appropriation amounts to four-hundredths of 1% of the national budget.

The Give-Away Record

The Administration's "give-aways and take-aways," the report noted, started with the first bill that became law during the last session, the act giving $50 to $300 billion worth of submerged oil and gas lands to the states.

The CIO vigorously joined in the public protest that grew out of the five-week fight of Senate liberals to explain to the people the size of the "steal," the report recalled. Its role was one of the factors that forced the GOP to cut the size of the give-away and to pass a second bill safeguarding the public interest in the outer continental shelf, which contains about 80% of the offshore oil resources.

The first step in a fight to turn TVA into purely an electric power generating operation was beaten back with restoration of a $2.5 million budget cut in funds for reforestation, soil conservation, etc. The significance, the report said, is that "Congress recognized, even if grudgingly, the fundamental principle of integrated multi-purpose river valley development."

Other raids, against which the CIO has joined, include the so-called Stockmen's Bill, which would in effect turn over western grazing lands to private interests and set a precedent for giving national forests to lumber interests; the Hope Bill, ostensibly to regulate mining claims but actually a threat to diminishing timber reserves; and the attempt of the Interior Dept. to give the Hells Canyon dam site to the Idaho Power Co. for private and incomplete development.

The report gravely questioned the wisdom of congressional actions on national security. The foreign aid appropriation was cut by nearly $1 billion under what the Administration had asked.

The CIO urged a proper balance between military, economic and social needs of the program, the report said, but the final bill "emphasized the negative philosophy of 'more guns and less butter'."

Economic aid funds appropriated amounted to about one-third of military assistance; Point Four funds fall far short of the need; money for our obligations to international organizations and their agencies, such as the United Nations, was cut drastically, and the small sum allotted for the movement of migrants was hacked, the report said.

Leadership Not Cheap

"A successful American foreign policy cannot be bought cheaply," it continued. "The price of American leadership in the world cannot be reduced by false economy drives.

"What seems 'economical' now may cost us dearly in the potential weakening and division of the free world. Soviet imperialism will be encouraged to increase its pressures, foment new aggressions and weaken our defenses."

Pennypinching with the armed services, especially the cut in Air Force funds, the report said, seems to reflect the Administration's "strange notion that good bookkeeping practice is a better defense . . . than a well-equipped, efficiently-manned defense establishment." Air Force cuts will mean a serious gap in plane production a few years hence, it warned.

In reviewing economic affairs, the report pointed out that the abolition of price, wage and rent controls was accompanied by imposition of another type of control—the tight money policy of the Treasury Dept. and the Federal Reserve Board.

"Repeatedly," it said, "the CIO Economic Policy Committee has condemned the high interest rates and the restricted credit which this banker-biased policy has forced upon the country, and which is now fortifying recessionary tendencies in our economy."

Block Sales Tax

The extension of the excess profits tax for six months, "done for political reasons," expires at the end of the year, the report said, and will be accompanied by an automatic 11% cut in income taxes. This means the government must find $5 to $8 billion in new revenue unless it wants to add to the deficit.

"In casting around for alternative sources," the report said, "it appears that if the Republicans are going to raise any additional taxes in 1954, they will recommend and attempt to get enacted a sales tax, either a manufacturing excise tax or a retail sales tax or some other type of tax upon consumption.

"The big problems, therefore, will be to (1) prevent the enactment of a sales tax under whatever guise it may be proposed; (2) prevent further tax concessions to corporations and wealthy individuals; and (3) get a tax structure which will distribute the burden of taxes more equitably than now."

The plight of the farmer was dealt with in some detail, especially congressional hamstringing of plans to investigate the widening spread between what producers receive for foodstuffs and the consumer pays. The GOP economy drive, the report said, has served as a pretext for cutting down vital services for farmers.

The discussion of social legislation dealt in part with proposals for additional enactments in social security laws. The Administration program was criticized as inadequate.

Health Program Cut

The nation's already inadequate health program suffered further at the hands of Congress, the report said, with cuts in funds for administration of the Pure Food & Drug Act, the Public Health Service, National Institute of Health, and for federal aid in hospital construction. These and similar hackings, it added, wiped out much of the good inherent in creation of the new Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

On civil liberties, the Eisenhower Administration was taken to task in the report for "showing a singular lack of courage and moral fervor" in dealing with assaults on the rights of American citizens by such congressional investigators as Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.) and Rep. Velde (R. Ill.).

The "wrong way" of dealing with Communists, the report went on, is "frighteningly illustrated" by the tactics of these three and their followers, who "seem unable to distinguish between Communist conspiracy and honest dissenters from the status quo."

The McCarran-Walter Immigration Act remains unchanged despite Eisenhower's campaign promises for a "better law," the report showed. There now seems to be an "understanding," it said, that no action will be taken to amend it until the Refugee Act passed in the last session, providing a haven for 240,000 refugees in this country, expires Dec. 31, 1956.

What Congress Did And Failed To Do

The behavior of the 83rd Congress during the first session was divided into three main categories in the report of the CIO Legislative Dept.:

1. Congress did continue a number of pre-Eisenhower programs which are in the public interest—measures which could not have been adopted without the votes of the minority party. Examples are the inadequate six-month extension of the excess profits tax, extension of reciprocal trade, mutual security appropriations (although the level is inadequate), aid to defense area schools, admission of refugees, and wheat for Pakistan.

2. It made the first installments on the give-away, take-away program of the Administration. Among them were the tidelands oil grab; the withholding of needed funds for Bonneville, Southwestern, Southeastern, TVA and other power programs; the creation of a mislabeled "Small Business" Administration to replace the RFC and the Small Defense Plants Administration; destruction of public housing programs; inadequate funds for administration of labor, health, and similar programs.

3. It failed to act at all in connection with the issues so very vital to the well-being of the working man and woman and of the people in general. Chief among these are the long overdue changes in the Taft-Hartley Law, liberalization and extension of social security, increase of the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour, civil rights legislation, and changes in the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act.

Report To The CIO Con

Our Economy: Full Employment Is Major Task

FULL EMPLOYMENT and avoidance of a depression are more important than balancing the budget, CIO Pres. Walter P. Ruther declared in his annual report to the CIO convention.

For, he warned, "anything less than continued economic growth and progress in America can seriously affect ourselves and the entire free world."

"The maintenance of full employment," he said, "including the creation of jobs for hundreds of thousands of new entrants to the labor force each year, as well as taking full advantage of the gains in productivity, can add billions of new wealth each year.

"It is this kind of 'economy' that must be measured against a possible deficit of a few billion dollars in a particular year when government spending must exceed its receipts to make up possible gaps in private spending.

A Growing Economy

"In such years, much of government spending can be looked upon as a public investment for the economic well-being of the people. The returns come, in part, in the form of the fruits of full employment.

"The growth and health of the economy, not slavish devotion to slogans about budget balancing, must be the guidepost for government fiscal policy."

The forces that prompted the great growth in the American economy during the period drawing to a close show signs of spending themselves, Reuther conceded. But instead of accepting the inevitability of the depression, he went on, we should use these omens "to seek out and encourage new sources of strength" to halt the apparent slackening in production.

Policies Condemned

"Contributing notably to these forces threatening the continued progress of the economy," he said, "have been some of the ill-conceived policies of the new Administration.

"There appears to be a dangerous revival in Washington of the 'trickle-down' economics of the 1920s—the idea that what is good for business will insure prosperity for the nation. Once and for all, all groups of the population must realize that a healthy expanding peacetime prosperity can, in the long run, only be based on an ever broader consumption level."

The key to an expanding economy in the period ahead, with government expenditures dropping because of the slackening in defense spending, is the strengthening of private consumption, Reuther said. There is "virtually unanimous agreement" among economists on this, he said.

Any new tax program should be designed with this end in view, he went on, and particularly should have no form of sales tax, which in any guise would operate to reduce consumption by cutting purchasing power.

He recounted the many things Americans would buy if they had the money—all the items that go to improve the standard of living at all levels, such as medical care and hospitals, better schools, more houses, and asked:

"Can anyone seriously believe that we have reached a point in economic development which permits us to turn down or even to stagnate at the present production levels?

". . . In the light of these stark facts of need, the idea that our economy has reached a saturation point, a point where consumption needs are drying up, is preposterous."

More Buying Power

Reuther recalled that the three main avenues for consumption of the national production are personal consumption, private investment and government spending. As defense expenditures went up, the proportion of the total output absorbed by the government increased; now it is falling. Private expenditures on plant, equipment, etc., are slackening off also.

So the purchasing power in the hands of the man in the street must be increased if the economy is to grow and there are to be jobs for all, he declared.

"Substantial increases in consumer buying power—particularly of low and middle income families who spend all or almost all of their incomes—must occur if the required rapid rises in consumer spending are to take place," he said.

"Rapid increases in the buying power of wages and salaries are one of the essential requirements for the sale of the economy's growing output of civilian goods and services. Wage increases must go beyond current productivity increases to make up for past lags, and to help support full employment and production in the future."

The economy can afford wage increases without price boosts, he explained, because "the real volume of output has increased much faster than the rise in employment, and despite the decline in length of the work week." Another major factor, he added, is the "steady increase in the national economy's output per manhour."

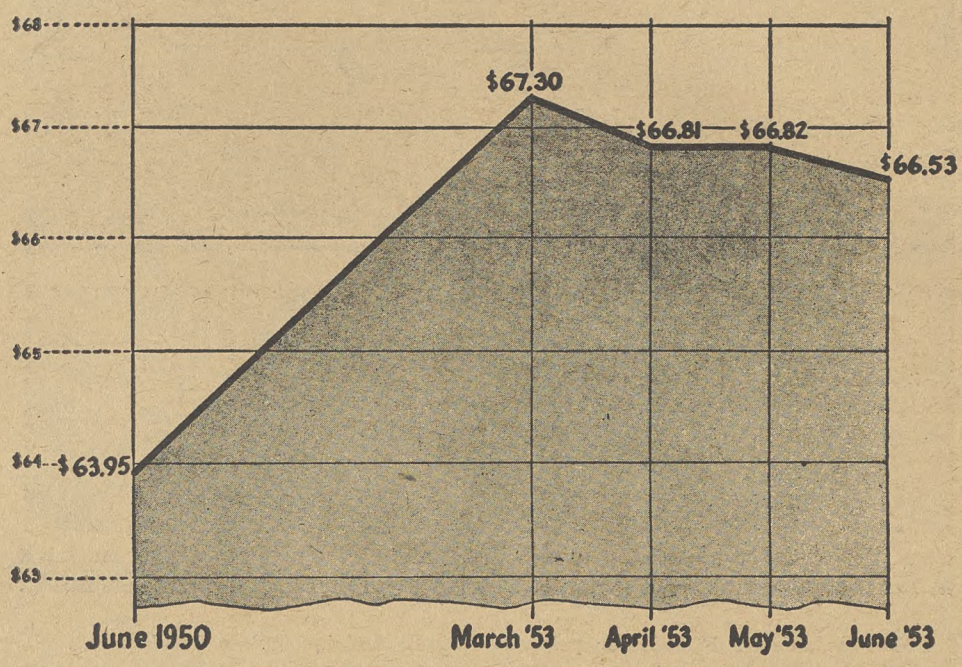
Real Wages Drop

"The buying power of wages and salaries generally,' Reuther said, "has failed to rise as rapidly as the economy's increasing manhour output since the start of the Korean war.

"This trend must be sharply reversed—with substantial increases in the buying power of wages and salaries—to sustain the expanding markets necessary for maintaining full employment and economic growth . . .

"The buying power of wages and salaries must not merely catch up with past productivity increases; it must forge ahead, if the economy is not to be distorted by imbalanced incomes—high profits and inadequate consumer buying power.

"In this way we can move more successfully to the establishment of a high-consumption, full employment economy."



Declining real wages and buying power of workers is at heart of nation's economic problems, as illustrated by chart based on U. S. labor statistics.

CIO urges positive economic program to pr turn producing longer lines of unemploye

'Hard Money Must Be Eased'

COMMENTING on some of the Eisenhower Administration's policies that must "be brought into balance with a growth economy," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said in his annual report:

Hard Money: "This policy must be changed. The money and credit system must be attuned to the full employment economic goal of the American people. It must look to continuous expansion, rising consumption levels, new and improved plants and equipment . . ."

Taxes: "Tax policy . . . must more and more reflect the needs of an expanding high-consumption economy. The burden on low income families must be eased by raising personal exemptions . . . Excise taxes must be reduced . . . we must avoid such socially and economically unsound measures like a national sales tax . . ."

Farm Program: "Administration proposals to gear farm support programs merely to market disasters fails to accord with the real needs of modern economic life . . . The economic well-being of city dwellers and farm operators is intimately entwined. Neither can long prosper alone."

Social Security: 'Needs Of The People Are Forgotten'

THE CIO COMMITTEE on Social Security said that the increased political strength of business forces has resulted in a drive to cut expenses in which "programs to provide for the general welfare have been slashed instead of expanded."

"The needs of the people are forgotten or are sacrificed to the desire to balance the budget," the report warned. Then it proceeded to tick off a series of indictments against the 83rd Congress and the Republican Administration for failure in the field of social welfare.

JOSEPH CURRAN

"No progress was made in the 83rd Congress," the report said, "to establish social insurance programs for permanent or temporary disability or the cost of medical care. No increases in benefits were enacted under the old-age and survivors insurance program."

Contrasting a bill sponsored by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) with recommendations by the President in the OASI field, the report says that the Eisenhower recommendations are limited to extension of coverage, while the Lehman bill substantially raises benefits, extends coverage of permanent and temporary disability insurance and liberalizes the retirement test. It would also provide increased funds for rehabilitation of injured workers.

Chamber Plan Exposed

The committee also reports that "labor has had considerable success in exposing the dangers of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce plan which would halt or reverse improvements in old-age and survivors insurance and would shift the cost of public assistance to the workers."

The committee also scored Congress for failure to improve the unemployment insurance program and berated appropriation cuts which weakened the Federal Bureau of Employment Security. The committee warned of "renewed pressures" being exerted on the Labor Dept. to shift its responsibilities to state agencies "which, in too many cases, cater to employers."

Reporting on the need for improvements in unemployment insurance benefits, the committee said, "in spite of inadequate provisions, less than half the state legislatures raised maximums, less than one-fifth increased duration, and in many cases such gains were offset by harsher provisions in regard to eligibility and disqualifications."

The report also hit out at "reactionaries who place tax savings above human dignity" and warned that the future fate of various social security programs is being considered by the new Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

"This commission," the committee said, "which is heavily weighted with conservatives, provides the opportunity long awaited by enemies of federal leadership and adequate welfare programs. Removal of federal responsibility and grants would, in many states, result in reduced and poorer programs."

Political Action: '20 Years' Gains Are Threatened'

THE CIO Political Action Committee reported that "the present political action task of the CIO is two-fold" as the 1954 congressional elections approach.

JACK KROLL

"It is the defensive one of preserving the gains of the past 20 years," PAC said, "and the constructive one of launching a political program that will meet the needs of the country in the future. During the past year much of what was accomplished in the two decades of the New Deal and Fair Deal has either been destroyed or threatened with destruction."

PAC, whose director is Jack Kroll, found the "housing program of the past 20 years is today virtually non-existent," services to protect the consumer have been abolished or seriously weakened, and the social security program is endangered.

Resources Dissipated

PAC also found natural resources are being dissipated, foreign nations are being alienated through tighter trade policies, interest rates have been raised to the detriment of low-income groups and the advantage of "higher-income, investment-holding groups."

Important government agencies have been placed in charge of people who have opposed the agencies' programs, representatives of hostile groups sit on commissions that have been named to review plans to improve the public welfare, PAC pointed out.

PAC, whose chairman is CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and whose secretary-treasurer is Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, concluded:

DAVID McDONALD

"In these and other fashions the face of our government is being turned away from the plain citizen of the United States and the government has, as in the days of Harding, Coolidge and Hoover, become a subordinate ally of big business.

"CIO-PAC, in this situation, views its task as one of constant and ceaseless education of our membership in these issues together with the establishment of effective political organizations through which the practical expression of our desires can be achieved."

PAC also reported on its structural changes. To it has been added a PAC Coordinating Committee, consisting of the representatives of larger CIO unions. Also establsihed was a PAC National Board, consisting of representatives of each state PAC and the presidents and secretary-treasurers of all CIO unions.

The Women's Vote

PAC also is devoting considerable attention to women's activities and to working with minority groups.

As a result of the concentration of much political action on state legislatures only one state passed an anti-union-security bill in the past year, PAC reported.

PAC believes that "the political party that strives for a national income of $500 billion a year" directed at actions for the general welfare of the people "will win the adherence of millions of voters."

In addition to Reuther, McDonald, Kroll, other committee members are: James B. Carey, I. W. Abel, Joseph A. Beirne, T. M. McCormick, L. S. Buckmaster, John Chupka, Joseph Curran, Al Hartnett, O. A. Knight, Emil Mazey, Jacob S. Potofsky, Michael Quill, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum, James G. Thimmes, Desmond Walker and Carlton Werkau.

Labor's World: U. S. Urged To Talk 'From Strength' With Russ In Search For Peace

STRENGTHENING of free trade unions in all countries and promotion of enduring peace and prosperity in a free and democratic world, in accordance with CIO policies, keyed activities of the CIO International Affairs Dept. during the past year, the annual report showed.

Many phases of CIO activity were noted. These ranged from CIO views on world problems that confront us as a nation to expanding programs for familiarizing CIO members with problems affecting workers internationally.

JACOB POTOFSKY

The department worked closely during the year with the CIO International Committee and the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee, both of which are under the chairmanship of Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers.

The report noted "weakness and confusion" in world communism, as dramatized by the June uprisings of East German workers, and called upon the United States to develop a "flexible approach" in its foreign policy.

"Willingness to enter into negotiations with an opponent is not the same thing as appeasement," it pointed out. "Since the end of World War II, the U. S. together with its allies has slowly and steadily built up strength. Now . . . straightforward and careful negotiations can result in gains to us and to our friends."

Warns Against New Isolationists

The report vigorously defended the United Nations and its specialized agencies, and again voiced CIO opposition to the Bricker Amendment to curb the power of the president in foreign affairs.

"We cannot return to the isolation of the 1920s," it said in one of several jabs at UN foes. "We cannot sit idly by and hope that the problems which lead to insecurity and war will be dealt with by others."

It recounted CIO cooperation in the work of the Intl. Labor Organization, including its conference at Geneva, Switzerland, last June, and commended the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO, of which CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg is a vice chairman, for its work in promoting understanding of the UN.

It declared the CIO is "shocked and appalled" by the big business philosophy that has resulted in increasing militarization of foreign aid programs at the expense of economic and social needs.

"It is impossible either in Europe or the Far East to stem the tide of communism by arms alone," the report said. "The U. S. cannot afford to belittle or ignore the social aspects of its foreign aid programs. The social institutions of these countries must give the people a sense of personal ownership and participation. The price of failure to do so may be internal Communist revolutions stimulated from abroad."

Organized labor, which contributed so much to whatever success foreign aid programs have achieved, has been elminated as a factor at the policy-making level in the new Foreign Operations Administration, the report said.

Capricious staff cuts have proved ruinous to operations and employe morale in the old Mutual Security Administration and Point Four, which the report said is "in danger of becoming emasculated, and its purpose completely distorted."

The work of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the large role the CIO has played in its worldwide activities were discussed in some detail, with CIO participation in the third world congress at Stockholm, Sweden, in July as a highlight.

ICFTU Work Reviewed

The report stressed the important work of ICFTU regional organizations in Asia, Europe and America, of the trade secretariats and of the workers education programs. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther was re-elected a vice president and a member of the executive board at the world congress, with Potofsky his first substitute on the board and Dir. Michael Ross of the International Affairs Dept. his second substitute.

The ICFTU has Category A status as a non-governmental international organization at the UN. Former Pres. Martin Wagner, of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, is assigned to the ICFTU office in New York which carries on this work.

The report urged continued contributions to the CIO Free World Labor Fund, set up at the last National CIO convention to supplement the ICFTU's training and education program.

It gave a detailed account of activities of the CIO European office, and noted that it will be closed Jan. 1, 1954, because it "has accomplished its mission."

Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, has been called home to serve as an assistant to the president of the CIO. Ross will spend a larger part of his time in Europe and will be available to represent the CIO on the various ICFTU bodies on which Reuther had served.

In Latin America, the report noted, "totalitarian forces represented by Peronists and Communists have sought to strengthen their grip on public opinion" during the past year, and have made an impression on a large number of people.

Totalitarians Gain Strength

Totalitarian or military dictatorships rule in Argentina, Peru, Venezuela and the Dominican Republic, it said, but democracy "has kept its own" in Uruguay, Costa Rica and Mexico. The only significant change came in Colombia, where a military coup ousted a dictatorship.

The report said that ORIT, the Inter-American Regional Organization of the ICFTU, has strengthened its position in spite of continuing critical political and social handicaps. Potofsky and Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers serve on its executive board, and Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee, is an assistant secretary. It works closely with the CIO Organization Dept.

The decline in the role of labor advisors in the foreign economic aid program, the continuing failure of the Foreign Service to utilize union personnel, and the absence of labor from high councils constitute a serious defect in American foreign policy, the report said.

Members of the CIO International Committee are: Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman; Walter P. Reuther, James B. Carey, John V. Riffe, Emil Mazey, Frank Rosenblum, Joseph Beirne, Joseph Curran, Harry Martin, O. A. Knight, Harry Sayre, L. S. Buckmaster, David J. McDonald, James Thimmes, Emil Rieve, William Pollock, Willard Townsend, Michael Quill, and Michael Ross, secretary.

Members of the Latin-American Affairs Sub-Committee are: Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman; Emil Mazey, R. J. Thomas, O. A. Knight, Ralph Helstein, Frank Grasso, Martin Kyne, David J. McDonald, and Ernst Schwarz, secretary.

Report To The CIO Convention

Labor & The Law: GOP Hedges On T-H Pledges

HAVE PRES. Eisenhower and the 83rd Congress honored their pledges of Taft-Hartley revision in the interests of "justice and fairness," or have they, in Pres. Eisenhower's phrase, engaged in "political double-dealing"?

ARTHUR GOLDBERG

That's the question the CIO Legal Dept. asked in its report to the convention. Then General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg's report details the record of the Administration's hedge on its campaign pledge.

Recalling that both House and Senate Labor Committees held extensive hearings on T-H revision from March until June, the department noted that "no one appeared to state to the committees the position of the Administration. No witness appeared, no presidential message was sent up, no Administration bill was introduced."

The report recalled that former Labor Sec. Martin P. Durkin "accepted his appointment in the evident expectation that Pres. Eisenhower would honor his campaign commitments to revise Taft-Hartley to eliminate its union-breaking provisions. Month after month Sec. Durkin labored in vain to secure from the Administration some implementation of its promises."

Still Waiting To Hear

The Legal Dept. summarized some 12 chief points of CIO testimony before congressional committees as presented by Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Goldberg and CIO officials. But the committees, after hearing this testimony along with that of management representatives, spokesmen for other labor organizations and labor-management experts, issued no report, the Legal Dept. said, "presumably because they were still waiting to hear from the White House."

According to Durkin, a message was prepared for submission to Congress just prior to adjournment. It was circulated informally after Sen. Taft's death.

"As a result of this delay," the Legal Dept. report pointed out, "industry opposition to the message was given an opportunity to become solidified. In the face of pressure from both industry and certain congressional leaders, the Administration withheld the sending of the message.

"Mr. Durkin states that Pres. Eisenhower initially told him that he would stand by the message, but that later he was advised that the President had retreated from this position, and would not send the message. Accordingly, on Sept. 10, after finally ascertaining from Pres. Eisenhower that he would not send the message, Mr. Durkin resigned."

Special Interest Politics

The CIO's position with respect to the message and the controversy was set forth by Goldberg in a letter to Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.) after the Senator had urged fellow Republicans to "toss politics out the window" in considering proposed changes in the federal labor law.

"This comment is reminiscent of one made by Pres. Eisenhower during the campaign," Goldberg's letter said. "We of the CIO fully agree. We are forced, however, to the conclusion that an industry-cabinet cabal is playing special interest politics of the most partisan kind with Taft-Hartley.

"The best way to take Taft-Hartley out of politics is for Pres. Eisenhower to keep his campaign promises rather than yield to this cabal.

"It is the position of the CIO that to date this pledge has not been realized," Goldberg's letter continued, saying that the CIO does not regard "the 19-point abortive message as realizing the President's pledge of making the Taft-Hartley Act just and fair."

In a section dealing with administration of the National Labor Relations Act, the Legal Dept. noted that the national emergency provisions of the act were subjected to their first serious legal challenge during the year. This occurred when an injunction was invoked against striking CIO Steelworkers at a plant of the American Locomotive Co.

It was claimed the strike created a national emergency because the plant produced equipment used by contractors erecting plants which, when completed, would be vital to the production of materials used for atomic weapons. However, the case never got to the Supreme Court because intervening delays took up the 80-day injunction period and the court would not hear a case where the controversy no longer existed.

Thus the Supreme Court has never passed on the question of T-H constitutionality or the scope of the national emergency provisions of the act. The Legal Dept. indicates doubt that it ever will be possible to argue these points before the Supreme Court because of inability to process a case through the court of appeals within the 80-day period.

NLRB Policy Argued

The Legal Dept. also participated during the year in argument on craft severance policies before the new National Labor Relations Board which now has two Eisenhower appointees, two hold-over members and one vacancy. The CIO position put to the board opposed the past policy of carving craft units out of stable industrial units where there is a history of successful collective bargaining.

The report also cited a number of important legal cases involving interpretations of disputed sections of the Taft-Hartley Act. The department filed "friend of the court" briefs in four of these cases with the consent of both parties to the disputes.

"The question of whether an employer may discharge employes who refuse to cross picket lines remains unsolved," the report said. In the Rockaway News case, an employe who was member of the union which had a contract with the employer was discharged for refusing to cross a picket line to deliver papers. The issue was not resolved that refusal to cross a picket line is a form of concerted activity protected by the Act, the Court holding that a no-strike clause in the union's contract applied.

"I Ain't Going Anywhere"

Safety: Death Toll In Industry Climbs

THE CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health was reorganized during the past year to avoid duplication. Working liaisons have been established with other CIO groups.

The committee's scope extends to the following problems affecting American workers: The broad question of safety of the worker on or off the job; his health so far as work operations are concerned; rehabilitation of the physically handicapped by occupational disease or accident, and workmen's compensation measures.

MICHAEL QUILL

The basis for the committee's problems is seen in the U. S. statistics for 1952. The best estimate is that 96,000 people were killed in accidents, an increase of about 1% over 1951. Of the 96,000 deaths, 38,000 were killed by motor vehicles, 16,000 in other public accidents, 29,500 in homes and 15,000 were killed on the job.

Besides these 15,000 occupational deaths, 1.9 million were injured to such an extent that they lost time from work for more than the shift on which they were injured.

CIO's position is that a safety commission should be established within the Labor Dept. with enforcement powers that will insure safe and healthful working conditions in the production of all goods that move in interstate commerce. This would replace more than 50 sets of conflicting laws dealing with safety and occupational health.

The committee: Michael J. Quill, chairman; Harry Read, secretary; Harry Block, George Brown, Frank Burke, Pat Greathouse, John Green, T. M. McCormick, William Pachler, Dominic Tripode.

National Service Proposals Scored

CLEARCUT opposition to national civilian service legislation by both management and labor groups is the keynote of recommendations dealing with a manpower program for full mobilization.

That's the report from CIO representatives on the National Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee. CIO Research and Education Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg and Ohio CIO Council Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman served on the committee with Katherine Ellickson, CIO associate research director, as alternate.

In another section, the report said. the "sordid situation" of hundreds of thousands of Mexican workers illegally entering the country "is an increasingly serious threat alike to U. S. relations with Mexico and to the standards of American workers."

Civil Rights: Failure To Act Is Condemned

THE 83RD CONGRESS was criticized by CIO's Civil Rights Committee because of "failure to enact any of the civil rights programs on which the platform of both parties voiced solemn promises of action."

The committee report said that from the defeat of the anti-filibuster rule change offered by Sen. Anderson (D. N. M.) "experienced observers realized that there would be no civil rights proposals considered by this session of Congress."

JAMES B. CAREY

In the area of administrative responsibility, the committee pointed out that "during the recent campaign, many people were sorely disappointed by the negative attitude of Pres. Eisenhower on civil rights. However, there was some hope resulting from his pledge 'to do all in his power to end segregation and discrimination in the District of Columbia'."

In line with this pledge, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who is chairman of the Civil Rights Committee, transmitted to the President a nine-point committee recommendation of possible reforms which could be put into effect without legislation.

Court Rulings Lauded

The committee also called for strengthening of the enforcement of civil rights statutes by the Justice Dept. The report pointed out that although the committee, along with other organizations, presented to Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell a memorandum dealing with the enlargement and strengthening of the Civil Rights Section of the department, "to date, the Attorney General's promises have exceeded the practical measures taken."

In a statement of approval of decisions by the U. S. Supreme Court, the report said "the court again remains the only branch of our government that courageously faced up to this issue and struck down another barrier."

The report referred to the decision that discrimination and segregation in public eating places in Washington, D. C., was illegal.

Both the Civil Rights Committee and the CIO Legal Dept. have been active in five cases involving segregation in the public schools now pending before the Supreme Court.

The CIO contributed $2500 to the special fund being raised by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for historical research on the questions the court has asked to have reargued.

School Bias Cases

The Legal Dept. says "the facts in the cases, particularly those in the Kansas case, make it apparent that the Supreme Court is going to find it very difficult, if not impossible, to postpone any longer decision as to whether segregation, in itself, is a violation of the 14th Amendment."

The first two of the five questions the court asked to have discussed deal with historical evidence as to the intent of Congress and the states in regard to the effect of the 14th Amendment on public school segregation. The third has to do with the court's power under the amendment to abolish segregation. The fourth and fifth relate to the issue of whether, if the court decided segregation was unconstitutional, it has the power to order its gradual elimination.

The committee: James B. Carey, chairman; Willard Townsend, secretary; George L-P Weaver, director; C. Dale Bucklus, W. Richard Carter, Gustav Faber, Arthur Goldberg, Neal Hanley, Mrs. Bessie Hillman, Russell Lasley, George Maher, Cecil Martin, T. M. McCormick, William Munger, William Oliver, Morris Pizer, Harry Read, Francis Shane, James Turner, and Boyd Wilson.

Organizing: Riffe Predicts 'Many Benefits' From New, Tight-Knit Setup

"MANY BENEFITS will be achieved in the near future" through the reorganization of the CIO Organization Dept.

JOHN RIFFE

That's the prediction of John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils.

"The fiscal year of July 1, 1952, to June 30, 1953, saw CIO unions participating in 2141 elections in which 464,451 employes were eligible to vote," Riffe said. "Of these elections, CIO unions won 1114, representing 217,165 employes. The reports of the international unions, which follow, indicate the advances beyond mere numerical strength which have been made by the CIO."

Under the reorganization plan, organizational duties were shifted from regional directors, whose number was cut to 13. The directors continued to assist in the development of industrial union councils and on state-wide and community programs.

"Organizational activities were to be carried out by international unions with staff assistants from CIO coordinated through the Dept. of Organization," Riffe said.

"All manpower engaged in administrative functions was, therefore, allocated to various organizational campaigns of international unions on the basis of their needs. Thus, while a tight-knit administrative structure was established, additional power was released for organizational efforts."

R. J. Thomas continued as assistant director of organization; Oral Garrison, who had served as secretary-treasurer of the CIO Southern Organizing Committee, was named to assist the executive vice president's office in financial matters and other similar problems; and Carl McPeak, formerly CIO regional director for Texas, became assistant director of councils.

All of the staff of the Southern Organizing Committee was put on the National CIO staff and was assigned among international unions. Lorne Nelles, CIO Steelworkers, formerly assistant director of the committee, became director of the group, and is coordinating the organizational activities of the international unions in the Southeast.

"It is important to note," Riffe said. "That all organizing campaigns in progress at the time of staff reassignments were concluded by the CIO Organizing Committee or arrangements were worked out with the respective international unions to take over campaigns within their jurisdiction."

The staff of the Mid-Western Organizing Committee was assigned to cooperate with international unions. The Shoe Workers' separate organizing committee was maintained under the direction of Walter Harris and is continuing its campaign in the shoe industry in Pennsylvania.

Union-By-Union: Organizing Gains Reported By CIO Affiliates In '53

Outstanding gains in membership and contract benefits were reported by CIO international unions and organizing committees to the 1953 CIO convention:

AUTO WORKERS: In the year ending last Aug. 31, UAW participated in 300 National Labor Relations Board elections and won 172 of them. It is estimated that additional members will number 70,000 when full production is reached in these plants.

UAW organizing efforts are directed at "run-away plants" of companies already under contract, unorganized competitive plants, unorganized plants of companies under contract, and other unorganized plants in the union's jurisdiction.

BARBERS: The Barbers & Beauty Culturists Union solidified its membership in existing locals, organized three new locals, and has a total of 45 locals in 21 states.

BREWERY WORKERS: BW won 31 of the 45 representation elections in which it took part during the year ending last Aug. 31. It gained a total of 4647 members, 1312 from these elections, 1191 in Canada, and 2144 from the addition of four local industrial unions.

BROADCAST EMPLOYES: The National Association of Broadcast Employes & Technicians organized some 20 new television stations, bringing some 500 employes under contract. Organization of the film divisions of corporations continued. Greatest single gain was at the Canadian Broadcasting Co., where 500 engineers and technicians are covered by the contract.

CLOTHING WORKERS: Some 150,000 ACWA men's clothing workers won a 12.5c hourly wage increase, additional employer contribution for the hospitalization of wives and dependent children of members, and improvement of vacation and holiday clauses. A 10c hourly pay increase was won for 100,000 members in the shirt and garment industries, as well as added contributions for hospitalization of dependents and a stronger holiday provision. Wage gains also were recorded for members in other branches covered by the union.

Since Sept. 1, 1952, the union chartered one new joint board and 24 new local unions, 10 NLRB elections were won, and initial contracts were signed with 43 plants covering 10,000 workers. ACWA continued its union label campaign, stimulating renewed interest in organizing, particularly in the South.

COMMUNICATIONS: CWA increased its membership by 20,000, mostly in present bargaining units. After a year's operation, CWA's defense fund has assets of more than $1 million, and aided 7000 members during a strike at the North Carolina plants of Western Electric and 7000 members on strike at Indian Bell.

A strike of 50,000 CWA members against Southwestern Bell won significant gains after 10 days. During recent months, organizing activity has been greatly expanded, and major campaigns are under way in New York State, New Jersey and Canada, and in Western Electric plants. CWA defeated major organizing raids by the AFL Electrical Workers, and is pushing its legislative and political action activities.

ELECTRICAL: IUE, only four years old, was confident that by CIO convention time it would represent 400,000 members in the electrical industry. IUE made great strides in organizing new and unorganized plants, particularly in the South and Middle Atlantic areas, during the past year. Among major election victories were those in the General Electric and DuMont chains. The union won a total of 71 victories in National Labor Relations Board elections, and a number of other locals affiliated with IUE without NLRB polls.

FURNITURE: Since the 1952 CIO convention UFWA won recognition in 37 plants in which 6000 workers are employed, gained several thousand members and chartered a number of new locals. The health, welfare and insurance coverage of the UFWA insurance fund was extended to another 2800 workers for a total of more than half of the union's membership. The UFWA national pension fund, which was established only this year, covers about a third of the union's membership.

GAS, COKE: UGC&CW organized 59 plants with a total eligible membership of 11,510 in the past year. A number of the plants were new and expanding, and it is estimated that from 4000 to 5000 additional members should be added to the union.

GLASS WORKERS: The Glass Workers gained 3750 members since the last CIO convention, 1750 through the organization of new locals and 2000 through additional membership in established locals.

GOVERNMENT: The Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee increased its membership, won economic gains. Despite increased benefits, public employes lag far behind industrial workers in wages and working conditions.

INSURANCE: The Insurance Workers of America became a CIO international union during the past year, after three years of steady progress as the Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee. In keeping with the CIO policy of integrating local industrial unions into the proper internationals, the new union has extended its protection to clerks as well as agents.

LITHOGRAPHERS: During the past two years ALA increased its membership by 2800 and extended the 36¼-hour week to three-quarters of the union's roll with eight locals gaining the 35-hour week. Union-run pension plans cover 22,000 members in 17 locals, and 23,000 of the 28,000 members are covered by welfare plans paid for by employers. Nearly every local won a 16c hourly wage increase during the past year.

MARINE ENGINEERS: MEBA increased the basic wages of licensed engineers on colliers, dry cargo ships and tankers on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Coasts in new contract negotiations during the past year. Employer contributions to industry-wide pension and welfare plans also were gained. New contracts were signed with a number of employers on the three coasts.

SHIPBUILDING: In the past year IUMSWA won bargaining rights in 19 plants. Despite a severe recession in the industry, every agreement renegotiated or opened for wage review by the union brought higher pay and numerous other benefits. Since January 1951 IUMSWA won a total minimum of 50c an hour increase in its pacts.

MARITIME UNION: NMU, with a membership of 45,000, obtained two wage increases for its memberships on deep sea ships the past year, one raising base rates and overtime pay from 5% to 15%, and the other bringing increases from 2% to 6%. The union's rotary hiring hall system was strengthened. Other benefits included extending the vacation

No-Raid Pact: Reuther Hails Agreement

THE NO-RAID agreement between the CIO and the AFL is of "tremendous" importance to the labor movement, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said in his report to the convention.

The pact was approved by the CIO Executive Board, which recommended its ratification by the convention. The AFL convention earlier this year approved the agreement.

The text of the agreement was included in the officers' report to the convention.

Reuther said "as the no-raiding agreement becomes ratified—and I hope and trust all will do so promptly—by various affiliates of both the CIO and the AFL, it will inevitably lead to a sharp reduction in jurisdictional disputes and raids between the affiliates of our two organizations. By the same token, this agreement can release the energies of all our unions for the larger effort to organize the unorganized."

The agreement was the result of the work of a joint CIO-AFL Unity Committee. CIO members of this group are:

Reuther, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; John V. Riffe, executive vice president; Pres. David J. McDonald, Steelworkers; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran, Maritime Workers; Pres. Emil Rieve, Textile Workers; Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, Clothing Workers; Pres. O. A. Knight, Oil Workers; Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, Communications Workers, and Pres. Michael Quill, Transport Workers.

Councils Dept.: CIO Groups Expand Work

THE CHANGED role of CIO state, city, country and area councils played a leading part in necessitating reorganization of the Councils Dept., John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president, reported.

"Once the foundation of industrial unionism had been established," Riffe said, "the councils, like other CIO agencies, were able to direct their efforts along more specialized lines. Over a period of time, the councils have, accordingly, assumed various responsibilities in many areas of concern to CIO members—in education, housing, politics, civil defense, race relations, public relations, legislation."

With the chartering of South Carolina CIO Council last May, there are now councils in 42 states. The city, county and area councils number 265.

Right-To-Work Warning

"In state after state," Riffe reported, "our state councils found themselves in a bitter struggle not only to ward off vicious anti-union legislation masquerading under such names as 'right-to-work' bills, but also to prevent emasculation of many of the social and economic gains made in the preceding decades."

Carl A. McPeak, assistant director of the Councils Dept., travelled extensively during the year to learn the councils' problems. Several regional meetings were held for council officials, regional staff members and international union representatives and directors to discuss changes in council and organizing plans and procedures.

Report To The CIO Convention

Housing: Millions Of New Homes Needed

"HOUSING has not fared well under the new Administration and the new Congress." That was the conclusion of the CIO Housing Committee which, however, found a few reasons for optimism in the housing picture.

JAMES THIMMES

The committee reported a growing realization among members of Congress that the government must act vigorously in the housing field, plus enactment of rent control legislation in a half dozen states.

But on the whole, said the committee, the picture is bleak. In its summary of adverse factors, the committee pointed out:

1. "Rents have risen substantially in hundreds of areas" following the action of Congress killing rent control.
2. Public housing starts have been cut to 20,000 units for the current fiscal year and no projects are being developed for future construction.
3. Congress closed the special office of the Housing and Home Finance Agency which dealt with cooperative housing.
4. Housing costs have increased because the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration allowed interest rates to rise as much as .5%.
5. The absence of low-cost homes, to which families can move, has jeopardized the entire program of slum clearance.
6. The defense housing program has been curtailed.

The committee reported that, despite increased interest rates, "the main body of financial institutions refuse to make housing loans," further impairing the housing picture.

2 Million A Year

The committee called for annual construction of two million family dwelling units "to enable the nation to solve the most immediate and pressing of our housing problems in a period of six or seven years."

To achieve adequate national housing goals, eliminate slums and substandard housing, the committee observed, "it is further necessary to provide at least 10% of the total housing construction for so-called low-income families."

Committee Chairman James G. Thimmes is serving on the Advisory Committee on Government Housing Policies and Programs. Other committee members: A. F. Hartung, Ralph Helstein, John J. Moran, Burl Phares, William Snoots, Elwood Swisher, Willard Townsend, John Duffy, Andrew Pettis, Sam H. Scott, James G. Thomas, Thomas Andert and Richard Gosser.

"Any Advice?"

Public Relations: CIO Newscast Is New Venture

BEGINNING of a National CIO public relations program centered around a daily radio news broadcast and plans for a television program for 1954 were a major activity of the CIO Publicity Dept. during the past year.

VANDERCOOK

The radio news broadcast, which began on Labor Day, features John W. Vandercook, noted author, lecturer and radio commentator.

According to Publicity Dir. Henry C. Fleisher's report, the department is presently conducting surveys and studies concerning CIO use of television.

Television, the report says, is "an essentially more difficult medium to use. Discussions with union publicity directors and union officers will be continued, with an eye to developing the best possible television program available within the projected budget for such a series."

In other radio and television activities throughout the year, the Publicity Dept. was able to utilize a great deal of free, sustaining time made available by various radio and television networks and stations. One such achievement was the placing of CIO's views on Taft-Hartley amendments on the air over 332 radio stations in 46 states with a transcribed 15-minute broadcast featuring Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey who answered specific questions on the law.

Both the well-known economist Robert Nathan and radio commentator James G. Crowley appeared for CIO on two 13-week programs over ABC. Additionally, Pres. Reuther and a number of other CIO officers and officers of CIO unions appeared on a variety of other programs.

Resources: GOP Give-Away Program Rapped

"FLOOD PREVENTION through proper watershed management contributes to an expanding economy, to high incomes of farmers and to the possibility of reduced prices for industrial workers."

That was the argument advanced by CIO's Committee on Regional Development Conservation in its report to the convention.

The committee said that it is "constantly finding new opportunities to contribute to an expanding American economy, to constructive farm-labor relations, to the public relations position of the CIO and to the welfare of the country generally."

Indicating the importance of conservation and development as a political issue, the report noted that a battle in Kansas over improper watershed management led to "the election of a pro-labor Democrat, a working farmer, who is now the only Democratic member of Congress from that state."

Power Policy Hit

The Republican Administration's new give-away power policy came in for attack by the committee which cited, among other evils, the danger that privately-owned utilities would be given "a monopolistic grip on power produced at government expense."

O. A. KNIGHT

The committee report said that "the customary preference hitherto given to municipally-owned rural electrification systems would be eliminated or weakened in administration.

"Long - term contracts would be entered into with private utility systems which would effectively prevent municipalities and cooperatives from picking up federal government power later on. In brief, the hydro-electric power potentials and related steam power potentials of the nation would be privately-owned utilities for exploitation."

The committee also warned that loss of the nation's top-soil means "an inevitable lowering of living standards for all Americans."

Citing the fact that one-third of America's top-soil is already lost, that a quarter of the agricultural land is lost and that another quarter may well be lost in the next 15 to 20 years, the committee underscored its support of proper watershed management.

Watershed Programs

The report pointed out that a watershed management program provides protection from floods for city dwellers without drowning out farm communities as do big-dam flood control projects.

"Watershed management," the report notes, "looks toward a constructive political and economic collaboration between farmers and labor, and should have our vigorous support for that reason, among others."

On the subject of timber resources, the committee warned that we are cutting out our saw-timber 50% faster than we are growing it.

The committee: O. A. Knight, chairman, Russell Letner, A. T. Jones, James W. Click, A. J. Kojetinsky, Joseph A. Fisher, A. F. Hartung, J. William Belanger, Rodney Jacobson, James A. Davis, Harold Garno, Matthew Lynch, Roy Harrington, Elwood D. Swisher and Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary.

Fire-ravaged forest lands point up conservation need.

Research: New Economic Report Offered

KEY PROJECT of the Research Div. of the CIO Education & Research Dept. during the past year was its work with the Committee on Economic Policy in preparation of the study on the national economy, Maintaining Prosperity.

The entire department is under the direction of Stanley H. Ruttenberg whose research associates are Katherine Ellickson, Nathaniel Goldfinger, Frank L. Fernbach and Everett Kassalow.

Members of the research staff served on a number of government committees and maintained close relations with important government departments and commissions as part of the work of assisting CIO officers and standing committees.

The Education Div. which is under the direction of George T. Guernsey, associate director of the department in charge of education, reported increased activity.

Five new one-week summer schools were held during the past year and attendance increased approximately 20%. The report also noted that institutes sponsored by CIO international unions and state councils increased in number to 65, with more than 6500 delegates in attendance.

In addition to its regular pamphlet publishing activities, the department put out a special publication for state and county fairs and distributed a guide on How to Plan a Booth for Your State or County Fair.

25 LIUs Join CIO Affiliates

SOME 25 local industrial unions were transferred to various CIO international unions this year on the recommendation of a special CIO committee.

The committee was set up early this year on the recommendation of CIO Pres. Walter J. Reuther with the approval of the CIO Executive Board.

When the committee started its work, there were 216 LIUs. The committee assigned the 25 LIUs to internationals after submitting a list of the unaffiliated locals to all unions. Committee members are:

Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs of the Rubber Workers; Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick, Oil Workers; Pres. Russell Taylor, Shoe Workers; Treas. M. Hedley Stone, Maritime Union; Vice Pres. John J. Moran, Communications Workers. They were aided by Oral Garrison, assistant to John V. Riffe, executive vice president.

Ship: The Story Of A Sick Industry

THE UNITED STATES has fallen behind other nations in long range ship construction, the CIO Maritime Committee reported.

Although the nation faces possible war, the committee said, 56% of our merchant ships are classified as poor by the Maritime Administration. Of 3348 active and inactive ships in our merchant marine, 1875 are ready for the scrap pile.

Employment in private shipbuilding yards is declining. At the start of 1953 only 92 merchant ships of over 1000 tons were under construction in American yards. Thirty of these are scheduled for completion this year. By 1955 only two will still be under construction.

Incoming orders are at their lowest since 1946. In fact, the committee pointed out, some of the ships being constructed here are spillover orders from foreign yards which are too busy or unable to get enough steel to fill the orders.

The committee is trying to save the U. S. Public Health Service hospital-medical care program for merchant seamen which is now menaced by budget cuts.

Union-By-Union: Organizing, Pay Gains Reported

pool to tanker and collier operators, and obtaining the check-off on all oceangoing vessels.

NEWSPAPER: ANG membership reached an all-time high in 1953. New membership marks were set in 10 locals, and membership gains were held at all-time highs by nine other locals. Meanwhile, the union conducted organizing campaigns to win greater representation.

OIL WORKERS: In the year ending July 1, OWIU took part in 107 NLRB elections and won 60, bringing a potential membership increase of 3544. OWIU's Union Builder Program, was responsible for increasing membership by 11,000. Under the plan prizes are awarded to individual members for obtaining new members. Plant shutdowns and other factors cut the membership increase to 4146, or a total gain of 4.6% since the last CIO convention. OWIU continued to aid the coalition of unions in the oil industry, developing hundreds of friends in the independent unions.

PACKINGHOUSE: UPWA this year participated in 51 elections, winning 8000 new members, a 33.33% increase over the 1952 membership gain. The union's economic gains included a 4c hourly general wage increase, an additional 4c an hour for women, and a further reduction in the geographical differential.

PAPERWORKERS: Since the previous CIO convention UPW issued 19 new charters. With the aid of CIO organizers, the union is conducting compaigns with a potential membership boost of more than 20%. UPW maintained its leadership on the collective bargaining front and aimed its education activities at showing the relationship between contract progress and organizing the unorganized.

28 Jurisdictional Disputes Settled

CIO's Jurisdictional Committee, for which Dr. Nathan Feinsinger was appointed as arbitrator this year, handled a total of 28 disputes since the last convention.

Of these, 12 were settled through discussion and negotiation. Eight were arbitrated, and eight more are pending arbitration.

PLAYTHINGS: Despite adverse conditions in the industry since the beginning of 1953, CIO Playthings Workers organized some 10 plants and brought contract benefits to 1150 additional workers.

RADIO: ARA turned back the attempt of the ship owners to transfer the radio telephone duties of radio officers to other ship officers, won wage and overtime rate increases of more than 20%, and brought in new members to swell its rolls to 76% of the marine radio operator jobs.

RAILROAD: URWA reorganized its staff to improve its service to its locals. Organizational gains included successful campaigns at two ice plants which are used by the Sante Fe Railroad, and among the maintenance of equipment employes of the Cornwall Railroad, a subsidiary of the Bethlehem Steel plant at Lebanon, Pa.

RETAIL: Pres. Irving M. Simon of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union died Sept. 3. He was primarily responsible for stabilizing the union. During his term in office which began on Dec. 20, 1948, the union membership increased by more than 30%.

RUBBER WORKERS: URWA won 36 NLRB elections involving more than 6000 employers and obtained bargaining rights in several other plants through consent recognition by employers. With 31 new charters issued and five bargaining units merged with established locals in this period, URWA's dues paying membership is the highest in its history.

SHOE WORKERS: USWA won numerous elections and gained many new members during the past year, while the shoe industry continued to open "runaway" plants. The union organized many of them, especially in Missouri, Arkansas and Maine.

STEELWORKERS: USA-CIO hailed its substantial progress during the past year as a living memorial to Philip Murray, who was succeeded as union president by David J. McDonald. The addition of 178 locals gave the union more than 2400 locals and brought the dues paying membership to 1.2 million.

USA-CIO has 2330 agreements, 96% of them providing union security and 94% of them containing pension and social insurance coverage. During the year the union successfully concluded agreements in the steel industry providing for an 8.5c an hour wage increase and the elimination of southern differentials in the basic industry.

STONE WORKERS: USAPW won a dozen NLRB representation elections and granted charters to 11 local unions and one direct affiliate. A new District Five was established to include Arkansas, Louisiana, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas. The union improved existing insurance and pension plans and established new ones, and negotiated wage increases ranging from 4c to 14c an hour.

TEXTILE WORKERS: Faced with a depressed industry, increased use by employes of the Taft-Hartley Law and a secession movement, TWUA won NLRB elections in 79 previously unorganized mills employing 11,000 workers. The greatest proportional success was scored in Canada.

TWUA successfully fought off an employers' wage-cutting move in the hard-hit woolen industry. The union was almost completely successful in defeating secessionists who aimed to draw off large sections of the membership into the AFL textile union.

TRANSPORT SERVICE: In the past year UTSE was certified as bargaining agent for units of three railroads and two other concerns, organizing efforts continued among fertilizer and tobacco leaf workers in North Carolina.

TRANSPORT WORKERS: TWU last January conducted a 29-day strike to win an arbitration stipulation protecting the rights of 8200 New Yohk City bus workers to the 40-hour week. The five-day, 40-hour week without loss of take-home pay was extended to 10,000 workers of the Philadelphia Transit Co. and to other members in Houston and Columbus. Throughout the U. S., TWU renewed contracts providing pensions, vacations and increases ranging from 10c to 37c an hour.

UTILITY WORKERS: UWA's membership has risen to 80,000 after winning 10 important NLRB elections during the past year, including one at Pennsylvania Power Co., New Castle, Pa., where a raid by the AFL Electrical Workers was defeated. Wage increases averaging 11c an hour were won.

WOODWORKERS: IWA took part in 75 NLRB representation elections, winning 48. Eleven of these elections represented attempted raids by the AFL carpenters, who were defeated in all but two cases in which a total of only 110 persons were involved.

CIO Cites Truman's Stand Against Soviet

White as "a Russian spy." (For details, see Willard Shelton's "It's Your Washington" column on Page 2.)

The CIO board branded the charges against Truman as "disgraceful" and criticized Pres. Eisenhower for his actions. Of the former President, the board said:

"The originator of the Greek-Turkish economic and military aid program, which is known as the Truman Doctrine and which halted the spread of Soviet power in southeastern Europe and around the Black Sea, was not 'soft on Communism.'

"The proponent of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which brought Gen. Eisenhower from retirement to be its head, was not 'soft on communism.'

"The principal supporter of the Marshall Aid Program, which rescued Western Europe from post-war economic collapse and probable domination by the Soviet Union, was not 'soft on communism.'

"The Chief Executive who ordered American resistance to the Soviet aggressors in Korea and who rallied the United Nations to a world-wide military defense against Soviet aggression, was not 'soft on communism.'

"We are proud of our support of these policies and programs, initiated or executed by former Pres. Truman. These policies were supported by all decent Americans, regardless of party, who recognized the nature of the Communist enemy and who are realistic enough to know how totalitarianism should be combatted.

"It is significant that the extreme reactionaries in the Congress who have endorsed the smear attack on Mr. Truman, are the same men who opposed former Pres. Truman's constructive policies against communism."

The board said it "was glad" that Pres. Eisenhower "finally expressed his disapproval" of the Velde supena.

But, it added, "we cannot withhold our criticism of Pres. Eisenhower for having left to a member of his cabinet the license to make this unwarranted attack on the patriotism of a former President."

"The speeches and statements by Atty. Gen. Brownell with their implications of destruction of the orderly processes of government, should never have been permitted by our President," the board said.

"With even greater severity," it went on, "we condemn the action of Brownell. He is a trained lawyer; he holds the highest legal position in our federal government; he, of all men should recognize the dangerous precedents in permitting a wanton, unsupported and politically spiteful attack on a former President of the U. S.

The board concluded:

"This whole affair—the Brownell speech, the Velde-McCarthy-Jenner circus tactics, and the lack of affirmative White House leadership — constitutes a disgraceful chapter in American history and a dangerous precedent for the future.

"We voice our condemnation and our concern.

"We express the hope that the public outcry against these un-American tactics will be so strong and firm that there will be no repetition of it for the protection of ourselves and future generations."

The Story Of A Strike—

On 39c An Hour, A Man Can't Live--

(First of two articles)

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

THEY CALLED IT a strike but it was more a revolt against a way of life where 39c an hour is regarded (by the bosses) as a living wage.

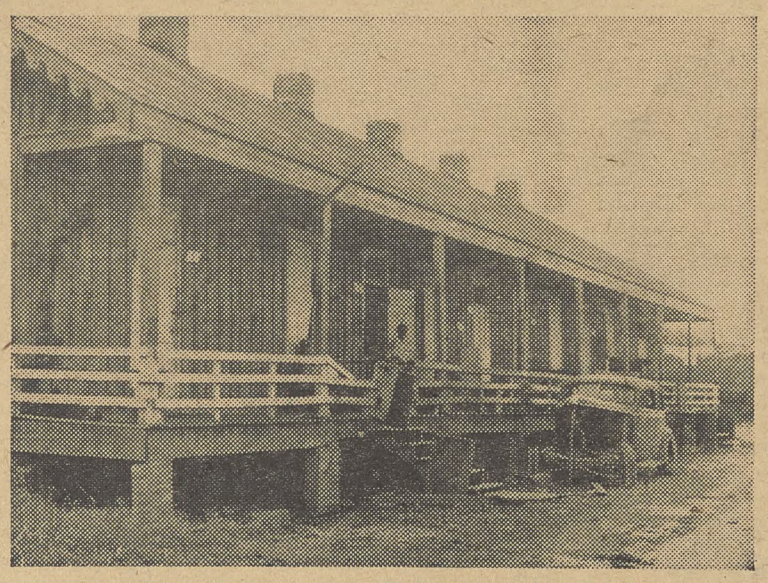
In the sugar cane fields of Louisiana, some 1200 workers staged a strike against a system most Americans consider extinct. The workers are members of the National Agricultural Union, AFL.

Some of them only heard about unions vaguely about a year ago, none of them were ever union members before.

Live Like Humans

Today, against the weight of public opinion or indifference, against seemingly hopeless odds, they are waging a battle to live like human beings.

They are learning—mostly by word of mouth, since so many of them are illiterate—that they are not alone and that powerful allies are rallying to their aid. Their own union and CIO organizations are providing legal and financial help and, most important food.



SEVEN FAMILIES live in this miserable building on a plantation near Reserve, La., typical of quarters furnished the cane field workers. The water supply is often distant.

A photostat of a $5000 check from the CIO Auto Workers is tacked to the door of the AFL union office in Reserve, La.

Last week, a month after it started, the strike was officially ended. All but a few of the strikers returned to their jobs. The others will be aided in finding houses and jobs so that the legal battle started by the strike may be taken up through the courts.

The CIO has pledged support, financial and otherwise, to wage the legal battle and will work with the AFL union to organize the cane grinding mills which are the key to making future action more effective.

Vice Pres. Henry E. Hasiwar of the NAU commented bitterly as he ordered the strikers back to work that Louisiana courts had "adopted the position of the American Sugar Cane League," spokesman for the big planters.

Churchmen Slandered

Powerful voices are ringing out in defense of the workers and their right to organize. Most Rev. Francis J. Rummel, Catholic archbishop of New Orleans, braved a storm of prejudice to declare that the plantation owners have "a moral obligation" to meet with the union.

A priest who is aiding the union's fight even was attacked as "a Red in robes."

Lay and church leaders have insisted that the owners' minds must be opened to the fact that the days when workers were the wards of the employer are forever gone.

The sugar cane belt in Louisiana embraces several parishes (counties). There are many vast plantations but many more very small ones worked by an owner and one or two field hands.

The harvest season lasts about 12 weeks during which the cane is cut in the fields, rushed to the grinding mill where it is converted to raw sugar and then shipped to refineries where it is turned into the stuff that sweetens America's breakfast coffee.

The U. S. sugar cane industry is non-economic. Without tariffs and price-support subsidies, it could never meet the competition of the foreign market.

The subsidies paid the plantation owners bring the federal government into the picture. And it reflects no credit on the most enlightened nation on the globe that federal policy makes the sugar field workers the stepchildren of a democracy.

Annually in July, the Production & Marketing Administration of the Agriculture Dept. comes to Louisiana and determines the wages to be paid for the harvest and cultivation seasons.

Paradoxically, in a Republican Administration that professes to despise socialistic philosophy, the wages as usual were pegged this year to the selling point of the product. For a nine-hour day, when raw sugar sells between $5.60 and $6 per 100 pounds, the wages of common laborers were set at $3.57 and skilled workers at $4.09.

The party of Abraham Lincoln has come a long way from his Emancipation Proclamation.

Encouraged by their success among workers in the strawberry fields of the state, the National Agricultural Union began organization of the sugar cane workers. Almost 2000 of a potential 8000 joined the union although the problems of communication were tremendous.

Refused To Bargain

The NAU notified the large plantation owners of the strike vote but pointed out it was anxious to avoid a strike. Three of the Big Four companies replied.

Typically, the South Coast Corp. reported that it felt "an obligation to the American public not to bargain with any union regarding agricultural labor."

(Next: "Government by injunction" failed to stop the sugar cane workers.)

CIO Members Lend A Hand

Court injunctions, popular prejudice or other factors can't stop members of CIO unions from helping the embattled AFL sugar cane field workers in Louisiana.

CIO Packinghouse Workers employed in nearby grinding mills and refineries have helped in many ways. The CIO Auto Workers gave $5000 for use in strike relief. There is close coordination between CIO and AFL officials on strike strategy.

Some strikers were going hungry within three days after the month-old strike started. Last week a large truck loaded with food rolled out from New Orleans to strike headquarters in Reserve, La.

CIO Communications Workers Locals 3410 and 3450, Local 29 Marine and Shipbuilders and the Newspaper Guild in New Orleans contributed over a ton of potatoes, rice and beans as well as quantities of canned goods, milk, tea and meat.

California CIO Sets Broad Program At Biggest Convention

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

A BROAD liberal program of action on state and national issues was adopted by some 450 delegates attending the California CIO Council's largest annual convention in San Diego.

Top CIO, community and civic leaders who spoke to the group, with one exception, sharply criticized the present Administration in Washington. The exception was California's new Republican Gov. Goodwin Knight, who simply skipped the subject.

HEADING the list of CIO speakers was James G. Thimmes, National CIO and CIO Steelworkers vice president, who told the delegates "the procedure in Washington seems to be to set up a study committee to make a report, and, when that report is made, to set up another committee to study the report and make a report."

Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, said that "we are now realizing most of the bleak predictions which we made prior to the 1952 elections." He said that CIO does give the present Administration credit for one thing: "They are always able to find the big business angle and formulate policies to serve big business."

Carl McPeak, assistant director of CIO councils, warned that "it is better to pay off the national debt while wages and national income are high. Don't be too anxious to cut taxes, it may cost you 25% more later."

Striking UAW-CIO aircraft workers at North American Aviation Corp. got both financial and moral support.

Delegates adopted a strong statement of support and donated over $325. And CIO Steelworkers Dist. 38 Dir. Charles Smith presented C. V. O'Halloran, UAW-CIO Region 6 director, with a check for $1000 raised by Steelworkers through voluntary donations at plant gates.

In an extensive state legislative program, the convention went on record in favor of:

- A California State Labor Relations Act, guaranteeing the right to collective bargaining to "over one million intrastate and public workers."
- A "little Norris-LaGuardia Act" to prevent the use of injunctions against labor.
- Complete revision of the unemployment insurance and the workmen's compensation laws.
- Reforms in the state election laws providing for more careful control over campaign expenditures, elimination of "so-called non-partisan" primary elections on the city and state levels, and providing for public financing of campaigns for nominees of political parties.

A political action resolution urged the calling of conferences of labor, farm and other liberal forces "to mobilize liberal forces in an all-out effort to fight for liberal principles and policies" in elections.

A constitutional change, adopted by a roll call vote of 69,000 to 53,000, provides for a full-time president to give the council two full-time officers.

For the new full-time post, Manuel Dias, UAW, was unanimously re-elected president. John A. Despol, USA, was also unanimously re-elected as secretary-treasurer.

Reuther Urges 'Great Crusade' Against Poverty, Fear And War

MASSED FLAGS and giant photomural in background dominated the stage in Cleveland's Public Auditorium as Pres. Walter P. Reuther rallied CIO's 15th convention to leadership for a better world of peace. "What's good for the nation," says banner, "is good for CIO." That theme was the prime influence in every convention decision on a series of issues.

CIO Ratifies No-Raid Pact With AFL

EXECUTIVE OFFICERS of the National CIO were unanimously instructed by the convention to sign the no-raiding agreement with the AFL as a preliminary to further discussions of organic unity.

As a result of the action, meetings of the Joint Committee set up by the two federations to study a united labor movement will be resumed in the near future, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther announced.

The AFL approved the no-raiding agreement at its convention in September. The pact is binding in its present form only upon directly-chartered locals of the two bodies, such as CIO local industrial unions.

Each international union in each federation must ratify it before it becomes binding on unions in a particular industry.

Discussion of the pact was touched off by Reuther in his keynote address, in which he reported progress in the unity discussions.

"The no-raiding agreement," he added, "represents a very fundamental and historic step in organized labor, as it attempts to provide a basis for organic union. That no raiding agreement has been approved by unanimous action of the CIO Executive Board, and we recommend it to you for approval."

'We Will Make It Work'—Riffe

Between 40 and 45 million American workers are unorganized, CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe pointed out during floor discussion of the no-raiding agreement.

"We have a great job to do that will keep us busy for many years," he declared. "I hope from the bottom of my heart that this is the beginning of a united labor movement in the U. S. I will step aside, walk away, do anything that will help bring this about.

"I firmly believe that CIO and AFL workers mean to make this agreement work."

IN DISCUSSING the compact, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers, declared there is a "moral obligation" on the part of AFL unions to sign it.

"The IUE-CIO Executive Board has recommended adoption of this agreement," he said, "although in the last few years the IUE-CIO has been attacked by no less than 20 separate AFL unions.

"The IUE-CIO has committed itself to sign this agreement. But if any AFL union violates its terms, the IUE-CIO has a reputation for being able to defend itself in case of a raid."

Reuther explained that peace talks with the AFL began with the understanding that the structure and integrity of every CIO union, large and small, would be protected. He also cited the millions of dollars spent in "unprincipled and unjustified raids."

"This is the first, necessary historic step toward organic unity," he said. "But it is of no value unless it is ratified by CIO and AFL affiliates."

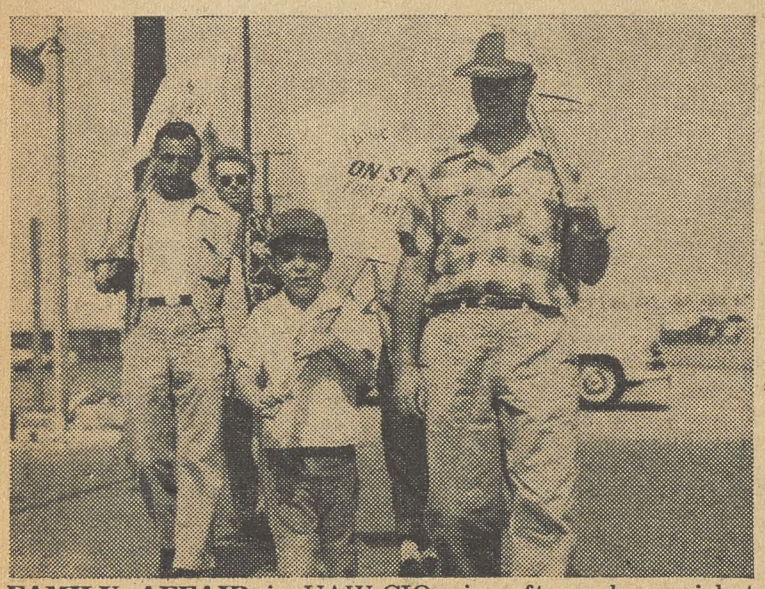
THERE WAS CONSIDERABLE criticism of some AFL unions, particularly the Teamsters, during the discussion. Some delegates were especially wroth over Teamster raids on the CIO Brewery Workers, a subject covered in a separate resolution (see story on Page 15).

Thomas Rusch, BW-CIO organization director, nevertheless said his union endorsed the agreement and was prepared to sign it.

Pres. Charles Schultz of the Wisconsin CIO Council endorsed the pact, but warned that the council's convention had instructed him to say that "never again will we stand for Dave Beck and the Teamsters coming into Milwaukee and trying to break the 76-day strike of Brewery Workers by dealing with management."

John Brophy, veteran CIO leader, declared the no-raiding agreement and organic unity are what union members want.

"We have nothing to lose by adopting this agreement," he declared, "except perhaps our fear."



FAMILY AFFAIR is UAW-CIO aircraft workers picket line at North American Aviation's main Los Angeles plant. Some 33,000 struck, sign says, because "we make 26c an hour less than aircraft workers in auto plants."

No-Raid Pact Hailed—

'We Will Do Everything To Help Gain Single, Democratic Labor Movement'

Hailing the CIO-AFL no-raiding agreement, the CIO convention pledged continuing negotiations toward "our larger goal of organic unity" based on principles of free, democratic unionism. Text of this major resolution:

AT THE LAST convention of the CIO the officers were authorized, through an appropriate CIO committee, to meet with a committee of the AFL and to earnestly discuss and seek honorable labor unity that will advance the welfare of all of labor.

Pursuant to this convention mandate the officers of the CIO communicated with the officers of the AFL for the purpose of arranging unity meetings. A number of discussions were thereupon carried out with the AFL through the medium of a joint CIO-AFL Unity Committee.

Out of discussions by this joint committee, and later by a subcommittee of the larger group, a historic no-raiding agreement was developed.

This document has already been ratified by the recent convention of the AFL. It has just been ratified by this convention.

IT IS THE SINCERE HOPE and conviction of this convention that as the no-raiding agreement becomes operative—and we hope and trust that all the affiliates of both the CIO and AFL will promptly ratify—it will inevitably lead to a sharp reduction in jurisdictional disputes and raids between the affiliates of our two organizations.

By the same token this agreement can release the energies of all our unions for the larger effort to organize the unorganized.

The no-raiding agreement is intended to be a constructive first step toward the attainment of organic unity in the American labor movement. The successful operation of the no-raiding agreement in a real sense, therefore, will be a touchstone of our larger goal of seeking organic unity.

The CIO wants organic unity. We seek unity in the American labor movement firmly based on the principles of free democratic unionism. We will do everything in our power to achieve this goal.

In the unity discussions that are in progress we will not sacrifice any of the basic principles for which the CIO stands, and which are essential to the building of a strong democratic and socially responsible labor movement.

In these negotiations we will not sacrifice the interests of any union, big or small, within the CIO.

In these negotiations we will not permit the interests of any individual for office or power to stand in the way. We recognize that the good of the whole labor movement transcends that of any individual or group.

RESOLVED: We direct the CIO members of the Unity Committee to continue the unity negotiations in the constructive spirit that has already been displayed, seeking in the negotiations always to carry out the mandate of the CIO conventions through the years that "organic unity will be achieved through a spirit of cooperation, responsibility and sincerity in the relationships of all democratic free trade union organizations."

Aircraft Strikers Get Full Backing; CIO Protests Defense Dept. Role

ENTHUSIASTIC support for some 33,000 CIO aircraft workers in their month-long strike for "first class pay" in North American Aviation Corp. plants was voiced by the CIO convention. Aid was pledged by a standing vote.

Coupled with it was condemnation of the Defense Dept. for "its tacit support to the union-busting efforts of the corporation."

The North American workers, members of the CIO Auto Workers, have been out since Oct. 23 in a cross-country walkout against the aircraft firm's plants in Columbus, O., and Los Angeles and Fresno, Calif.

The strike support resolution, acted upon as a special order on the opening day of the convention, was presented by John W. Livingston, UAW-CIO vice president and Aircraft Dept. director.

He called the aircraft industry "the biggest bunch of gold-plated panhandlers in the country" who must be taught to step up their wages. He pleaded that the men who build the fighter planes defending the country should earn as much as those who build autos and radios or who make steel.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the UAW and the CIO scored the industry for the "second class economic citizenship" it imposes on its workers through wages 20c-25c less than those paid to automobile workers.

The North American workers were reported standing firm in the face of a high-powered "back to work" drive by the company. Management efforts to get production of Sabre-Jet fighters resumed have failed so far.

Citing defense contracts which comprise 95% of North American's income, the CIO resolution said "the corporation is failing the American people by shirking its responsibility to the defense production program in order to lead the fight to maintain the unjust wage differential which makes 'second class citizens' of aircraft workers."

The basic strike issue is "equality in pay and working conditions" for North American workers in comparison with other aircraft plants under UAW-CIO contract.

The CIO resolution charged that the company's strike-breaking campaign has the "passive if not active support of agencies of the federal government," and it called on the Defense Dept. "to cease its obvious indifference to the need of the defense production program." And CIO urged North American management to negotiate a "decent and honorable" settlement with the UAW members.

N. Y. Bus Drivers Awarded Highest Wage In Industry

A TOP WAGE of $2 an hour—the highest in the industry — was awarded last week by arbitrators in a dispute between the CIO Transport Workers and nine privately-owned New York City bus companies.

The arbitration proceedings grew out of a 28-day strike last January for a 40-hour week and a pay increase.

The panel awarded the 40-hour week and a 26.5c hourly pay increase to the 8000 employes.

The top rate of $2 was set for bus drivers of the New York City Omnibus Corp. and the Fifth Avenue Coach Co. to preserve—in the words of the panel—"the historic differential" between these lines and the others.

On the other lines a ceiling rate of $1.925 was set. In addition, the award granted 10c an hour retroactive pay to Jan. 29, the day the strike ended, to employes of all lines except the bankrupt Third Avenue Transit Corp. These will receive retroactive pay of 5c an hour.

Michael Mann, CIO regional director in New York, was the union representative on the panel which wrestled with 397 issues involved in the dispute. Walter Lynch was chairman and John F. Curtin was industry member.

'What's Good For U.S. Is Good For CIO'

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A CONVENTION dedicated to the concept that "what's good for the nation is good for CIO" last week launched the Congress of Industrial Organizations on another year of working and fighting for the betterment of mankind at home and abroad.

Delegates from large unions and small, answering the inspiration of the convention slogan emblazoned above the stage of Cleveland's huge Public Hall, carefully worked out a program for a "great human crusade" intended, as CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said upon his re-election, "to advance the basic human and democratic values that free men and free nations believe in" in a world of peace.

The resolutions and other convention actions that established CIO policy and programs for the coming year all reflected the principle that CIO is not a narrow economic pressure group and that its interests are best served when members and officers devote themselves to the general welfare.

Harmony, Hard Work

It was a convention of harmony and hard work, of generally unanimous agreement on implementing the long-established principles that underlie every CIO action.

It was a convention that re-elected the officers without opposition. In addition to Reuther, those renamed were Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, and the eight vice presidents:

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers, Pres. Joseph N. Curran of the Maritime Union, Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Clothing Workers, and Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of the Steelworkers.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, who for many years had nominated the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray, placed Reuther's name before the convention. Executive Board nominees of international unions were unopposed (see Page 15).

Gain With Community

The delegates' firm conviction that "what's good for the nation is good for CIO" found tangible expression in Reuther's keynote and post-election addresses.

"The CIO has said from its very beginning," he declared in his opening address, "that we take on the responsibilities that are ours not as a narrow economic pressure group, but on the basis that only as we work with men of good will in other segments of our free society can we find answers to the basic problems, and that in effect we can make progress only as we work to make progress for the whole community . . .

"We believe sincerely that the struggle for peace in the world, the struggle for freedom, is inseparably bound together with the struggle for social justice. You cannot believe in peace and you cannot really believe in freedom unless you are willing to work and fight for social justice."

The same theme of "what's good for the nation is good for CIO" came up again and again in resolutions and in speeches of CIO leaders.

In renewing the CIO's pledge to spread the gospel of unionism, the convention declared that a labor movement "worthy of the name" cannot ignore the plight of the unorganized, and must respond to their need for better lives and greater security.

Among other actions reflecting the same view:

TAFT-HARTLEY: The convention condemned Pres. Eisenhower and his Administration for not keeping pledges to revise T-H, and demanded its repeal despite a plea by Sec. of Labor James Mitchell that it be content with amendments. However, it applauded his stand that at least some sections are "really dangerous to labor, really loaded, really unfair," and again when he promised to work for a higher minimum wage (see Page 4).

LEGISLATION: A detailed program, aimed at achieving social, economic and military strength for the whole country, was adopted. A sales tax under any name was opposed because is bears most heavily on those least able to afford it, and the Administration was asked to draw up an aggressive program to extend the economy and assure jobs by creating additional consumer purchasing power (see Page 13).

POLITICAL ACTION: A program "to integrate the family voter" into the CIO program so as "to insure good government at all levels" for the benefit of the entire nation was approved. CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll warned that "old party hacks" will strive for nominations next year in the hope of riding into office on a liberal tide (see Page 16).

FOREIGN AFFAIRS: A broad program for halting Russian aggression and making peace secure by planting the seeds of economic and social democracy in the "have-not" nations was adopted following Sec. of State Dulles' request for labor support of a bipartisan foreign policy. Reuther assured him that on basic policy, "we are all Americans and we'll work together on that basis" (see Page 12).

GUARANTEED ANNUAL WAGE: Described by Reuther as a major goal of many CIO unions, it was hailed as a source of tremendous potential stability for the entire economy (see Page 5).

NO-RAID: Top officers were authorized to sign a no-raid agreement with the AFL as a prelude to further labor unity talks that may redound to the benefit of every American worker. However, a continuing fight was pledged against raids on CIO unions by some AFL affiliates (see Page 2).

EXPANSION of the CIO drive to organize the unorganized was pledged by the National CIO convention in a resolution that reaffirmed past promises to bring the benefits of unionism to workers in the South.

The delegates acted after CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, who also is director of organization and councils, declared that the greatest safeguard workers can have is "to join and build strong unions."

Riffe briefly reviewed the changes in CIO organization setup during the last year and cited the experience of his own union, the CIO Steelworkers, as typical of the success all internationals have had under the new arrangement. It has resulted, he said, in the addition of 449,000 new CIO members since the last convention.

"Does that indicate the CIO is falling apart?" he asked. "I do not think it does. I feel we have done a fair job."

More Power And Strength

Riffe said he disagreed with those union leaders who feel that a large treasury is the answer to their problem when a fight looms.

"The answer to all our problems together," he asserted, "is to organize the unorganized workers, no matter what industry they work in. This is a responsibility I take very seriously, and I intend to work very closely with all of you to get the job done."

He called on the delegates to help organizational efforts in all industries because "it gives your union more power and strength, more security, every time you help organize a new member into any internatoinal union affiliated with the CIO."

Riffe urged everybody "to lay aside any petty differences you may have locally and join with the other organizers, working for any international union, with the council offices in the communities where you work, and help us to do this job of bringing under the great banner of the CIO all unorganized men and women."

Drive In The South

Vice Pres. A. T. Jones of the CIO Communications Workers said his union's success in the South is proof that the workers there can be organized.

Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock of the CIO Textile Workers recalled that organization of the unorganized was the principal reason for formation of the CIO in 1935. It is not the workers who make organization in the South difficult, he maintained, but the bitter and skillful anti-union campaigns of the employers and their cruel reprisals against union members.

The resolution pointed out that "concentrated pockets of unorganized workers will always be a threat" to unionized sectors. A labor movement "worthy of the name," it added, cannot disregard the low living and security levels of unorganized workers, and must respond to their needs.

"We believe unorganized workers want to join free unions of their own choosing," it said bluntly. "We are not going to rest until every unorganized worker has had a chance to join a union without fear of reprisal or intimidation."

HST Applauded For 'Courage' Against GOP Charges; Brownell Denounced

A DEMAND for the resignation of Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell was voiced as the convention by standing vote adopted a resolution supporting former Pres. Truman in the Harry Dexter White case.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther praised Truman for demonstrating "the same courage and the same old-fashioned guts to fight against reaction that he demonstrated fighting Communism."

"It gives you hope when you see men like Harry Truman face the American people with the facts. Out of those facts you begin to understand the conspiracy, the politically-inspired conspiracy that is being directed against the integrity of the people who hold high offices and against the basic civil liberties of the American people," Reuther said.

CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Beirne called for Brownell's resignation "for malfeasance in office and for not carrying out his constitutional duties."

Beirne, who is CIO Communications Workers president, said " . . . all of us can ask the question where is America going when the cheap, simple and understandable practices of men of the McCarthy-Velde-Jenner stripe can so influence those entrusted with the reins of government of the United States, so that the chief law officer of the United States makes that kind of unfounded, ungrounded, unnecessary and malicious attacks for the sake of a few, measly Republican votes."

Beirne said the Attorney General is "your protector and my protector in enforcing the laws of these United States. Regardless of what party has the reins of government, he is there as Attorney General to serve you and me and all the people of America in enforcing the laws within the pattern of law enforcement that has been long established in America.

"Herbert Brownell . . . went outside that pattern. His actions should cause every God-fearing, law-abiding citizen to worry about his own safety under the laws of America," he said.

Beirne charged that Brownell "invaded the privacy and protection afforded by law to every American, for what he can do and did do in the case of Harry S. Truman of Independence, Mo., he can do to anyone in these United States."

Mitchell Pledges Drive To Up Minimum Pay

LABOR SEC. James P. Mitchell last week promised American workers that the Eisenhower Administration will work for improved labor laws—boosting and extending the minimum wage and removing "unjust" provisions of Taft-Hartley.

But he came out flatly against outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, which he said "in many of its features is sound, fair and just."

Mitchell, the first Republican Secretary of Labor to address a CIO convention, said that he is "for removal" of those features which are "really dangerous to labor, really loaded, really unfair."

Delegates to the convention gave Mitchell a warm personal welcome. CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, in introducing the secretary, a former management official, pointed out that he has "a deserved reputation for dealing fairly and honorably with organized labor.

HIS ADDRESS, however, was applauded at only four points. Two of these were when he called for extending the coverage of the minimum wage low and for increasing it to "a more realistic level in keeping with present-day wage levels."

Delegates also clapped when he approved CIO's stand opposing admission of the Soviet Union to the Intl. Labor Organization on terms excluding the USSR from obligations of membership, and again when he called for filling of government labor posts abroad with people from the labor movement.

Mitchell told a press conference that Pres. Eisenhower had not read his speech in advance, but that he was confident it reflected basic Administration labor policies.

"One of the first things to which I want to devote myself with your help and the help of other unions," Mitchell said, "is repairing and raising the floor which we want under our national wage structure. Our minimum wage statute can be a great bulwark against substandards of living."

At present 40 million workers out of the total of 63 million, Mitchell said, have no federal protection against substandard wages. He said that 18 million were exempted because the act specifically excluded industries in which they are employed, and that 20 million others—farmers, professionals, government workers, etc.—also are not covered.

Mitchell told the press that agricultural workers are not being considered for added coverage. He also said that he definitely expects to recommend an increase in the present 75c minimum, but would not indicate the amount.

"I do know that the CIO platform calls for $1.25," he said. "Just as soon as we come up with our findings, the Labor Dept. will make recommendations to the President for action by the Congress during the coming session."

Turning to Taft-Hartley, Mitchell predicted that "there will be changes," but made clear that "what will be recommended is still being discussed."

"In my dealings with you on this matter I can pledge you a sympathetic audience, an open mind, and my advice," Mitchell said. "I can also promise you honest, straight dealing."

The Secretary said, however, that, in considering Taft-Hartley changes, he would oppose any proposal which would "leave the government powerless to deal with national emergency strikes," handle the Communist problem "solely as a labor union problem," or encourage unions or union officials "to be irresponsible."

HE SAID that he also would oppose any proposals through which employers could escape their obligation to bargain collectively, or which would make federal law a device "for breaking or undermining unions."

He said he would support all proposed changes that will minimize government intervention in labor disputes, encourage parties in a dispute to seek settlement, and "contribute to more peaceful and mature labor relations in America."

Ike Greets CIO, Pledges Message On T-H Revision

A PROMISE to present Administration proposals on Taft-Hartley amendments to Congress in January was voiced by Pres. Eisenhower in a message of greeting to the CIO convention.

In a letter to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, the President said in part:

"I know you have a vital interest in the Taft-Hartley Act. I have previously stated my conviction that this law, while fundamentally sound, should be changed in some respects.

"For months, members of the Administration have been engaged in a searching study of the act. Our objective is to recommend improvement in order to make possible a more free and vigorous collective bargaining process, to reduce government intervention in labor-management relations, and to promote sound and peaceful industrial relationships so essential to the economic well-being of American workingmen and women and to the welfare of all elements of our nation.

"I shall submit the resulting suggestions to the Congress when it convenes in January. In formulating these suggestions, our guide will be the fundamental principle that the law must be absolutely fair to the laboring men and women of this nation, to management, and to the public at large."

The President said "America is still dedicated to achieving" a world of peace and freedom and added, "I know that American labor holds to that dedication."

Reuther welcomed Eisenhower's message and pledged CIO's support to the President in his efforts for world peace, and said "we will work with him on domestic issues when his proposals meet the needs of the American people."

GOP 'Broken Promises' On T-H, State Anti-Union Drives Scored

THE CIO convention condemned Pres. Eisenhower and his Administration for "not keeping his solemn pledge" on revising the Taft-Hartley Act and pledged a continuing, twin campaign for T-H repeal and against "an equally great threat" of state anti-union legislation was voted.

Calling for a return to "a fair and just labor relations act based on the principles of the Wagner Act," the convention said:

"During the last presidential campaign, Pres. Eisenhower campaigned on a program of making the Taft-Hartley Law more satisfactory to labor and of getting rid of the law's union-busting provisions.

"THE PASSAGE of 'fair and just' Taft-Hartley amendments is a commitment of Pres. Eisenhower and his Republican Administration.

"The CIO . . . stated that notwithstanding our conviction that Taft-Hartley should be repealed, we were prepared realistically to support any sincere attempt to bring fairness and justice into the law.

"Such amendments were not enacted by the Congress at its last session; such amendments were never proposed by the President to the Congress.

"It is the position of the CIO that Pres. Eisenhower and his Administration are not keeping his solemn pledge to the American people to amend the Taft-Hartley so as to make it a just, fair and decent law."

ANOTHER resolution warned of twin threats from the states, in the form of "the so-called 'right to work' laws passed by state legislatures, and the judge-made law in the form of hundreds of injunctions in labor disputes imposing disabling handicaps on union organizing."

Local courts, particularly but not exclusively in the South, "have become virtual injunction factories," the resolution said. It warned the situation in state courts now parallels "the scandalous injunction situation" prevailing in federal courts before enactment of the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

CIO described the increasing state moves to displace the federal government as "the atomization of legislation in the field of labor"—a step encouraged by Taft-Hartley provisions.

And the convention warned that the next target of "the sweat shop brigade" which promotes "right to work" and "states' rights" measures will be "enactment of Taft-Hartley amendments which will provide even greater leeway to local open shop interests in procuring state legislation to further their sweat-shop economics."

What A Difference In Words

The plain and simple English language is being turned into gobbledegook by the promoters of the drive in the states against labor.

Citing such slogans as "right to work" and "states' rights" as "transparently fraudulent," the CIO convention offered these convenient definitions:

"By 'right to work' they really mean the right of sweat shop employers to work their employes for long hours and short pay.

"By 'states' rights' the sweat shop brigade means the right of a state to enact harsher restrictions on the rights of workers to join unions than (in) other states.

"Curiously enough," the resolution noted, "'states' rights' as used by these interests under no circumstances comprehends the right of a state to enact more liberal legislation. Nor does the slogan 'right to work' include the right of a worker to a job all the year around."

Ike Urged By Thimmes To Back Public Housing

CHAIRMAN James G. Thimmes of the CIO Housing Committee urged the Eisenhower Administration to plan "the full scale resumption of the program to build low-rent housing for low-income families."

Thimmes, CIO and Steelworkers vice president, is a member of the President's Advisory Committee on Housing. Noting reports that the committee's recommendations will be unanimous, Thimmes told the convention:

"Subsidized public housing for this bottom group in our economic scale is an essential cornerstone of a sound national housing policy and of a recommendation (of the President's committee) that is to be unanimous.

"Nor can there be an unanimous report that does not include a practical program to enable ordinary workers to purchase low-price homes at liberal mortgage terms.

"This, too, is a must—because unless the ordinary worker is enabled to buy a new home, the demand for new housing will decline and a major step will have been taken toward unemployment and recession."

Dulles Asks Labor Aid For Bipartisan Policy

U. S. LABOR support of a bipartisan foreign policy was urged by Sec. of State John Foster Dulles in addressing the convention.

Dulles conceded differences between CIO and Administration viewpoints. But, he said, "We share the same basic viewpoint in relation to world affairs." He told the convention to "steadily assert" its views on "those of us who act officially in Washington and also upon the American people for their word is the last word."

Responding, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther pledged CIO to do "everything within its power in the quest for universal peace and freedom." He assured the Administration that on basic foreign policy matters, "we are all Americans and we'll work together on that basis."

Reuther said the free labor movement knows something of the struggle against communism.

"We deal in in the practical, day-to-day, bread and butter fight against Communist power," he asserted, adding that the struggle for peace and freedom "must be tied to the struggle for social justice all over the world."

Mention by Reuther of Gen. George C. Marshall and Dean Acheson as former secretaries of state who had addressed CIO conventions brought table-pounding applause from the delegates.

"Your CIO knows from its own experience how insidious Communist infiltration can be," he said.

CABINET MEMBER—Sec. of State John Foster Dulles is escorted on stage (left) by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the ACWA, chairman of the CIO International Affairs Committee. At right, Dulles chats with USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Potofsky before address condemning Russ aggression.

"You have fought it and helped fight it. Out of your honorable effort you must have come to realize that this is no time to fragmentize the free world into a multiplicity of weak and unrelated political units."

The nation's great military establishment is necessary to deter aggression, Dulles said.

"But military accomplishments alone are not a sufficient basis for foreign policy," he mentioned. "They provide no great contrast with the despots. They too can build great military establishments—and they do. It is up to us to produce also accomplishments in welfare and justice that the despots cannot match."

Dulles said 600 million people peacefully won their political independence from the West during the past 10 years while a similar number were impressed into Communist servitude. Such a system of enslavement is doomed to ultimate collapse, he declared.

"All rulers, however absolute, depend on the productivity of the ruled," he said. "You cannot dig coal with bayonets."

The government official commented on the uprisings last June in East Germany where, he said, captive workers were "being exploited to the breaking point." The workers' mood, Dulles continued, preoccupies their Soviet rulers.

Diplomatic and moral initiative is now in the hands of the free world, said Dulles, but some cautions must be observed. He warned against talks where the probable result "would be an apparent moral approval of the Kremlin's rule over the people of 15 once independent nations."

"Also," he warned, "we should never, as the price for admission to a conference, abandon basic positions and programs in Asia or Europe."

Carey Predicts Victory For Annual Wage Drive

A PREDICTION that labor will defeat opposition by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers to win the guaranteed annual wage was voiced by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey at the convention.

Recalling victories over the same opposition to a federal minimum wage, unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation and non-contributory pensions, Carey said the big business groups will fight "tooth and nail."

"They will fight us across the bargaining table, in Congress, in the state legislatures; they will fight us in the daily press and over television and radio," Carey predicted.

Carey, who is president of the CIO Electrical Workers, forecast a "socialism" smear campaign and appeals to ignorance and a battle against pressure groups and "lobbies with million-dollar slush funds."

Ultimate defeat of these tactics was seen by Carey. He voiced regret that "big business does not have the brains to realize that in proposing a guaranteed annual wage system that labor is doing industry a favor. But because big business traditionally operates with a skull-full of dollar signs instead of a skull-full of brains, it cannot grasp this economic fact."

HE POINTED out that the great majority of the CIO's membership—represented by the Auto Workers, the Steelworkers, Electrical Workers and other unions—are committed to eventual achievement of a guaranteed annual wage.

'Future Of Free Asia Hangs In Balance,' Ex-Envoy Bowles Says

"THE FUTURE of free Asia is right now hanging in the balance," Chester Bowles, former U. S. ambassador to India told the CIO convention.

"If any group in America understands the hopes and fears of the Asians, it is the men and women of the labor movement," Bowles said. "In their time, they have seen enough of adversity to understand its effect on others."

Few Americans have ever gone hungry, the former envoy told the convention, but "it is not so long ago that American working people knew the stark facts of unemployment, the fear of an insecure old age, the wrench that comes when they saw their children leave school before their time. American working men, too, have faced harsh anti-labor legislation and many of them have known racial discrimination."

HE WARNED that "flat tops, long-range bombers, tanks and machine guns are essential to our security. If we drop our military guard, the Soviet Union may be tempted to attack."

Bowles argued that American military power will not stop this gnawing of hunger in millions of Asian stomachs.

"It will not stop the ravages of malaria and other diseases in Asian villages. It will not help Asian people to read and write. It will not stifle the insidious propaganda of the Communists," he said.

He expressed the hope that the U. S. labor movement would continue to throw its great weight behind "every constructive proposal for creating a more dynamic and secure democracy here at home and furthering peace and greater stability abroad."

Bowles recalled that it was 91 years since Abraham Lincoln set the stage for racial equality in the Emancipation Proclamation. But, he warned:

"Discrimination still exists in most parts of America, which is not only a blight upon our community life, but is dangerously destructive to our influence among the two-thirds of the world which is colored. We must join finally to erase this discrimination so that all our people may become truly free."

He called for support of the Point Four program in Asia and Africa where "it can effectively help to eliminate poverty, misery and frustration which leads to Communist upheavals."

Finally, he said, "we must keep our people, our capital and our machines fully employed in the creation of an expanding America dedicated to peace and plenty."

U. S. LABOR support for freedom-seeking Asians was praised by Chester Bowles, ex-diplomat.

A Story All Over Asia

Former U. S. Ambassador Bowles told this story to delegates:

All over Asia there is a story of the Prime Minister of the little country of Monaco, who under the Marshall Plan asked for $10 million, and was told: "We can't get you that, that is not a big amount. How is your Communist problem in Monaco?"

He said, "We have no Communist problem, we are poor but sensible people!" This man shook his head and said, "How do you expect us to get the American Congress to give you the money if you have no Communists?"

He went all the way to France and said to the Foreign Minister, "My friend, I'm in trouble. We have a desperate economic problem. Our people are hungry. We have no money. I can't get a loan from the United States on the Marshall Plan.

"I have no Communists. I can't get the money. Could you loan me a few Communists for a few days, and let them come to Monaco and shake their fists and march behind banners, and the American newsreel photographers will take pictures, they will be shown all over America, and I will get my $10 million?"

And the French Minister stroked his beard and looked out the window and said, "No, we would like to be a good neighbor, but France needs every Communist she has."

Haywood Memorial—

He Still Rolls The Union On

THE LATE ALLAN S. Haywood is still helping to "Roll The Union On." Speakers at memorial services for him brought his crusading spirit to the CIO convention last week.

The love and respect for the late CIO executive vice president and organization director were reflected by the silence of the 700 delegates while taps were sounded in the darkened auditorium.

It was a silence they observed during the entire service which concluded the long first day's sessions.

Fittingly CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther introduced as the first speaker at the services Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communication Workers. He later presented Haywood's brother and son, both named Albert.

"IN A REAL sense the bringing of the Communications Workers into the great family of CIO was one of Allan Haywood's greatest achievements, because he did a great deal in cooperation with Joe Beirne and the officers to bring that union together and to bring that union into the family of CIO," Reuther said.

And it was fitting that Beirne read first a resolution in memory of Haywood, the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray and seven other CIO and liberal leaders.

"It was characteristic of Allan Haywood that he was speaking to a meeting of CIO union people (at Wilkes-Barre) at the time he was stricken," Beirne read. He then read a special resolution in memory of Haywood alone, departing from the text to conclude:

"In the tradition of Allan S. Haywood, we shall 'Roll The Union On,' on to the heights which his spirit, ever with us, caused us to reach for. May his immortal soul rest in peace."

JAMES THIMMES, Steelworkers vice president, said that when Haywood died in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., last Feb. 21 "he was among his people—union people—in the hard coal region and in a city which was named for two great liberals from the land of his birth, Wilkes and Barre." (Haywood was born in England.)

"He spoke of their efforts to advance the cause of humanity," Thimmes said. "He related the struggle of men for liberty, justice and freedom. His voice was clear and strong but his manner was quiet and composed, as a man who was confident of the rightness of his convictions.

"He stated that he was going to conclude by telling the Flannigan story; that the last time he wanted to tell the story was at the CIO convention in New York.

"These words had no more left his lips until he turned to me saying: 'I think I am going to collapse,' and died. To me it seemed as though Phil Murray with a smile had said, 'No, Old Pal, come over here with me, your work is done.'

"I think his whole life and philosophy are summed up in the title of the song he loved so well—'We will roll the union on.' Those six words tell the story."

In Memoriam

Allan S. Haywood

Allan S. Haywood, that great, warmhearted trade unionist, has left our ranks. His strong voice, raised so often in the songs of battle, of challenge and of victory, has been stilled.

Our friend and leader, who devoted a lifetime to fighting exploitation and hate, is with us now only in memory. But never shall we forget Allan S. Haywood, who fought countless union battles and whose tremendous spirit inspired a thousand picket lines.

Never was there a more industrious warrior for labor's rights, never a happier warrior. On every trade union battlefield in America, the memory of Allan Haywood will always live.

He was a true disciple of democracy, believing firmly in the wisdom of the people to shape their own destiny. Allan S. Haywood fashioned the unions he built in the true image of democracy, with an abiding concern for the general welfare.

Allan S. Haywood, humanitarian, warrior, trade union leader—we mourn your loss. In your memory, we solemnly pledge: Never, until victory is ours, shall we cease the fight for the great, humanitarian goals which you espoused—brotherhood and justice for all men.

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Like you, we know the path to these goals in the democratic trade union movement. In the tradition of Allan S. Haywood, we shall "Roll the Union On."

FDR Memorial On Potomac Urged As World Shrine For Free People

A MEMORIAL to Franklin D. Roosevelt, to be erected on the banks of the Potomac River in Washington, was urged on Congress in a convention resolution that looked back to the late President's remarkable record of accomplishments.

The convention called for a memorial which, "like the Washington, Lincoln and Jefferson Memorials, shall ever stand as a national shrine for free peoples the world over."

The CIO formally endorsed a resolution to establish a commission to plan a Roosevelt memorial introduced in the last session of Congress by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.), and called upon CIO affiliates and their members to support a fitting memorial.

The resolution noted that Roosevelt imprinted his beliefs, ideals and individuality upon history as have few other individuals, and that they, with his works, "will remain for all time."

"The personality of Franklin Roosevelt still towers like a giant over the world," it continued. "Even in today's conservative atmosphere, his memory remains deep in the hearts of the people, despite the continued attacks upon the man and his works by those critics who still dream of a return to the pre-Roosevelt world . . .

"To the Roosevelt era, we owe today's great pillars of national economic security. Social security, the 40-hour work week, a national minimum wage, FHA home mortgages, the insurance of bank deposits, fair regulation of stock and commodity markets, and public housing are only a few of the legislative enactments directly attributable to the Roosevelt era.

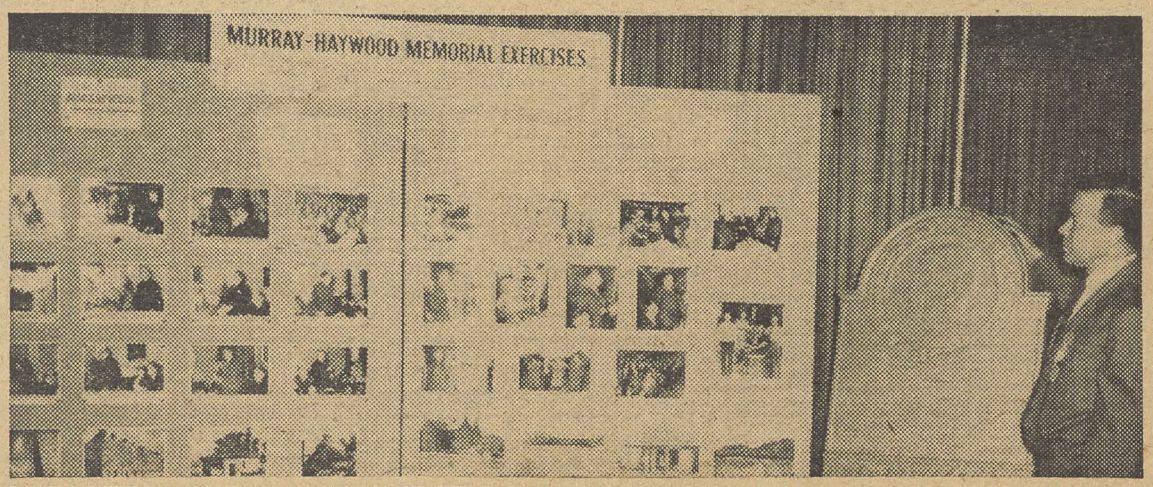
"The ideal of world unity in a world of free and equal partners was a Roosevelt dream. The United Nations stands today as at least a partial fulfillment of that dream."

Roosevelt took office, the resolution recalled, when the U. S. economy and industry lay prostrate," and business and financial leaders "offered only platitudes to the people."

"He recognized the need to assure mass purchasing power as the base upon which the mass production economy of America could flourish.

"To the Roosevelt era, we of organized labor owe our present existence as a force in American life. Labor gained the Wagner Act which guaranteed workers the right to organize and to bargain collectively.

"This law was our Magna Charta. It gave to us recognition both from the empolyer and the community. We would be lax in our duty, and we would be deserting our best tradition, were we ever to neglect the memory of Franklin Delano Roosevelt."



DEPARTED ARE REMEMBERED—CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther examines plaque and photographs from the recent home-town memorial services honoring the late Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood at Blantyre and Barnsley in Great Britain.

CIO Mourns For 9 Leaders

A SPECIAL resolution adopted by the CIO convention paid tribute to nine labor, political and liberal leaders who died in recent months.

"At our last convention a special memorial service paid tribute to the life, work and memory of Philip Murray," it said. "That tribute we reaffirm and pay again today.

"In the year that followed the tragic loss of Philip Murray, death has taken from us a number of our leaders and friends.

"Allan S. Haywood, true and valiant, who worked day and night in labor's cause for many years, passed to his reward Feb. 21."

THE RESOLUTION also memorialized Mariano Bishop, executive vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, as a "great loss of his union and the entire CIO."

Tribute was paid to Pres. Irving Simon of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers "as a life-long believer in democratic unionism."

William J. Donovan, director of Dist. 28 of the CIO Steelworkers, who died shortly before the convention, was praised for playing "an important role in building the strength of the Steelworkers union."

"IN ADDITION, four great friends of labor in America were taken from us during the year," the memorial said.

Sen. Robert F. Wagner (N.Y.) was remembered as "the principal author of the National Labor Relations Act—the Wagner Act —which was truly a Magna Charta for the unions of America."

Sen. Robert LaFollette (Wis.), son of the liberal senator from the same state, was remembered for his work as chairman of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee.

Former Labor Sec. Maurice Tobin, who spoke at many CIO conventions, was called "a true and devoted friend of democratic unions, a foe of totalitarianism in any form, a fighter for labor rights."

The resolution recalled that the late Most Reverend Francis J. Haas, Bishop of Grand Rapids, eulogized Murray at his funeral mass as a "great, good man." "We can echo Bishop Haas' words in his own memory," the resolution said.

PRAISE for the late Allan S. Haywood was voiced at memorial service by Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of the CIO Steelworkers.

Sales Tax Blasted As 'Most Unfair Of All'

Unqualified opposition to a federal sales tax "by whatever name it may be called" was voiced by the CIO convention, which called it "the most unfair and inequitable of all types of taxes." Text of this major resolution:

A SALES TAX is the most unfair and inequitable of all types of taxes. It is imposed without regard for income levels, types of expenditures, family status or state of employment. It applies with equal force to the sick, the infirm, the disabled, the retired, the pensioned, the unemployed and even the unfortunate few who are on public relief.

A sales tax hits the low- and middle-income families much harder than the upper- and high-income recipients. Because low- and middle-income people spend almost all their income on the necessities of life, a sales tax hits with less force and less vigor the higher-income people who save rather than spend large segments of their income.

Money which is saved is not subject to the sales tax. According to the Federal Reserve Board, 50% of the families who received the lowest incomes in 1950 spent all they earned, while the top 10%, the high-income recipients, saved three-fourths of the total net savings set aside in that year. Those who save pay no sales tax on the income saved. Those who are unfortunate enough to be unable to save pay the sales tax every time they buy the necessities of life.

Sales taxes and excise taxes at the federal, state and local levels in 1948 took almost 12% of the income of individuals earning less than $1000; 8.5% of the income of individuals earnings between $2000 and $4000; and only 4.5% of the income of those earning $7500 or more.

The Administration indicated earlier this year that it was studying the possibilities of recommending a federal sales tax to Congress. After considerable public discussion, the President announced that the Administration would not recommend a sales tax to the Congress. The President did not say that the sales tax was unfair or injurious, he simply stated that it was a tax used by the states which the federal government should not preempt.

The President announced simultaneously that the Administration is considering and may recommend a manufacturers' excise tax. A manufacturers' excise tax is merely a sales tax by a different name.

It is imposed at the manufacturing level rather than the retail level, but is ultimately paid by the consumer. Moreover, by the time this tax reaches the retail level, it is increased by percentage markups. The manufacturers' sales tax, therefore, is even worse than a retail sales tax.

RESOLVED: The CIO will vigorously and forcefully oppose any effort to impose a federal sales tax, by whatever name it may be called.

The CIO declares its opposition to all state and local sales taxes. It will oppose any additional taxes of this sort, and will work for the repeal of all sales taxes heretofore imposed.

Tax Relief For Consumers Urged To Prevent Recession

A TAX program designed "to grant tax relief to the great mass of American consumers and thus increase buying power and stimulate consumption" was proposed by the CIO convention.

Such a program, CIO said, "would have a great effect upon reversing the downward trends of production and employment that now are appearing."

A tax policy statement pointed out that "upper and high-income brackets" now stand to gain most from reductions in individual income taxes, lowering of the corporation income tax rate, expiration of the excess profits tax and lowering of excise taxes scheduled for early in 1954.

As part of a tax policy to boost consumer buying power, CIO proposed:

- Reduction as scheduled on Apr. 1 of excise taxes, and eventual total removal of such levies.
- Increasing the personal income tax exemption from the present low level of $600 per person (only $310 in terms of 1939 purchasing power) to at least $800 immediately and perhaps $1000 "if the need for stimulating purchasing power arises."
- Re-enactment of the excess profits tax "if the need for revenue becomes sufficiently acute." (The federal deficit was some $10 billion for fiscal 1953, was cut roughly in half for the present year, but will be back close to $10 billion for the 1955 fiscal year.)
- Continuing of the present 52% corporate tax rate, instead of allowing the scheduled drop to 47%.
- Closing of numerous existing tax loopholes "which permit many to escape their fair share of taxes," including tax-exempt bonds, the oil-gas-mineral depletion allowance, capital gains gimmicks, lack of a withholding tax on dividends and interest, family partnership and stock option deals, low estate tax rates, split income provisions, and lack of revenue enforcement funds.

Policy Adopted On Affiliations

The CIO convention adopted a policy statement, on affiliation by individual officers with other organizations, declaring that "it is the policy of the CIO that any officer of the CIO who joins any organization not officially endorsed by the CIO shall, in so doing, make it clear that his affiliation is personal and not organizational."

There's Nothing 'Healthy' About A Recession, CIO Statement Warns

A CONSTRUCTIVE program to put the nation back on the road to economic progress and expansion was offered to the Eisenhower Administration in a CIO convention resolution that also laid down nine basic points which must be considered in any plan to halt a downward drift.

"The CIO rejects the false doctrine being spread in many business publications that a recession would constitute a 'healthy adjustment' or a mere 'corrective movement'," the resolution declared.

"In the light of the still vast unfilled needs of millions of people both at home and abroad, any halt in our economic progress would weaken our ability to meet world responsibility."

The GOP Administration to date, the resolution said, has provided "small comfort in the face of the present situation," despite Pres. Eisenhower's expressed support earlier this year of the Full Employment Act with its goals of maximum employment, production and purchasing power.

INSTEAD, the resolution went on, its policies have produced the Treasury's hard money and high interest program, which has boosted prices in every phase of the economy where credit is a factor; they have killed the Reconstruction Finance Corp., and have led to failure to develop a program to deal with the farm price crisis.

"An effective anti-depression program must be organized by the federal government," the resolution noted. "Local and state governments as well as private economic groups must assist; but financial, social and political considerations make it imperative that the national Administration recognize its central responsibility."

The factors the CIO feels must be covered in any program to meet this situation are:

1. Tax legislation giving priority in tax relief to low and lower-middle income groups. The resolution called for higher personal income tax exemptions, removal of excise taxes which restrict consumption, and no new sales tax or manufacturers' excise levy in any form.

2. Special attention to the problems of families with incomes of less than $3000 a year—a group which constitutes "a vast, largely untapped market for goods of all types." Federal programs urged include rising minimum wages to $1.25 an hour; expanding social security coverage and benefits; national health insurance, anti-discrimination legislation, and improvements in educational opportunities.

3. A "clear-cut" reversal of the Administration's banker-dominated money policies. The resolution noted the recent easing of the money supply by the Federal Reserve System, but called for a return to the low interest rates in effect until last spring, with the FRB, the Treasury and housing agencies leading the way.

4. Other steps to encourage new home building and improvement of existing dwellings. A strong residential construction industry, the resolution said, "is a prime requisite of a dynamic economy."

5. A modern unemployment compensation system. Present benefits are no longer related to the needs or earnings of workers, the resolution said, and in some states arbitrary and unjustifiable barriers have been raised against payments. An overhauling and ultimate replacement by a federal compensation system to cope with a national problem was called for.

6. Discharge of responsibilities well by private groups, including labor and management. This would include bargaining to give workers reasonable wages reflecting an adequate share in the profits from increased productivity and, where possible, annual wage agreements to help fortify and stabilize workers' consumption patterns.

7. A realistic farm program to restore the farmers' income position and to encourage increased consumption of farm products.

8. An end to the Administration's "doctrinaire devotion" to budget balancing even at the expense of national welfare.

9. A well planned program of public works to alleviate pressing social needs as well as to serve as a counter-depression instrument through creation of jobs.

'Time Is Ripe' For Push For Annual Wage Plans

CIO SUPPORT of the efforts of affiliates to win the guaranteed annual wage was reaffirmed by the convention in a resolution which declared "the time is ripe for action."

"World necessities drive the nation to maintain full production," the resolution explained, "and corporations, unions and government alike are at a stage where our demand can be realized.

"We again call upon representatives of business to recognize their responsibility to enter into concrete plans for guaranteeing workers this security without further delay."

The resolution again put the CIO on the side of integrating, where practical, guaranteed annual wage plans and unemployment insurance as a method of helping both programs.

"We urge all those interested in full employment and full production," it said, "to join in supporting our efforts for guaranteed wages. Our demands are not only practical but they will be an important lever for assuring the continued economic progress of our country and our democratic allies."

Highlights Of The Keynote Address

The Kind Of Labor Moven

By WALTER P. REUTHER
President of the CIO

WE BELIEVE in labor unity. We want labor unity. We shall continue to work in good faith to achieve labor unity because we realize, as does any sincere trade unionist, that the whole of the labor movement is more important than any segment of the labor movement.

We also believe sincerely that the whole labor movement is more important than any person or any group within the labor movement.

We want labor unity on an honorable basis, on a basis in which the basic democratic trade union principles upon which the CIO has been built are protected, expanded and implemented in terms of the practical work of a united labor movement. We believe that labor unity without principle is labor unity without purpose.

As we approach the question of labor unity, we are not concerned with jobs or positions or leadership. Nothing would make me happier than if we could achieve a united labor movement in the image of the principles of the CIO, and I can go back to Detroit to help do the work of the Auto Workers, whom I grew up with in this labor movement of ours. We want to build not around personality but about these fundamental principles which are essential to the building of a dynamic and expanding labor movement that has a sense of vision, a sense of responsibility.

A Major Correction

We believe that the AFL leadership, that George Meany and his associates are acting in good faith just as we have been acting in good faith. I think the no-raiding agreement is the first essential step. We hope that the other steps can be taken in the period ahead.

I feel, however, obligated to point out to this convention and to the membership of our various unions back home what I think is necessary to set the record straight. I regret most sincerely that the memory of my good friend, George Meany, has failed.

WALTER P. REUTHER

The other day I was very disturbed, when I read in the issue of the U. S. News & World Report for Nov. 6, of the interview George Meany had recently, and when he was asked about labor unity this is what he said. I think it indicates that his memory has failed badly when he said:

"The CIO was not really made to carry the ball for industrial unions. The CIO was set up because there were several men in this country who felt they needed a political arm among the workers of the nation. The industrial union idea was a bugaboo designed to cover up the political motives of the sponsors of the CIO. The AFL has always provided a place for industrial unions in its setup."

I think that George's memory has suffered a serious lapse. The Steelworkers have not forgotten why the CIO was set up, the Rubber Workers have not forgotten why the CIO was set up, the Electrical Workers, the Textile Workers, and the Auto Workers have not forgotten why the CIO was set up. Their memories are much better.

The CIO came into being not for political reasons. The CIO came into being because the leadership of the AFL of that time was unwilling to recognize the realities of life. Every attempt to organize the basic industries was blocked by efforts on the part of 36 craft unions to divide up the jurisdiction of these basic industries.

Look at the record. For years and years and years the AFL leadership stood comfortably and complacently on their status quo. We had 2.5 million organized workers. It was only after the CIO came into being that the labor movement had the tools with which to take on the organization of the basic mass production industries.

I say thank God for CIO, because today instead of having 2.5 million workers organized we have 16 or 17 million organized workers in America.

We want labor unity, but we want labor unity that will give us not an old set of tools, but a new set of tools. We don't want a labor unity that makes it possible for the leadership to work out a comfortable and convenient arrangement based upon a new status quo. We do want a labor movement that says: "Here is a challenge, here is the unfinished work in the vineyard of American democracy, here are the millions yet unorganized."

Out of that united labor movement, we have to capture the crusading spirit of the early days of the CIO. We have to fashion the kind of effective organizational tools, the kind of weapons to fight with, so that we can carry on and build a greater, finer, more effective labor movement. That is the kind of labor movement we are thinking of, and that is the only kind of labor movement worthy of achievement if we are to do the job that needs doing in America.

The GOP's Record

The CIO has said from its very beginning that we take on the responsibilities that are ours. We do so not as a narrow economic pressure group, but on the basis that only as we work with men of good will in other segments of our free society can we find answers to our basic problems.

It was in the light of that philosophy that we said to the new Administration in Washington that they could be sure of our cooperation in meeting the problems of the American people. We said to Pres. Eisenhower shortly after his election that CIO would give him every possible support when he was right, and that we would fight with all of our strength when he was wrong.

We disagree with the General Motors Corp. Our slogan says that what is good for the nation is good for the CIO.

Stronger Than Ever

From Pres. Reuther's keynote address:

The CIO comes into this convention with its peak membership. During the past year, we picked up almost a half million new members, which I think reflects in a real measure the growth of affiliated unions.

Almost without exception every CIO union has made progress; progress numerically, in terms of building membership; and real, substantial progress in terms of bread and butter issues at the collective bargaining table.

All Fouled Up

From Pres. Reuther's keynote address:

Big Business has moved in. They are taking over the government lock, stock and barrel. When we saw the cabinet that was formed, we characterized that cabinet as eight millionaires and one plumber, but the political plumbing in Washington got so fouled up that the political plumber picked up his plunger and went home.

...ent We Want . . .

...For America?

But there is another symbol in the United Nations, a symbol of another kind of American. It is represented by Mr. James Byrnes. He is a symbol of intolerance, of bigotry, of the master race concept. He is a symbol of immorality.

We in America have to make up our minds which symbol we believe in, the symbol represented in those councils by Mr. Bunche or that represented by Mr. Byrnes. We in the CIO take our place with Dr. Ralph Bunche and the symbol he represents.

We understand clearly that in the world in which free men and free institutions are being challenged by the forces of Communist tyranny, the price of freedom comes high. We in CIO can say for our membership we are prepared to pay our proportionate share of the cost of defending our common freedom.

But the strategy is that the little people of America, the low income groups, the people least able to pay, are carrying a disproportionately high share of the tax burden; they are going to make it worse unless the people fight back. They are going to abolish the excess profits tax.

The basic problem in America, all of the economic difficulties we face as free people, flow essentially out of the unbalance in the distribution of wealth that our labor and our productive tools make possible. Four per cent of the families on top are now to get more than the 41% at the bottom of the economic pyramid. New tax legislation will make that even worse.

The American people should not be fooled or misled by fancy political double talk. When the Administration says they are opposed to a federal sales tax, but they are flirting with a federal manufacturers' tax, let us make it clear that a federal manufacturers' tax is a sales tax in disguise, with built-in features which make it worse than a federal sales tax.

The People's Business

We have said all along that politics in a democracy is the people's business, that politics is the housekeeping job of a democracy. If the people have got to keep a democratic house, we have got to mobilize the people of America, tell them what is happening in Washington, tell the working people that tax legislation is just as important to their economic status as collective bargaining.

If we will put political action work into this job of good citizenship, taking the issues and mobilizing our forces, getting good candidates, we can do this job. What happened the other day in Wisconsin and New Jersey and New York? I say, let us roll up our sleeves, let us go to work, and let us repeat that performance in every state in the union in 1954.

Big business has no faith in America. It has no faith in its great productive capacity, or understanding of the dynamic economy of abundance. Big business has no faith in the strength of a free people, dedicated to the preservation of freedom.

Men Of Little Vision

Yet these men of little faith and little vision, who sit there looking at the world as money changers, who feel apprehension about our changing world—they would have us believe that we cannot afford an adequate defense. They say we ought to cut foreign aid programs, because we cannot afford the price of survival.

Then there is talk of depression. Strangely enough, this depression talk comes from two sources. It comes from the Communists. They say to the people of the world that our free country is incapable, during peace times, of achieving full employment and full production, and that therefore we are geared to war, as the only basis of maintaining prosperity.

We of the CIO answer the views of those men of little faith and less vision by saying that we reject the defeatist philosophy that would have us believe that depressions are inevitable. Depressions, like war, are man-made, and what man can make he can also avoid making.

We say to the world that neither war nor peace is inevitable; that neither depression nor prosperity is inevitable. You can drift to war; you can drift to depression; but if you want to build peace, if you want to build prosperity, then you have got to work, and you have got to plan.

That is precisely what we in CIO are determined to do in America, with other men of good will.

They Don't Live

From Pres. Reuther's keynote address:

Eleven percent of the families of America received less than a $1000 income last year.

How do they live?

They don't live; they exist like animals, because nobody can live on a $1000 a year or less; and yet, 11% of the families in America are in that category. We ask for a $1.25 an hour minimum wage, which in itself is not adequate, but that is a first step. And we get no action.

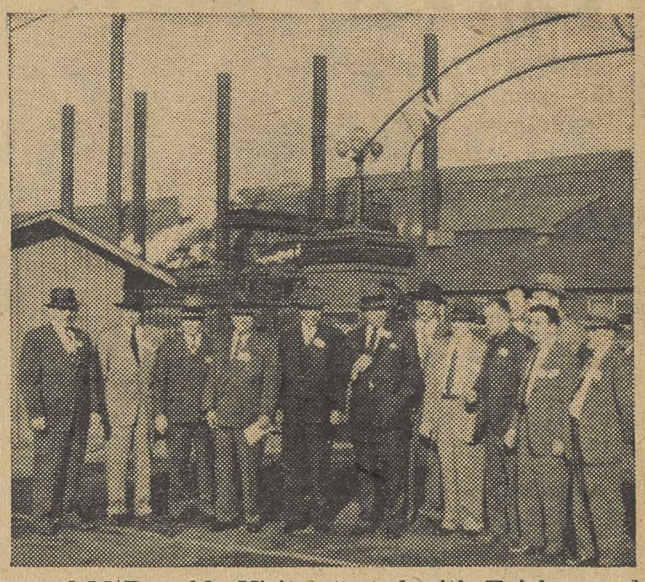
McDonald, Fairless Start Big Plant Tour



LONG-PLANNED joint tour of U. S. Steel installations in move to improve labor-management relations was begun in Cleveland area last week by Pres. David J. McDonald of CIO Steelworkers and Benjamin F. Fairless, Big Steel board chairman. Shown (left) at press conference prior to one-day trip are (left to right) Pres. John Goble of National Tube Div., Fairless and McDonald. Visits started with Fairless and McDonald (center) going to National Tube mill at nearby Lorain, where they posed (right) with local union officials and plant executives.

A NOVEL experiment to improve labor-management relations at the plant level was begun last week by top executives of the CIO Steelworkers and the biggest employer of the union's members, the U. S. Steel Corp.

It took union officials headed by Pres. David J. McDonald and a Big Steel delegation under the leadership of Board Chairman Benjamin F. Fairless to five company plants in the Cleveland area.

At the National Tube Div. Mill in nearby Lorain and at four plants of the American Steel & Wire Div. in Cleveland proper, they met not only with plant executives and local union leaders, but also with company supervisory employes and union shop stewards and grievance committeemen.

At each stop, they made what they described at a press conference the day before as "an attempt to get the feel of things at the local level."

"We're merely trying to find out if we can't improve our system," McDonald explained.

"We believe our industrial relations system must work and work better. Sometimes the grievance machinery strips a gear and resentments develop. We don't like that. We're interested in harmonious relations in the day-to-day working of the collective agreement. We're trying to see if we can't get along better at the plant level."

He and Fairless agreed they expected no miracles out of the Cleveland plant visits, which were to be extended to the Pittsburgh area this week and eventually to all other big steel plants.

They said they were seeking a technique which would permit them to guage the feelings of both workers and company leaders in the plants, their only objective being to make the contract work better.

Fairless pointed out to the press conference that most of the labor-management problems which reach his desk and McDonald's originate at the plant level, and if techniques for resolving them on the scene could be developed, fewer tensions would result.

The Cleveland plant visits were undertaken without benefit of reporters or photographers, although photos were taken at the gates. Whether the same course would be followed on later trips was to be determined at an evaluation of the day's tour made at a dinner which followed.

The venture grew out of negotiations which resulted in settlement of the 1952 steel strike. It was projected originally by Fairless and the late Philip Murray, then president of both the CIO and the CIO-USA, but plans were held in abeyance as a result of Murray's death a few months later.

'Penny Pinching' On Atomic Defense Hit

ATOMIC ENERGY was the subject of two resolutions adopted by the CIO convention—one calling for adequate defense against atomic attack and the other urging increased use of the energy for peaceful purposes.

Defense against atomic and hydrogen bombs "cannot be built by pinching pennies," one resolution said, but "by building the most effective possible early-warning system and by improving methods of intercepting enemy attacks."

The Eisenhower Administration was urged to present to Congress "the most comprehensive and modern defense program to achieve national and continental security."

The delegates also called on the Administration "to tell the American people the facts about atomic and hydrogen warfare and the new problems and responsibilities that type of warfare entails for everyone of us."

At the same time, the Administration was urged to seek an honorable peace and "the elimination on a worldwide and enforceable basis, through the United Nations, of atomic and hydrogen weapons as an instrument of warfare."

ANOTHER resolution asked "the increased use of atomic energy for power, medicine, biology and other civilian uses."

It also called for continuance of government ownership and control of all fissionable material and government control of all atomic energy patents "for the benefit of all the people who have paid the cost of its development to date."

The decision of the Atomic Energy Commission to construct a nuclear reactor to convert atomic energy into electric power for industrial purposes was applauded, and the expansion of this program was asked.

Religion, Labor Body Discusses Program For Cooperation Of Church And Union Groups

HOW CHURCH and trade union groups can cooperate in working to achieve the ideals of our democratic faith was the theme of talks and "buzz discussions" at a luncheon meeting held by the National Religion and Labor Foundation during the CIO convention.

Pres. Walter Reuther and other CIO leaders took time out from full convention schedules to speak at the luncheon, held in connection with the NRLF's two-day Interseminary Conference. Students sat in on sessions of the CIO convention and attended NRLF meetings at Old Stone Presbyterian Church.

Reuther said that both labor and religion are dedicated to the broad concept of brotherhood. The union movement, he said, "is trying to give meaning to the ideals for which both stand."

If America is to live up to its position of leadership in the world, "it must demonstrate that we are not only strong economically and militarily, but have moral responsibility as well," he added.

CIO Exec. Vice-Pres. John V. Riffe said that organized labor "is a great spiritual movement as well as a collective bargaining agency." Union officials and members can do a better job if they have deep moral convictions and stand up for what they know to be right. He urged them to take a more active part in religious activities.

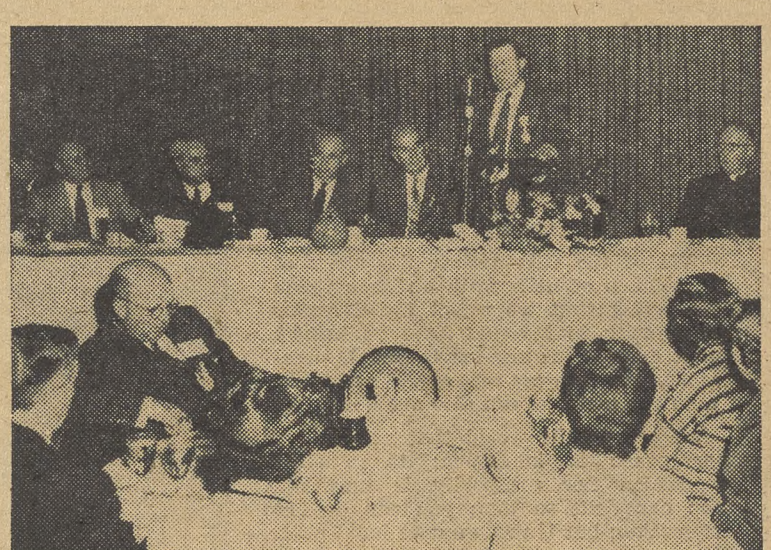
Pres. Ralph Helstein of the Packinghouse Workers pointed out the danger that lies ahead for America in the growing "emphasis being placed upon the material things of life while failing to keep pace morally."

RABBI Barnett R. Brickner of the Euclid Avenue Temple, Cleveland, recalled the days when churches of all denominations in any city were likely to be "rich men's clubs," and ministers were supposed to stick to religious matters only.

Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, NRLF executive director and former CIO staff member in the South, spoke of the remarkable achievements made by labor in breaking down racial discrimination.

John G. Ramsay, CIO Community Relations representative and NRLF co-chairman with Dr. James A. Crain, presided. Rev. Charles C. Webber, of the CIO staff in Michigan and NRLF field representative, was in charge of arrangements.

The common interests of church and labor were also discussed at an earlier luncheon sponsored by the National Council of Churches, Dept. of Church and Economic Life. Victor Reuther, assistant to CIO Pres. Reuther, spoke to the group.



LABOR SHARES with religion the common goal of brotherhood, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told a luncheon of the National Religion & Labor Foundation during Cleveland convention.

'How Silly Can You Get?' Dept.—

NOW IT'S THE CHILDREN'S fables that are under fire from people who want to look under the bed for Communists in the U. S.—instead of facing up to the military strength of Soviet Russian imperialism.

To be specific, the legend of Robin Hood and his outlaw band in the Sherwood Forest of medieval England has a lady Republican from Indiana all worked up.

She's Mrs. Thomas J. White, a member of the Indiana Textbook Commission. She wants all information about Robin Hood, and also about the Quaker religion, removed from school textbooks. She claimed they trend to support communism. Here's what she said:

"There is a Communist directive in education now to stress the story of Robin Hood. They want to stress it because he robbed the rich and gave it to the poor. That's the Communist line. It's just a smearing of law and order and anything that disrupts law and order is their meat."

The law and order forces in present-day Sherwood Forest, as voiced by the Sheriff of Nottingham, responded with a horse-laugh. Said Sheriff William John Cox (a Tory himself):

"Why Robin Hood was no Communist. We're very proud of Robin Hood, although if he were alive today, we'd probably call him a gangster and I'd have to do my duty and go out after him.

"We've never minded our children learing about Robin Hood and Maid Marion and Little John and all the rest. It's our heritage, and mind you, I'm no Communist. I'm a member of the Conservative party."

The Indiana affair had its echoes on the CIO convention floor with Delegate Mary Salisbury apologizing on behalf of the state and her sex for Gov. Craig's appointment of Mrs. White.

She added, "Frankly, CIO members, we in Indiana would not be a bit surprised if during this coming holiday season Gov. Craig would issue an edict that Rudolph could not have a red nose this year."

Civil Rights Are Test Of American Greatness

"Bigness is impressive, but greatness is enduring.

"Our farms and factories may give us our living, but the Bill of Rights guarantees that that living shall be earned in freedom. Whoever lays rough hands upon it, lays rough hands on you and me."

So declared the CIO convention in a resolution vigorously reaffirming CIO goals of civil equality and democratic rights for all Americans on the job and in the community.

The resolution said in part:

"We condemn the political abuse of the problem of discrimination in employment, the exploitation of racial aspirations on the one hand and racial prejudice on the other—all for votes—as both a dangerous thing and a revolting spectacle in our political life."

The convention pledged CIO to increasingly vigorous leadership in a multiple program "to realize the democratic rights promised by our Constitution, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin."

Specific proposals included:

- That all CIO affiliates through collective bargaining seek nondiscriminatory hiring and equal pay contract clauses.
- That CIO Council and local union civil rights committees expand their work, in coordination with the National CIO Committee on Civil Rights.
- That renewed efforts to gain effective fair employment practices legislation be made in coming sessions of Congress and the legislatures.
- That filibustering Senate rules which are roadblocks to civil rights be removed.
- That federal anti-lynching and poll-tax repealer laws be enacted, along with home rule for the District of Columbia and statehood for Hawaii and Alaska.

The Real Communist Menace—

'Totalitarian Methods' Peril Civil Liberties, CIO Warns

A THOUGHTFUL plea for the U. S. to safeguard its democratic freedom at home while facing up to the world-wide threat of Soviet military aggression was voiced by the CIO convention in a policy statement on civil liberties and internal security.

Warning against using "totalitarian procedures to fight totalitarianism," the resolution said:

"We in the CIO reject the totalitarian procedures and the denial of basic individual democratic rights that have been foisted upon us in the name of fighting communism.

"We insist that all individuals, government workers and other citizens alike, be afforded the personal freedoms guaranteed by the Bill of Rights.

"We denounce the trial of citizens by non-judicial public bodies on accusations of secret witnesses. Legislative trials in which congressional investigators act as judge, prosecutor and jury have no place in our democratic way of life."

And the resolution noted that "the CIO has earned the right to speak with authority on how to fight Communist penetration. We cleaned our own house, and we did it democratically . . ."

THREE BASIC principles were emphasized in the civil liberties resolution:

1. That even in critical emergencies, "respect for individual liberty is the hallmark of democratic government and the source of its superiority over totalitarian government."

2. "That, as ex-Ambassador Kennan put it, we must not confuse the 'internal and external aspects of the Communist threat.' We do not belittle these threats: the CIO has constantly urged that more, rather than less, be done to meet them."

3. "The Communist movement in this country poses no threat to subvert the government: It serves rather as a recruiting ground for spies and, perhaps, saboteurs. This is a threat to be met by police detection and rigorous enforcement of the criminal laws; not by undemocratic restraints upon speech or belief. It is what these people do, not what they say or think, that matters."

The CIO statement struck hard at Sens. McCarthy, McCarran and Jenner for seeking "to exploit for their own ends the fear of Soviet aggression . . . In making ever more reckless and irresponsible charges, they seek not truth but sensation. Their arsenal is the half truth and the big lie. The personal freedoms guaranteed to all persons by the Constitution and the elemental dignity of man mean nothing to these power-hungry demagagues."

THE RESOLUTION said McCarthy has acted "like his Nazi prototypes" in forcing the burning of books in U. S. overseas libraries and—since inauguration of the Republican Administration—has extended his campaign of destruction from the State Dept. and the Voice of America to the armed forces.

The civil liberties resolution included: A proposal that Congress review and revise the Smith and McCarran Subversive Activities Control laws, adoption by Congress of a code of fair procedure for investigations, opposition to any laws or congressional activities which restrict civil liberties, and recommendation that the federal and plant security programs be modified.

U. S. Is Waiting For Ike To Lead

"The American people are eager for the President to take the lead against McCarthyism."

So said a CIO resolution, citing Pres. Eisenhower's condemnation of Sen. McCarthy's attacks on the Protestant clergy.

But the President, CIO noted, has preferred "to hold himself aloof from combat . . . Occasional speeches paying tribute to freedom of speech and thought, while commendable, have not been a prelude to effective action."

Educator Hails CIO Fight On Bias

CIO'S "CONSISTENT fight against discrimination on the basis of race, color or creed" was praised at the convention by Pres. Alonzo G. Moron of Hampton Institute.

The Hampton, Va., educator lauded the fact that CIO "adopted no special qualifications for 'special groups' but that you hold them to the same standards and expect the same performance from them that you require from anyone else. To do otherwise would be just as unfair and dangerous to democracy as to adopt policies of exclusion or second-class membership."

Moron recalled that CIO groups had often used the facilities of Negro colleges in the South when it was necessary to meet "beyond the pale of the enforcers of segregation statutes and ordinances."

DISCUSSING the brighter prospects of higher educational opportunities for Negroes, Moron said higher appropriations by southern states for Negro state colleges were "more hysterical than judicious," as they face the possibility that equal facilities at every college level will be ordered by the Supreme Court.

He traced the development of institutions of higher learning for Negroes from the two or three that existed at the end of the Civil War to the more than 100 operating today. Moron said that there were 2600 Negroes in colleges in 1900 but that number had increased by 2800% in 1950 while the total student body in all colleges was growing only 1100%.

By 1950, he went on, 74,000 Negroes were enrolled in colleges, only 15,000 of them outside the South. By far the larger portion of these were students in private colleges for Negroes in the South.

Discussing the role of private colleges, Pres. Moron said "despite the improvements made in state colleges for Negroes and the huge appropriations made by state legislatures in recent years in a futile, really hypocritical attempt to equalize facilities, the bulk of the burden of higher education for Negro youth is still being borne by the privately-supported college. And this is just as it should be."

The speaker contended that private education for all people is an essential element of private enterprise in a free society.

"We stand to lose a great deal in our hopes for higher education and in our freedom to explore or experiment if we allow the state, in the smaller or larger sense of the word, to take complete control of education," he said.

Reviewing the decisions of the Supreme Court affecting equalization of opportunity for Negroes, Moron quoted the dissenting opinion of the late Justice Harlan in such a case.

"Our Constitution is color blind," the justice wrote, "and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens. In respect of civil rights, all citizens are equal before the law . . . The law regards man as man, and takes no account of his surroundings or his color when his civil rights as guaranteed by the supreme law of the land are involved."

Stevenson Sends Greetings To CIO

In a telegram to the convention recalling that he had welcomed the 12th National CIO session to Chicago three years ago, Adlai E. Stevenson declared it a privilege "to pay tribute to an organization which has been resolute in the cause of peace and progress, vigorous in its imaginativeness and energy, but always directed toward the betterment of our social order."

Peace In H-Bomb Era Called All-Important Goal Of Unions

THE QUESTION of peace or war in the era of the hydrogen bomb overrides all other considerations, the convention asserted in a detailed resolution spelling out the principles guiding the CIO on international problems.

"We support completely the necessity of building up the military strength of ourselves and our allies," it said, "so that the free world can in peace move forward to the task of raising living standards and of creating and preserving the blessings of democracy and freedom.

"The truce in Korea may be just a respite before a great struggle breaks out in the world. Some way must be found to eradicate the scourge of war from the face of the earth.

"During the period ahead, the CIO will continue to give its full attention, consistent with the beliefs of a free society, to the ways and means by which we believe the fundamental goal of world peace may be attained."

The resolution reaffirmed the CIO's determination to continue the struggle for an enduring peace and democracy. It pointed out that the international Communist conspiracy, controlled by Russia, continues to threaten peace, security and freedom, and has made necessary "a reinforcement of the United States' role in organizing the mutual defense of the free world."

"Whatever may be the ultimate course," it added, "the U. S. must assume the responsibility called for by her role of world leadership. We must allay the suspicions of our allies and dispel the undercurrents of distrust tending to divide us.

"Adequate military strength . . . is only part of the answer to Soviet Communist aggression. We must understand and guide along democratic paths the revolutionary and progressive ferment which is stirring two-thirds of the world's population. We must declare a total war against poverty and social injustice."

Look For The Union Label On Your Insurance Policy

BE SURE THERE's a union label on your life insurance policy. That was the advice of the CIO convention, in endorsing the union label campaign of the CIO Insurance Workers—newest international union affiliate.

As a first step, the convention suggested that CIO local unions "wherever possible purchase and renew group life insurance policies with companies under contract with the IWA."

The Insurance Workers—formed as a separate international union only five months ago, after several years of growth as a CIO Organizing Committee—were praised for their victorious struggle against Communist-line elements and also to win economic security.

"Full support" of CIO was pledged to the IWA in the presently-developing struggle against "the insidious anti-union tactics of the world's largest corporation, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co."

Metropolitan was charged with refusing all union rights to its own employes while being "only too glad to reap the profits of group life insurance benefits negotiated by other union members."

Highlights Of CIO Foreign Policy

Around the globe, here are highlights of the CIO convention resolution on foreign policy:

KOREA: Support of the stand of the U. S. and the United Nations against "this Soviet-inspired aggressive imperialism" was renewed, and efforts of UN forces to reach an honorable truce were endorsed. The Communists' "chagrin" over the rejection of repatriation by UN prisoners of war was noted, and the enemy was charged with "the same dilatory and obstructive tactics" in setting up the political conference. Appreciation and understanding of the neutrals on the Repatriation Commission was expressed.

UNITED NATIONS: Wholehearted support of the UN and its specialized agencies was reaffirmed, and efforts to strengthen UN powers to take collective action for collective security, especially in view of the UN charter revision scheduled for 1955, were approved. Concern was expressed at efforts to undermine the faith of Americans in the agency, and to return to the isolationism of the 1920s by enacting the Bricker Amendment.

The U. S. government was called on to continue to play a leading role in the development of a workable disarmament plan, and the world was asked to recognize that our goal is "a sound structure for permanent peace."

FOREIGN OPERATIONS ADMINISTRATION: The principle that the security of the free world must be a cooperative effort was endorsed, but it was pionted out that not all nations can make the same contribution. Regret was expressed at the shift from the economic to the military aspects of the foreign aid program, and a warning sounded that "declining living conditions endanger the entire structure of democratic defenses."

Support for the development and growth of free trade unions, so they may play their proper role in a democracy, was called for, but it was pointed out that there has been "almost a complete de-emphasis" of labor participation in FOA. Clarification of labor's role was urged.

POINT FOUR: Former Pres. Truman's "bold new program for world betterment" was described as "seriously endangered in scope and concept" under its new administration, with its "program emasculated and its purposes completely distorted." Its humanitarian approach was called "submerged" by the tie-in with the military and economic security aspects of the foreign aid program, and the morale of its staff described as "shaken" by sweeping dismissals. A "vastly expanded effort" to develop the resources and stabilize the economies of the free world was called for, together with assurances by the government that the U. S. respects their independence.

EUROPE: The stand taken by European unions in favor of the economic integration of Western Europe, the concept behind the Schuman Plan, the principles of the European Coal and Steel Community were endorsed. The U. S. was urged to make resources available to meet the surplus population problem, and to ignore the obstruction of the Soviet Union in order to regularize relations with Austria. The return of sovereignty and independence to West Germany, and the "sound growth" of the German labor movement were noted, and the U. S. was urged to ask Chancellor Adenauer not to interfere with the freedom and autonomy of the trade unions.

NORTH AFRICA: The CIO's long-standing reiteration of American opposition to imperialism and colonial exploitation was again restated, and the "deterioration" of the situation in North Africa was viewed with "growing alarm" in view of France's abridgement of the liberties of the native population and its trampling on trade union rights. The U. S. was called upon to work, through the UN, for the establishment of a good offices committee to resolve the conflict.

SOUTH AFRICA: Deep concern was expressed over the "vicious suppression" of civil and political rights in the Union of South Africa. "Shocked and appalled" by the reversion to the "worst forms of racial oppression and exploitation," and the extension of racialism into the trade unions by law, the CIO asked the U. S. to support a condemnation of the policies of the Malan government in the UN.

ASIA: The beginnings of a mutual defense pact for Southeast Asia were welcomed, and the U. S., it was pointed out, has a prime responsibility to convince Asians that imperialism is dead and that we are sincere in our ideals of democracy, the dignity of human beings, full racial tolerance and universal freedom. The restoration of Japan's sovereignty and its emergence as a free nation were welcomed. Japanese labor unions were pledged CIO help, and were urged to redouble efforts to maintain free organizations and to guard against pressure to subvert them to selfish or totalitarian purposes.

ICFTU: Resolutions passed by the Stockholm Congress of the ICFTU were endorsed and recommended to the consideration of all CIO affiliates. Continued full cooperation with the world body was promised, with efforts to integrate CIO activities even more closely with those of the international free trade union movement. The CIO Free World Labor Fund, established last April, was endorsed.

LATIN AMERICA: Continuation of the CIO policy of furthering the social, economic and political interests of Latin American workers was promised, and opposition to dictatorships in Argentina and some other countries was expressed. A protest was voiced against insufficient allocations of U. S. funds to Latin American countries for economic purposes, and it was pointed out that the "depressed economic and social conditions of our brothers in Latin America (are) * * * a fertile breeding ground for totalitarian ideas."

MacDonald From Canada Decries Depression Talk

REGARDLESS of changing patterns of national expenditures, there is no justification for a depression or a recession in either the U. S. or Canada, Donald MacDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Congress of Labor, told the convention.

Referring to published "insinuations and innuendoes" that with the shift in defense spending, there must come "necessary economic adjustment," MacDonald declared:

"There are certain elements in your nation and mine who are looking forward with keen interest to just such a development; who see in it an opportunity, as they think, to open up an attack on the standards of wages and hours and living conditions that we have acquired through our organizations during the past decade or more."

Some reports say, he noted, that in such a situation competition, of course, will develop among workers for available jobs.

"One does not have to be an economist to realize what is intended," he continued. "What is intended is that in such a situation every effort will be made to play off, as has been done in the past, one worker against another worker, and thereby lower the standards that have been created for us through countless generations of struggle and effort and sacrifice."

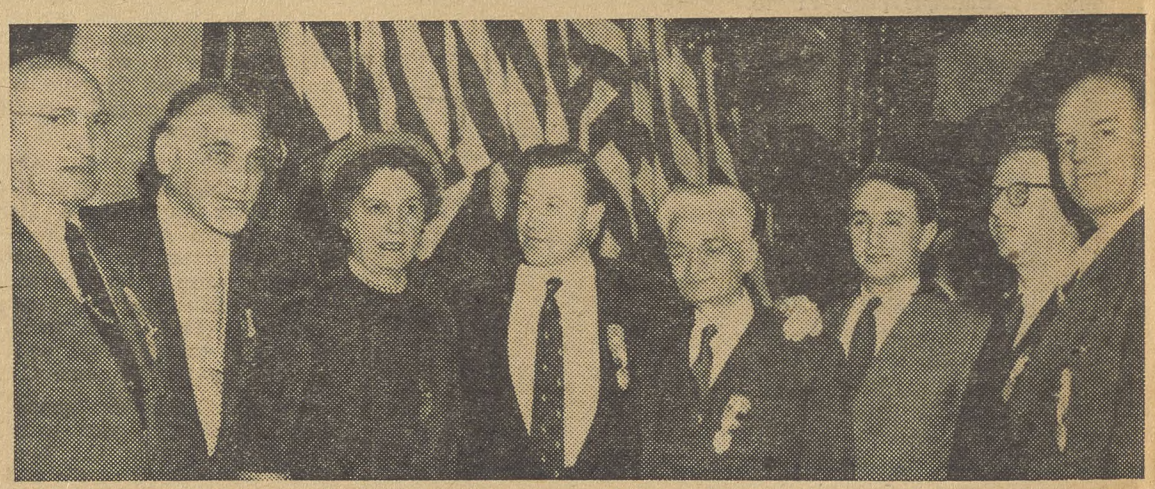
"In your country, despite the fact that you have achieved what is regarded as the highest standard of living in the world, there are millions of people who even in this relative prosperity are going short of many of the necessities of life," he stated.

"In my country, despite the fact that we boast of having the second highest standard of living in the world, there are hundreds of thousands of citizens who cannot buy for themselves the ordinary necessities."

Union Label Ties Sold At Parley

Neckties bearing the union label of the CIO Clothing Workers—the first union label ties many of the delegates had ever seen—were on sale in the lobby of the convention hall.

They were made by Tie King, Inc., New York manufacturers and retailers whose store also is fully organized. And they were a legitimate bargain-hand-made, all-silk, and selling at $1.50, or about $1 less than comparative values in retail outlets. The firm originated the "Repeal Taft-Hartley" tie popular in labor circles a couple of years ago.



REPRESENTATIVES of American Trade Union Council for Histadrut are greeted by CIO leaders (from left): ACW Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum; ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky, Mrs. Hadassah Samuels, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, ACW emeritus Sec.-Treas. Joseph Schlossberg, Histadrut Rep. Moshe Bitan, CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg and NMU Pres. Joseph Curran. CIO reaffirmed backing for Israel.

Legislative Program—

Urge Aggressive Drive On Poverty, Injustice

A LEGISLATIVE program for all Americans, aimed at strengthening freedom and democracy on every front, was adopted by the CIO convention after detailed examination of the problems facing the nation and the free world.

"It is designed to enable our nation and its allies to stand firm," the resolution said, "against the threat of Soviet aggression by strengthening our nation and better equiping it to carry out the responsibilities of world leadership.

"Our program is based on the aspiration of our people for a better life for everyone, and on our belief, as set forth in the Constitution, that it is a proper and major function of our government to promote and provide for the general welfare of all our citizens.

"Our program would aggressively attack poverty, disease, discrimination, insecurity and injustice. By strengthening the material basis of our society, it would enable us fully to develop our political democracy."

The resolution accused Pres. Eisenhower and the GOP Congress of showing "indifference or hostility" to the needs of the people to date.

The program the CIO will push in the second session of the 83rd Congress was spelled out in a series of resolutions dealing with specific subjects. The highlights:

Social Security

The convention endorsed S. 2260, the bill introduced by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) and others to increase old age and retirement benefits, extend coverage, liberalize the retirement test, add federal programs of permanent and temporary disability insurance, and provide funds to rehabilitate injured workers.

The Eisenhower Administration, it pointed out, has suggested no improvements in social security beyond a non-controversial extension of old age and survivors insurance coverage. It also recalled that the subject is being studied by a subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee headed by Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.), "who has long opposed all progressive social security legislation."

CHECKING THE RECORD—One of the busiest booths in the CIO convention lobby was the Legislative Dept.'s display on "how well do you know your congressman?" On screen delegates got a quick rundown of their lawmaker's voting record.

It warned that the U. S. Chamber of Commerce proposals would end federal grants to the states for old-age assistance and shift the cost of caring for the aged to the workers and employers who have contributed to the Old Age & Survivors Insurance Trust Fund. The same proposals, the resolution added, would mean loss of benefits to those who have contributed to the fund, or substantially higher payments.

"We believe that a sound program of this type," it said, must relate benefits to earnings and must include an adequate reserve. We believe that all persons now aged should be provided for adequately, but the costs of such a program for those who have not been covered by OASI should be met from general revenue based on progressive taxation, not from contributions to the trust fund."

The convention opposed any postponement of the scheduled increase in the payroll tax for old age and survivors insurance.

"We reaffirm our previous stand," the resolution said, "that labor is willing to bear its fair share of the cost of an adequate program, and that lower payments now can only mean higher payments or lower benefits later.

Housing

The convention called for a construction program based on two million new housing units a year until the nation is adequately housed, with federal subsidization of low-rent housing for families unable to meet the cost.

To protect communities against new slums and buyers against fraud, it asked Congress to require the Federal Housing Administration to obtain builder guarantees against faulty construction, and also asked the FHA and the Veterans Administration to cut interest rates on mortgages and to provide for direct loans to purchasers where funds are not available.

It urged Pres. Eisenhower to authorize lower FHA down payments and longer amortization periods, commended U. S. housing agencies for their progress in overcoming racial discrimination, and demanded that Congress re-establish rent controls.

More To Come

More pictures of the 15th CIO convention and a digest of resolutions will be printed in next week's issue of The CIO News.

Immigration

The delegates urged Congress to consider favorably identical bills introduced by liberals in Senate and House as "an instrument admirably suited to meet the commitments on immigration and naturalization made by both political parties" and to correct the defects of the McCarran-Walter Act.

The latter act was again condemned for its discriminatory and racist features, administrative confusion, lack of adequate appeals facilities, ambiguous eligibility standards, ineffective security provisions, and entrapment clauses.

Education

A nine-point program aimed at overcoming congressional indifference and neglect of responsibilities in the field of education, and at the same time rallying support against reactionary attacks on the schools, was approved by the delegates.

Specifically, it called for a general federal aid to education bill, with a special school construction bill and enactment of Sen. Hill's (D. Ala.) "oil for the lamps of learning proposal" amendment, to supplement local expenditures "so that improved school facilities will be assured, so that every child will have a good education, every class a good teacher and every teacher a good salary."

The resolution also asked for federal grants to the states for scholarships, to make possible college educations for students unable to afford them, and as for many years past, it called for creation of a labor extension service in the U. S. Dept. of Labor to give workers the same type of services now available to farmers.

In addition, it asked for an adequate budget to restore the original standards of the school lunch program, a program of library aid, and provisos in all federal legislation safeguarding against racial discrimination and segregation.

Compensation

A many-pointed program aimed at injecting reality into workmen's compensation programs, hinging on national legislation based on a comprehensive investigation Pres. Eisenhower was asked to order, was approved by the convention.

A federal plan for compensation of work-connected injuries and diseases, the resolution declared, is the most satisfactory that could be devised. Pending enactment of such a law, the convention called for broad amendments to present workmen's compensation laws in the states.

Basic in the CIO program are provisions making compensation coverage compulsory for all employers, large and small; a benefit level which would indemnify workers for at least 80% of lost wages, elimination of waiting periods, compensation for the entire period of total disability be it temporary or permanent, and a complete revamping of administrative practices which deprive workers of benefits, or reduce or delay payments.

The resolution urged CIO affiliates, local unions and councils to work aggressively for the amendment and improvement of state laws pending enactment of federal legislation.

Health

The convention called for a national health program aimed at making available comprehensive health services of high quality to all people equally.

The program, the delegates decided, must be based on national health insurance designed to yield high quality medical services, facilities and personnel in expanding qualities.

It called for greater federal aid to medical and dental schools, for nursing and medical technician training, for construction of new hospitals and health centers, for research and for student scholarships. It must also include a provision for prepaid health protection giving preventive care, prompt access to diagnostic services and treatment, and rehabilitation services, as well as an expansion of federal aid to local and state health programs.

Galloping Give-Away Of Power, Natural Resources By GOP Hit

THE "GIVE-AWAY" of America's great natural resources for private profit was condemned by the CIO in a comprehensive resolution on conservation.

Administration policy that has turned public power over to private utilities and the destruction of the non-profit systems that made low-cost power available was deplored.

TVA—called "creeping socialism" by Pres. Eisenhower—was supported and defended as "a successful pioneering experiment which has won world-wide admiration and imitation."

Also criticized was the decision by Sec. of the Interior McKay to drop the long-pending project for a high dam at Hells Canyon with its public development of the river for needed power, flood control and soil conservation. Construction of three small dams, under the new policy, will use only a small part of the potential capacity of the site for power development.

McKAY'S further announcement that the Bonneville Dam Administration hereafter will give preference to private utilities over new industries drew the censure of the resolution. CIO position was outlined as favoring full development of the Pacific Northwest before the interests of a few utility companies.

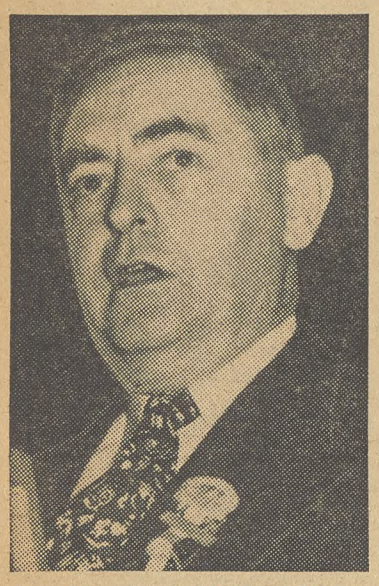
"All of these developments and others," the resolution said, are clear proof of a general overall plan by the Eisenhower Administration to destroy the public power systems which have been built up over the past 20 years and which have brought low-cost electricity to farmers, industries and domestic consumers."

In debate on the resolution, the Chemical Workers voiced strong support while the Utility Workers called for the deletion of several paragraphs on public power.

Pres. Elwood Swisher spoke for the Chemical Workers. The Utility Workers' viewpoint was presented by Pres. Joseph Fisher, Sec.-Treas. William Pachler and Vice Pres. Harold Straub.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther ruled the deletion proposal out of order under the convention rules, but offered to name a subcommittee of CIO vice presidents to meet with the Utility Workers to consider their objections.

'Keep Prosperity On Farm' Plan Backed By Delegates



FARM LEADER Fred Heinkel was cheered for attack on GOP's farm policies.

CONTINUED support of farm programs "designed to keep prosperity on the farms and in the cities and to give farmers the security they need" was pledged by CIO in a convention resolution.

If farmers are to meet the growing demands the future will make on them, the resolution said, farm programs must be improved and expanded by Congress on the basis of the experience and recommendations of the farmers themselves.

If industrial plants shut down, workers are laid off, and the market for farm products dries up, no farm program can guarantee prosperity to farmers.

The CIO contends that full employment at high wages in industry helped the farmers to do the job they have done in the past 20 years.

The resolution warned that depressions, recessions or even so-called "readjustments" must not be allowed to occur again, throwing workers out of jobs and destroying their incomes, and in turn hurting the farmers.

"In our determination that this need not and shall not happen again," the resolution stated, "we in the CIO are fighting not for ourselves alone, but for the prosperity of all—farmers, workers, professional and business people alike—and for the greater security of our nation."

Sound programs for protecting farm income protect all of us, it said. Trouble on the farm means lay-offs in city plants. When farm people enjoy prosperity, they are making a major contribution to the prosperity of the rest of us.

The vicious effect of falling farm prices has already been felt by tens of thousands of workers in the farm machinery and consumer durables industries, it added. Unless checked, this trouble can launch the nation on a farm-fed, farm-led depression.

The resolution reminded that farmers 20 years ago joined forces with the government to work by democratic means towards a sound prosperity for agriculture and to safeguard the nation's needs for adequate supplies of foods and fibers produced on farms. These programs were supported by CIO from its beginning and are still supported.

THESE programs of "farm democracy" were condemned and criticized by the majority of the Republican party over those 20 years, the resolution pointed out, in the same way it fought industrial democracy at every step. It has come forward with no realistic or reliable substitute for the programs it condemns.

Now in control of government, the Republican party has advanced no remedies for the immediate and pressing problems of farmers. The resolution said:

"Plagued by droughts and penalized by falling prices, they are told to be patient and weather the storm while the new experts, with the advice of the big packers, processors and bankers, work out the new programs to propose to Congress."

Depressions Seen 'Farm Bred, Farm Led'

THE STAKE of industrial workers in agriculture and the farmers' contribution to national prosperity were outlined to the convention by Pres. Fred V. Heinkel of the Missouri Farmers Association.

"You have heard about the farmers being caught in an economic squeeze and that we have been having a depression in agriculture," Heinkel said.

"This may seem of little importance to those of you who are working in big factories located in big cities. But it is important to you, because general depressions are farm bred and farm led."

Resignation of Agriculture Sec. Benson was suggested by Heinkel as he hit at Administration farm policies.

"It sounds awful," he said, "to listen to a man who is supposed to be representing the position of the American farmers.

"We wish he would resign, frankly, because I think a man who is Secretary of Agriculture ought to carry the ball for the farmer, and I don't mean when he is doing that he is ignoring the best interests of you people. He isn't. He ought to be pointing out what a tremendous job the farmer did . . ."

HEINKEL warned that the farm depression had been developing over two years "and unless some means is found and employed to arrest it . . . you will suffer even more than the farmers." Farmers, he pointed out, can almost always eat.

"When workers in the cities are unemployed, they can only take their places in bread lines," he observed.

Agriculture produces approximately 70% in dollar value of all raw materials used in the annual operation of our economy, Heinkel reported.

"The movement of raw materials from agriculture to processors and on to consumers is responsible for a large part of the employment of our labor force," he said.

"Add to this the enormous purchases made by farmers of finished products they need, and you begin to see what a stake you have in agriculture."

EACH DOLLAR of gross farm income generates about $7 of national income, according to records he cited. He reminded that "any time the gross farm income falls below one-seventh of the national income, it soon has the effect of slowing down our whole economy by pulling down the national income."

Gross farm income for 1953 should be around $41 billion, based upon a $290 billion national income for 1952.

"Even though we can estimate our national income for 1953 will be approximately the same as for 1952," Heinkel said, "our gross farm income for 1953 will probably be only $34 billion, or about $7 billion less than the farmers' fair share of the national income."

Heinkel said this loss of gross farm income and the reduced buying power of farmers has resulted in lower farm implement sales and lay-offs of workers.

'Stop Flood Of Wetbacks, Aid U. S. Farm Workers'

IMMEDIATE action to halt the flood of illegal migrants into the agricultural and industrial labor markets was urged on the Eisenhower Administration by the CIO convention.

Employers who hire "wetbacks" should be penalized, the resolution said, and the abuses under foreign contract labor programs which displace American workers should be ended.

"We believe that farm laborers, whether our own citizens or from friendly neighboring countries, are equally entitled to decent working and living conditions," the resolution pointed out.

"The major emphasis in farm placement programs should be given to United States workers, including those from Puerto Rico, in preference to bringing in supplementary workers from other countries."

Contract workers from other countries, such as the British West Indies, should be brought in only under formal agreement and contract. The problem of illegal "wetback" entrants was emphasized with the statement that relations between this country and Mexico were menaced "by the shockingly inadequate" manner in which the United States is handling their plight.

Women's Auxiliaries Plan Grass-Roots Work

WIVES AND MOTHERS of CIO members who went to Cleveland as delegates to the convention of the National CIO Auxiliaries were too modest and unassuming to notice it, but as women they are being eyed with new interest these days.

A lot of people thought it was the housewives' vote that swung the election to Eisenhower. What are they going to do in '54? Women eligible to vote outnumber men voters.

The Auxiliaries convention was held at the Hollenden Hotel concurrently with the first three days of the National CIO convention. It was not a large affair, but the delegates are live wires in their communities and can have an influence greater than their number indicates. They represented some 20,000 members from about 200 auxiliaries of local unions and state, county and city councils in 35 states.

THE OIL WORKERS auxiliaries top the list in number of members. Other CIO international unions represented included Auto, Steel, Rubber, Packinghouse, Transport, Electrical and Transport Service.

The women re-elected their top officers—Pres. Lillian Sherwood, Grand Rapids, Mich., of the UAW, and Sec.-Treas. Bertha Perrin, Warren, O., of the USA-CIO—chose a slate of 13 vice-presidents to sit on the executive board; reported on union and community activities; squabbled mildly over finances and a few other matters, all settled shortly with good humor prevailing; and listened with interest to outside speakers.

Esther Murray, representative of the CIO Political Action Committee who conducted a workshop on "How to Read Your Newspaper," did a nice job of explaining the importance of women keeping themselves informed about vital issues.

JOHN DILLON, labor specialist of the Federal Civil Defense Agency and executive board member of the CIO Electrical Workers, was guest speaker at the Auxiliaries' luncheon. He told the women of the great importance of having their support for the CD program.

Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, executive director of the National Religion and Labor Foundation, in a speech on the opening day told the convention that he is a firm believer in the theory that women have a high responsibility in building better communities of citizens throughout the country.

Speaking informally, Tilford Dudley of PAC and Helen Blanchard, former organizing director for the Auxiliaries and now on the staff of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, also stressed the importance of taking an active part in political and community affairs.

DUDLEY listed some of the vital national issues "close to the hearts of women"—juvenile delinquency, unemployment, and above all, peace.

"We may come into a peace crisis in the next few months," he said, adding that never before has it been more important for women to vote intelligently.

Miss Blanchard pointed out that the "greatest appeal of the Auxiliaries is that they reach the grass roots, get into the small towns." Housewives, she said, know the needs of the community, and they can make those needs known by actively supporting CIO programs in their towns.

CONVENTION of CIO Women's Auxiliaries heard Mrs. Sumner Hatch of National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

CWA Asks Single Western Electric Unit

A NATIONAL Labor Relations Board hearing will be held this week on the petition of the CIO Communications Workers for a single bargaining unit for 80,000 Western Electric production and maintenance employes.

It will be up to the NLRB to make the decision because the company and the AFL Electrical Workers would not agree to a consent election as the NLRB had suggested.

CWA for years has represented about half of the 80,000 workers at Western Electric, the manufacturing arm of AT&T, of which the Bell System also is a subsidiary.

The CWA membership already includes two nationwide Western Electric groups—equipment installers, and employes in the sales and distribution department. Other CWA units are in six manufacturing plants of the company.

The AFL union represents employes at three plants. The representative at another plant is the CIO Electrical Workers, which has said it would agree to turn the unit over to CWA.

CWA FILED its original petition for one nationwide unit early in October. It was dismissed by the New York office for the Labor Board because CWA had not shown "sufficient interest"—enough members in the plants where other unions hold bargaining rights.

CWA appealed this decision. Later it withdrew the original petition and appeal, and refiled another petition in the New York office. This petition was accompanied by an increased number of signed membership cards.

Steel Union Foe Loses In High Court

UNION-STALLING tactics of the Reed & Prince Manufacturing Co. were slapped down last week by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The Worcester, Mass., concern lost its appeal from a National Labor Relations Board order to negotiate with the CIO Steelworkers. The court order cleared the roadblock Reed & Prince set up against contract talks almost three years ago.

The Steelworkers first organized the plant in 1937. A strike followed when the firm refused to sign a contract. Court action, ending in 1941, directed the company to deal with the union. The local was weakened and in 1945 Reed & Prince claimed the union no longer represented the workers.

Another organizing campaign in 1950 resulted in victory for USA-CIO. Refusal of the firm to bargain led to a second strike in January 1951, with full blame assessed against the company by the State Conciliation board.

A new NLRB order to bargain in good faith was resisted by Reed & Prince. The U. S. First Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the NLRB and it was this order and appeals court ruling which was sustained by the high court.

Aid Pledged To Brewers Against Teamster Raids

IN A RESOLUTION deploring "raids by unions upon plants already organized by other legitimate unions," the CIO convention pledged full aid and support to all CIO affiliates in resisting raiding.

The AFL Teamsters were singled out for special comment in the resolution, which pledged support to the CIO Brewery Workers in resisting attempted raids by the IBT.

The resolution said that raids are "not only wasteful of the energies of the unions involved, but are hurtful to the labor movement generally. They tend to discredit unions with workers and with the public, and add nothing to the overall strength of organized labor."

THE RESOLUTION noted that "in quite a different category are the campaigns of legitimate trade unions to displace and destroy the Communist-front organizations still masquerading as labor unions. These drives must be carried on until these Communist stooge organizations are wholly eradicated."

The conduct of the Teamsters was referred to as "particularly irresponsible."

"The Teamsters have picketed plants where Brewery Workers' contracts were in effect, and, worse, have joined with employers in seeking to break strikes of the Brewery Workers Union."

ANOTHER resolution hailed the two-year-old jurisdictional disputes machinery of the CIO.

"Instead of competing with each other for workers' votes in National Labor Relations Board elections," the resolution said, "CIO unions are cooperating with each other in bringing to unorganized workers the benefits of unionism."

Dr. Nathan Feinsinger was commended and congratulated by the convention "for his successful and statesmanlike administration of the CIO jurisdictional disputes agreement during the last year."

Also commended were Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe and his staff "for the fine work they have done in promoting the successful operation" of the agreement.

ILO Chief Urges Labor To Lead For Peace, Reform

WISE and farsighted leadership from the trade union movement is necessary for a world of peace and prosperity, David A. Morse, director-general of the International Labor Office, advised the convention.

In a message to CIO Pres. Reuther, Morse said the ILO seeks to raise world labor and social standards to abolish poverty and want.

"We share a desire to help underdeveloped countries to increase productivity and production and thus raise living standards," he said.

Labor and social problems facing the world today depend for solution on international cooperation, Morse concluded as he expressed confidence that the CIO would again "throw its great influence behind efforts to achieve it."

IUE Protests Order For Lynn Vote

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week protested a National Labor Relations Board order for another election at the General Electric plant at Lynn, Mass.

"This chapter—or perhaps I should call it this round—has been won by the united front of GE and the Communist Party masquerading as the United Electrical Workers," said James B. Carey, IUE-CIO president and CIO secretary-treasurer.

The IUE-CIO Executive Board, at a special meeting called during the CIO convention, unanimously approved Carey's statement.

"The NLRB, acceding to the wishes of GE and UE, agreed to carve out a separate unit of office workers in the Lynn plant," Carey said.

"Involved in the election for this unit will be approximately 2000 office workers, whom the AFL—with the UE's heartiest encouragement—is attempting to raid."

This is the third NLRB representation election at the Lynn plant within three and a half years. The earlier ones were won by IUE-CIO.

Carey said the AFL was "permitting itself to be used . . . as a stooge for communism." He asked: "Is the new Republican NLRB playing GE's game in coddling the Communists in order to create division, in order to split a unified, militant labor movement?"

Guild, Shoe Union Name New Members To Executive Board

TWO NEW members were elected to the CIO Executive Board at the convention's final session and two unions will designate their representatives later.

Pres. Joseph L. Collis replaced Exec. Vice Pres. Ralph Novak for the Newspaper Guild and Pres. Russell Taylor succeeded James J. Mitchell for the Shoe Workers. Board members for the Optical Workers and the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union will be seated when selected by those unions.

RE-ELECTED along with the executive officers and eight vice presidents were the following: Emil Mazey, Auto; Ernest Hebert, Barbers; Karl Feller, Brewery; George Maher, Broadcast Employees; Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing; John J. Moran, Communications; R. J. Thomas, Department Store Workers.

John Grogan, Shipbuilders; M. Hedley Stone, Maritime; T. M. McCormick, Oil; Ralph Helstein, Packinghouse; Harry Sayre, Paper; Alex Bail, Playthings; William Steinberg, Radio Association.

John Green, Railroad; Joseph Childs, Rubber; David J. McDonald, Steelworkers; Sam H. Scott, Stone; William Pollock, Textile; Willard S. Townsend, Transport Service; Gustav Faber, Transport; Joseph A. Fisher, Utility; A. F. Hartung, Woodworkers.

CIO Protests Russ ILO Demands

SOVIET Russia "has no moral and legal right" to lay down conditions for rejoining the Intl. Labor Organization, the CIO declared last week in a statement issued by its International Affairs Committee.

"In view of the Soviet Union's long-standing opposition to the activities of the ILO, including an attack on the recent ILO-United Nations report on forced labor," it said, "it appears she is motivated by a desire to obstruct the work of the organization rather than any willingness to help the workers of the world.

"Unless the USSR withdraws these reservations, we believe that she should not be given the opportunity of turning the ILO into another squabbling arena."

Russia left the ILO in 1940, when it was still a specialized agency of the League of Nations. She did not rejoin when the ILO became part of the UN after World War II, but two weeks ago notified Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse of acceptance of the charter obligations, the usual process of affiliation.

However, she demanded a broader representation for workers in the ILO, and announced that she does not consider herself bound to accept rulings of the Intl. Court of Justice in settling disputes, nor to accept past ILO conventions.

The ILO rejected conditional application.

The CIO statement was issued by the Intl. Affairs Committee chairman, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers. It pointed out that the CIO has consistently supported the ILO in its purpose of promoting social justice, and cited recent attacks from opposing sources—certain employer interests and the Soviet Union.

"The CIO will continue to oppose attacks against the principles and operations of the ILO," it said, "whether they emanate from employer interests, the Soviet Union or any other source."

CIO Urges Farm Action In Wisconsin

THE WISCONSIN CIO Council last week protested to Gov. Walter Kohler against the State's growing farm crisis.

"In Wisconsin the farm depression is here," Council Pres. Charles M. Schultz wrote the Governor. "Unemployment is far above what it should be for this time of year.

"In November seasonal employment is supposed to have picked up the early September slack. This has failed to happen. Instead, even more men and women are laid off. They have been sent home from Wisconsin's farm equipment plants, from its steel and automobile factories, and from many, many others."

Humphrey Sees GOP Headed Wrong Way

THE EISENHOWER "team" is "headed for the wrong goalposts," Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) told the CIO convention.

Likening the GOP Administration to a football team, he admitted "their deception is clever enough to keep their opponents confused about who is really carrying the ball."

"Ike's the captain, but he's not the quarterback calling the signals," Humprey said. "Sometimes it looks like their deception is too good—they even confuse each other.

"Ike heroically hurls himself at the center of the line. But some of his teammates always seem to run with the ball, away around to the right!

"They're making yardage for themselves, all right, but as far as the public interest is concerned, they are just like Roy Riegels—they are headed for the wrong goal."

Humphrey warned that "money changers have again invaded the temple," and have become "the real power behind the scenes in our government."

"The country looks to Pres. Eisenhower for leadership, but they'll have to look behind him to find it—and they won't like what they find," he said.

"Ike is but the pretty bird in a gilded cage, whose sweet song and bright plumage are supposed to hold our eye, while the crows are in the kitchen, gobbling up the public's pie."

Modern-day "pirates," Humphrey charged, have "hoisted a new Jolly Roger over Washington."

"They've changed the skull and crossbones to a dollar sign, but they're just as greedily looting the public's resources and busily grasping for personal gain as any pirates of old," he explained.

"With callous disregard for the public interest, with the impudent conviction with what's good for them is good for the rest of us, the cold and calculating hands of manipulators from the nation's money marts are recasting the government to suit themselves.

"The heart of humanity is being ripped from government, and replaced by worship of the almighty dollar.

"The financial barons are in the saddle, and riding high. They're no longer content with pulling the wires from behind the scenes. They're right in the driver's seat. They've taken over—lock, stock and barrel. Big business at last has the Bankers' Administration it has long sought."

The real goal has been "power for power's sake," Humphrey said, adding that such power "is now being used and abused to meet their own ends, without bothering with the usual legislative processes."

"They haven't been satisfied with turning back the clock 20 years," he said.

"They've thrown away the calendar, and turned back 50 to 60 years instead. They're back to the days of Harrison, McKinley and GOP Boss Mark Hanna—they're back to the heydays of union-busting, spoils system, exploitation, special privilege, and economic isolationism.

"There are forces of economic imperialism at work today just as ruthless as in the darkest days of our country's never-ending struggle for social progress and equality of opportunity—and just as unconcerned about the fate of the average man, as long as the head table is piled high with the goodies of life."

What Happened To That 'Mess'—

That "mess" the Eisenhower Administration inherited from the Democrats and what the GOP did with it were described by Sen. Humphrey:

"Sixty-five million employed, a gross national profit of $325 billion, a foreign policy that has stopped Communist aggression, our defense built up to the point where we can depend upon our security and know that we can defend ourselves, a nation that has built more homes than any nation on earth, the schools of America filled with our children, higher education at higher levels than ever in the nation's history, the profits of business at unprecedented rates. That is the 'mess' we left this outfit.

"And what have they done with it? They have apologized, apologized and apologized about doing nothing about anything. This is the greatest do-nothing administration in the nation's history. They did not 'have time,' you know, to make good on the promise to improve these laws."

Vet Benefits Get A Hand

PROTECTION of the rights of veterans and servicemen was the theme of a CIO convention resolution.

The resolution criticized the Eisenhower Administration for closing down Veterans Administration hospitals, eliminating out-patient medical and dental care for veterans, attempting to reduce the school allowance under the GI Bill of Rights, increasing the GI loan interest rate, and trying to reduce disability pension payments.

The resolution contained a six-point program for ex-servicemen and members of the armed forces, including a call for the elimination of discrimination in the armed forces.

'Coat-Tail Riders, Hacks Going Out Of Style'—Kroll

AN OLD MEMBER of the CIO Clothing Workers, Jack Kroll, made a fashion forecast to the convention in his role as national director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

"Coat-tails," he predicted, "will be completely out of style in 1954."

This means that candidates for political office will have to win elections on their own merits, he said.

"People think this is going to be a good year for liberal and progressive candidates," he warned. "You are likely to see the old party hacks, those old has-beens, coming out and trying to get nominations.

"I say to them that the people will not buy them, the people want no part of the old party hacks. And the party, regardless of which one it is, that gives us good liberal people as candidates, those are the people that our members will vote for and the people of America will vote for."

In looking ahead to what he believes will happen in 1954, Kroll also told the delegates what CIO political actionists can do about it. He predicted that the reactionary war chest will be financed by Texas oil millions as well as by the duPonts, Rockefellers, Ford and General Motors, and said:

"I DON'T think that so far as the CIO-PAC is concerned that we need the kind of money our opponents have, but we do need SOME money. We can work pretty well without money, but occasionally we do need some, and the more money you give us the better job your PAC can do in city, state and national levels.

"I would ask you to do the best you can in your voluntary dollar collections — and the earlier you get in your dollars the more effective they will be."

On the basis of incomplete returns, he estimated that more than 1000 CIO members were elected to office in their local communities in this year's voting.

PAC Dir. Jack Kroll waves a greeting near Auditorium.

A Suit That's Right Size For The Job

ARTHUR GOLDBERG has a new fighting uniform, one he figures is just right for "cutting the Administration down to size."

CIO's general counsel is a "perfect 42" when it comes to suits, but for political warfare, he figures that the giant size 65 jacket presented by the CIO Clothing Workers will give him plenty of room to swing on the Dixiecrats and the McCarthyites alike.

Presentation to Goldberg of the coat of an oversize zoot suit—it was called a sport coat, but it looked like no sporty creation—was one of the lighter moments of the CIO convention.

As a special order of business interrupting debate on political action, USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald summoned Goldberg and ACW Executive Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg to the stage.

THEREUPON McDonald read a letter from Blumberg explaining the gift to Goldberg:

"This coat was made to order for him when Harry Truman was President of the U. S. and Mr. Goldberg was a very big man in Washington at that time. The coat may now be too big for him and may need some alterations, but I am confident that (Sens.) Jenner and McCarthy will gladly cut him down to size."

Amid laughter from the platform and the convention hall, Goldberg smilingly unwrapped the huge package, donned the barrel-size coat, noted "it is not a bad coat, it has a union label in it." Then, and more seriously, he added:

ROOM FOR SWINGING — CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg shows his oversize suit.

"Now they said that we are being cut down to size by the present Administration, and they suggested that we alter this coat. Well, we are not going to do it; what we are going to do is cut the Administration down to size."

Incidentally, the Amalgamated expert tailors figure the size 65 jacket will remain size 65, saying "it would cost him $100 to alter that coat."

"Labor's Almanack For 1954" doesn't predict the weather . . . And doesn't advertise any patent medicine cures. It does give the straight dope on key election-year dates week by week through 1954, Plus interesting facts on U. S. labor history, quotations from FDR and Lincoln, photos of historic labor events. CIO-PAC offers "Labor's Almanack For 1954"—a good gift for Christmas, a "must" for unionists—at moderate prices. (Details on Page 2.)

Mitchell Draws GOP Fire For Pledge Of Minimum Wage Hike

THE PLEDGE of Administration backing for a higher minimum wage and extended coverage which Sec. of Labor James P. Mitchell gave the CIO convention last week brought the new Labor Dept. head into disagreement with a key Republican leader in Congress.

Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.), whose House Labor Committee would have to draft the legislation Mitchell proposed, said that any move to broaden coverage of the law to cover workers now exempt seemed to him to run counter to any effort to boost the minimum.

"We can either have a relatively low minimum with few exemptions or a relatively high minimum with many exemptions," McConnell said.

Mitchell, however, told the CIO that he did not believe present minimum wage coverage is adequate to what "America wants and must have" because "of the 63 million working people almost two-thirds have no federal protection now against substandard wages." He also said he would recommend action to boost the minimum in the next session.

McConnell complained that Mitchell's speech raised a "very complex" labor issue at a time when his committee already has its hands full trying to revise the Taft-Hartley Act. He said he wished Mitchell had conferred with him before calling for a higher and broader minimum wage law.

BEHIND Mitchell's recommendations, however, were strong political pressures of which McConnell may not have been aware. One of the last acts of former Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin was a decision to recommend that the minimum wage be increased from the present 75 cents to $1 an hour. The CIO wants an increase to at least $1.25.

This recommendation was sent to the Budget Bureau, over objections from the White House staff by Lloyd A. Mashburn as Acting Secretary in the interim between Durkin's resignation and Mitchell's appointment. Mashburn, who resigned the day Mitchell was appointed, also recommended the return of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service to the Labor Dept.

While Mashburn's actions have not been officially acknowledged, the fact that they took place became known in spite of Budget Bureau efforts to keep them secret. Mitchell, therefore, was confronted with the important economic and political decision of whether he could ask for less in this area.

Timetable For 1954—

PAC Packs A Punch In New 'Labor Almanack'

DO YOU KNOW . . . the founding date of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers?

. . . When the sitdowns began in auto?

. . . When the Steelworkers cracked Big Steel with their first contract?

. . . The big days, the big years in the history of American labor?

. . . Some pointed quotations from FDR and Abraham Lincoln?

. . . And the final days for registration to vote in primary and general elections in your state?

The answers to those questions, and to many more, are contained in the newly-issued CIO-PAC "Labor Almanack for 1954."

Copies of the brightly-illustrated 12-page almanack were first distributed to delegates to the recent National CIO convention, and now are available at moderate prices from CIO-PAC national headquarters in Washington.

Even The Score In '54—Give A Buck To PAC!

The PAC "Labor Almanack" is more than just a calendar hitting the highlights of many decades of union growth in the United States. It packs a punch, too, with the first complete and detailed listing of all election deadlines during the coming election year.

On the back page, a state-by-state table gives complete information: registration and poll-tax deadlines, filing dates for candidates, election dates, and contested offices for Congress, state legislatures, and governor and other state offices. And the relevant deadline for a particular state is contained on each month's calender.

PAC's "Labor Almanack for 1954" is a first class job for every unionist's home and every union or council hall. Copies, at 60c for single orders or 50c in bulk orders, are available from CIO-PAC, 1346 Connecticut Ave. N. W., Washington 6. D. C.

Steel Wins On Ore Boats

THE CIO Steelworkers have won a major victory in its campaign to organize the Great Lakes ore boat seamen.

In a National Labor Relations Board election among workers of the Pittsburgh Steamship Div. of U. S. Steel, USA-CIO received 700 votes to 92 for the AFL Seafarers.

NEGOTIATIONS were resumed last week in strike of three CIO Auto Workers' locals against the North American Aviation Corp., with Vice Pres. John W. Livingston heading union bargainers in sessions at Los Angeles. Meantime, UAW-CIO members continued to picket (above) at Columbus, O., plant, where the company has been concentrating its strikebreaking efforts but has failed to break UAW picket lines.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

WE HAVE HEARD a lot the past few weeks about what supposedly went on in the White House on Feb. 6, 1946, regarding Harry Dexter White.

It is instructive to look back and see what else was going on that day, when the White "case" first reached the attention of a relatively new Pres. Truman.

Communist guerrilla bands based in Yugoslavia and Albania were attacking Greece, while Vishinsky in the United Nations was screeching that British troops in Greece were "aggressors" and asking their withdrawal. It was a major crisis for the then-new world organization, which only the week before had settled another bitter East-West controversy and selected its first secretary-general, Trygve Lie.

Russian troops were in northern Iran, and Truman and the British were demanding in the UN that the Soviets obey their treaty obligations and get out.

In Congress on Feb. 6 the Case Bill—predecessor of Taft-Hartley—was perfected by the House, for passage the next day. Truman tried to block the bill, later successfully vetoed it.

Congress was running a full-scale Pearl Harbor investigation, in which some Republicans were trying to prove that Roosevelt and Sec. of State Cordell Hull "provoked" Japan into a war. A Navy Captain charged Gen. George Marshall and Adm. Dolly Stark with a "frameup" to place the Pearl Harbor blame on other officers.

On Feb. 6, 1946, there were widespread industrial disputes. Hundreds of thousands of workers in steel, electrical and automotive industries were on strike to force their employers to answer their grievances and wage demands after the wartime "freeze."

On Feb. 4 the Supreme Court upheld the death sentence for Gen. Yamashita, a Japanese general. The issue went to Pres. Truman, to consider executive clemency.

Buried Under Pile Of Coal

Truman was buried under a pile of coal. Sometime late in the day of Feb. 6, 1946, Sec. of State Jimmy Byrnes came digging into the coal pile, scraping off one lump and another, and waving at the President an unauthenticated report on Harry Dexter White.

Truman did not know exactly what to do about it. He thought it was primarily the business of the late Fred M. Vinson, then Secretary of the Treasury.

Vinson, according to the evidence available—for Vinson is a dead man—adopted the viewpoint that J. Edgar Hoover of the FBI should either produce his witnesses or stop trying to get White fired. Or, as Mr. Truman suggested, maybe, everybody concerned thought that the sensible thing was to cover White with wiretaps and surveillance and give him rope enough to hang himself.

Herbert Brownell's tactics in the White "case" were in exact imitation of Joe McCarthy's tactics. First you make a huge accusation, such as a charge that White was "deliberately promoted" by people who knew him to be a Russian spy, and then you tame down the accusation for sworn congressional hearings, and claim that Truman was guilty of "laxity."

Eisenhower has been in the White House long enough to learn that a green President has to make many decisions on issues about which he knows little. But he hasn't had any such day as Feb. 6, 1946, was for the harassed Mr. Truman. On his Thanksgiving vacation in Augusta, he should have had time to mediate and decide whether he will tolerate Brownell's elevation of McCarthyism to the Cabinet level.

Price Index Zooms Again

THE COST OF LIVING went up again last month for the eighth month in a row, and the climb was enough to give some one million members of the CIO Auto Workers an escalator wage increase of 2c an hour.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics last week reported that the consumers price index reached 115.4 of the 1947-'49 base in mid-October. It was the eighth straight monthly gain, and the fifth straight month in which the index has set a new record.

The index now is a full 2 points above the mid-February figures when the Republican Administration took over after campaign promises to bring down the cost of living. Nevertheless, BLS Commissioner Ewan Clague called prices "practically stable."

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS Index:

CIO Asks Help For 'Forgotten' Family Farms

By MILTON PLUMB

HOUSE Agriculture Committee officials returned to Washington last week from their Far West hearings with a CIO warning that continued support of city workers for legislation to aid farmers will require more than fair price supports.

"The nation's farm program must hold out some hope for the forgotten two-thirds of our farmers whose net income averages around $860 a year and who are unable to contribute to the general prosperity while living at this level of hard necessity," Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol of the California CIO Council told the committee.

Despol summed up the position of the CIO in regard to the farm problem at the final hearing in Whittier, Calif. The CIO was also represented by Joseph Applebaum, western regional director of the CIO Chemical Workers, who proposed using electric power produced by atomic energy to help meet the problem of the West's water shortages. (See separate story.)

"Our concern with the farm program," Despol said, "is that it brings the greatest degree of prosperity to the largest number of farmers. Today we raise the question whether price supports bring enough prosperity to enough farmers."

Income Figures

Citing figures from the 1950 Census of Agriculture, the California CIO official pointed out that 33% of the commercial farms of the nation account for 75% of their total sales. Included in this group, he said, were all commercial farms with annual sales of $5000 or more. Such farms average $13,400 a year in products sold.

Still citing census figures, Despol broke down the income of the top third of the nation's commercial farms still further as follows:

"Three per cent of the farms make 27% of the total sales and average gross sales of $54,853 a year. These farms reap great benefits from price supports.

"The next 10% of the farms make 25% of the sales and average $14,289 a year each in products sold. They benefit substantially from price supports."

Following the top 13% come 20% of the farms with average sales of $7000 a year making 23% of total farm sales, he continued. These, too, he said, can get some benefit from price supports.

Is This Prosperity?

"The remaining 67% of the farms have annual sales of less than $5000 a year, average as a group only $2150 a year, and as a group make only 25% of all commercial farm sales," Despol said.

Since the realized net income of farm operators as a whole is only 40% of cash receipts from farm marketings, he continued, if this lower two-thirds of the farms do as well as the average, the net income of their operators would average only $860 a year and, at best, would be $2000 a year.

"Is this prosperity for a farm family? Can such a family buy any of the products of our industrial workers over and above the barest necessities? Do farm families contribute to general prosperity while living at these levels of hard necessity?," Despol asked.

"These questions," he said "answer themselves."

Reaffirming CIO's pledge of full support for an agricultural program designed to provide both an adequate farm income for farmers and maximum agricultural output, the California CIO official continued.

"CIO favors farm price supports, but it insists that this is not enough. Farm programs which can bring help to no more than one-third of all farms, and these the most prosperous farms, are not a good enough remedy for the condition of American farmers."

Despol said that the CIO does not have "all the answers" as to how sufficient aid can be extended to the lower two-thirds to raise their living conditions. He suggested that there is need for labor, farmers and industry to sit down and work out an extension of present farm programs to meet the needs for farmers not being helped by the price support program.

"We say to this committee that in order to win the full and unqualified support of city workers your farm programs must reach beyond the prosperous one-third and must hold out some hope for the forgotten two-thirds," Despol continued.

"We intend and we hope to be able to continue to support the farm programs as we have in the past. But nothing can make that more surely impossible for us than to discover that these programs are making the rich farms richer and fewer, while leaving the poor farms without help or hope as they grow more numerous."

"We have supported the farm price-support program which the farmers themselves initiated in 1933." Despol continued. "We of the CIO have supported government programs to help soil conservation and irrigation and to prevent flood disasters.

"We believe that the government's program of assurance to the farmers must continue, that growing investment in mechanization to increase farm productivity must be encouraged, that farm production must continue to grow, and that some way must be found to aid the now forgotten two-thirds of our farmers."

Important Consumers

Despol pointed out that more than 87,000 workers represented by the California CIO Council belong to unions having all or a portion of their membership in industries directly related to farm production and dependent on the well-being of the farm population.

"In the state of California where agriculture is such a predominant factor in our state economy, we are more than usually conscious of the importance to the city worker of the welfare of those who are producing on the farm," he said.

"We recognize that the farmers are an important consumer group in this nation and in this state. We know that the health of California's economy depends on the health of its agricultural production."

CONCLUSION of Far Western tour by House Agriculture Committee in Poet's Hall, Whittier, Calif., heard CIO demand that nation's farm program help the "forgotten two-third" of farmers who average about $860 a year.

Atomic Energy For Salt Water Conversion Called Answer To West's Irrigation Needs

USE OF ATOMIC energy for the large-scale conversion of salt water into fresh water for irrigation and other uses in areas of short supply was called for by the CIO in testimony before the House Agriculture Committee in Whittier, Calif.

Joseph Applebaum, western regional director for the CIO Chemical Workers, urged that an atomic energy power reactor be built for this purpose. He said it should be located in the Western area of water shortage "to provide the estimated 500,000 kilowatts it would take to produce one million acre feet of fresh water from sea water at a cost that agriculture can afford to pay."

Testifying after many farmers had told the committee of their critical water shortage problems, Appelbaum said that the conversion of sea water for irrigation use "is not only entirely feasible but many processes can be used to bring it about." He filed a long list of such methods compiled by the Commerce Dept.

"The CIO is not prepared at this time to single out any particular process as the most suitable for development," he said.

"We are prepared to show, however, that at least one of the processes — even under existing power rates—is capable of providing fresh water from salt water at a cost per acre foot which is actually less than is now being paid not only for municipal water but for irrigation water in some districts."

Appelbaum pointed out that vast amounts of electricity are needed for such conversion and that in many of the areas where water is needed, serious power shortages exist. He said he was appearing before the committee because the CIO believes that "the finding of additional sources of power, at lower costs, is one of our most important needs as a nation."

Plenty Of Opportunity For Old Apple Salesmen

JOHN L. McCAFFREY has a prescription for the unemployed—make salesmen out of 'em.

McCaffrey ought to know. He's president of International Harvester Corp. which is laying off workers at the rate of 1000 a month. Back in September, I-H had 10,000 laid off; now there are 12,000.

This doesn't alarm McCaffrey. There comes a time," said he to a convention of truckers, "when we have to go down a little, then level off."

(Mac has leveled off at a salary of $160,000 and a pension of $20,000.)

Delegates to a conference of the CIO Auto Workers Agricultural Implement Workers Council in Moline, Ill., weren't nearly as calm as McCaffrey about this "level off" business. Representing 130,000 workers in the implement industry, they showed concern for the 36,000 unemployed, 7000 of them in the Chicago area alone.

The selling job they plan is one to convince farmers to join in pressing for legislation to raise farm and city purchasing power.

"This country has everything—but salesmen," said McCaffrey. "Unless salesmen go out and sell their products, the tried and true door-to-door approach, this country is going to have a depressed economy—more so than the adjustment period we are going through now."

The farmers who haven't been buying McCaffrey's tractors and implements—because farm income is down—are simply "confused" by not knowing how much or what to grow. But he expressed his confidence in the Administration to solve the farmers' "confusion" in the next few months.

You get the idea from reading Mr. M's speech that he is a little vexed with the farmers who think they have a growing depression on their hands. He thinks they lack perspective.

If Pres. McCaffrey can have a plan, so can we. We can tell him where to get the salesmen—12,000 of them. They are the I-H workers who have been "leveled off" and who should be able to speak plainly to the farmers. They're confused, too.

Come to think of it, we remember another President who thought the unemployed should be salesmen. This other fellow's name was Hoover—and he favored jobless workers selling apples on street corners.

Resolutions In Summary—

Union Democracy Upheld, Racketeers Hit

THE TRADITIONAL stand of the CIO against unethical practices inside and outside the labor movement, and for protection of the rights of individual members, was reaffirmed by the convention as a "fundamental basis for decent and effective trade unionism."

"We in the CIO are determined to continue those policies which have made our organization clean, decent and honest, and to keep it so," the resolution said.

Public officials who betray their trust and businessmen who use corrupt methods and bribery to gain their ends are both equally guilty of wrong-doing; they can no more—and no less—escape blame for their actions than the racketeers who prey upon the labor movement, seeking to use its respected organizations as a front for nefarious personal gain.

"High ethical standards are essential to our democratic way of life and the well-being of our people. Freedom from political corruption depends upon freedom from both moral and legal guilt.

"The CIO joins all decent Americans concerned for the future of our nation in expressing unqualified opposition to such practices."

The resolution was adopted "in the firm determination that our members shall not be denied their rights to an honest, decent, democratic trade unionism singlemindedly devoted to the advancement of the interests of American workers and the welfare of the nation.

"We call upon other elements of our society—particularly all branches of government and industry—to act with equal vigor against dishonest and unethical practices wherever they may be found within their ranks," it concluded.

Public Relations

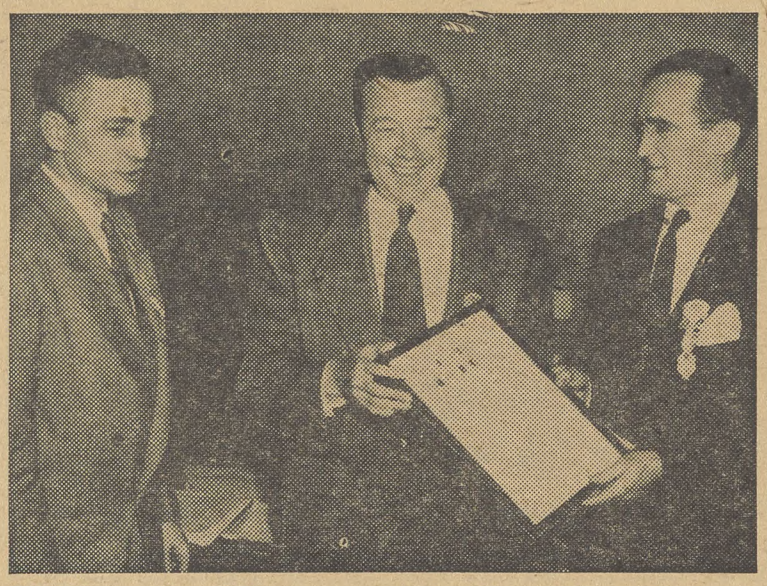
Action of the CIO in initiating a nationwide public relations program was approved by the convention in a resolution that endorsed the CIO radio program and urged all affiliates to continue supporting it.

The resolution cited CIO's consciousness of the need for good public relations, and recounted some of the advances in this field over the last 15 years.

"In many communities," it recalled, "an original anti-union sentiment has been neutralized or overcome by the actions of our unions in demonstrating that they are an integral part of the community, and that they are devoted to the community welfare and conscious of their social responsibilities."

In sponsoring the radio broadcasts of John W. Vandercook over the ABC network, the resolution said, "the CIO has endeavored to add another liberal voice on the air waves, to help the listening public receive reliable, thoughtful and liberal interpretation of the news; and, through the commercial announcements, to gain a better understanding of the CIO, its structure and its program objectives.

"This program was planed to appeal to the general public, rather than to duplicate the work of the labor press in reaching primarily our own members," it explained. "In the two months on the air, the CIO radio program has gained a large listening audience, has received highly favorable reviews and attention in the press, and is well on the road to fulfilling its public relations objectives."



SCROLL citing CIO support of the City of Hope National Medical Center was presented to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther by Joseph A. Beirne, Communications Workers president and CIO Community Services Committee chairman. At left, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

CIO Fair Labor Group Named

CIO's Committee on Fair Labor Standards was reactivated at the convention's final session. Pres. Walter P. Reuther designated Solomon Barkin of the CIO Textile Workers as chairman of the group.

Others appointed were: Henry Paley, Paper; Nat Weinberg and Paul Sifton, Auto; John Edelman, Textile; Sylvia Gottlieb, Communications; David Lasser, Electrical; Steve Levitsky, Steel; Gladys Dickason, Clothing; and Woodrow Ginsburg, Rubber. Additional members will be named later.

CIO-CSC

The convention called on CIO affiliates to develop Community Services Committee projects "as a vital and integral part of the CIO."

A resolution declared the community services program is one "of action and service which has brought aid and comfort to union men and women and to citizens generally.

"It is a program which recognizes clearly that what is good for the community is good for the CIO," the resolution continued. "In time of need, in strikes and disasters, the community services program has served the CIO well."

CSC accomplishments include union counsellors' training programs, CIO participation in federated fund-raising and planning activities, the program for adequate labor and consumer representation on Blue Cross boards, the blood donor program and civil defense activities.

Support Of Strikes

Support "for all legitimate strikes" was pledged by the CIO and its affiliates in a convention resolution.

The resolution pointed out that CIO unions do not "lightly decide to strike." It said, however, " a strike is, in many situations, the workers' only weapon—and recourse to it their only hope of winning decent wages, hours and working conditions.

"A strike lost anywhere tempts reactionary employers to discard collective bargaining in favor of unilaterally imposed wages and working conditions," the resolution continued. "In contrast, a successful strike may result in the same benefits being achieved by many thousands of workers not directly involved in the strike."

Features Resume In Next Issue

Several regular features of The CIO News—including the editorial, commentary and consumer pages—will be resumed with the next issue. Their publication has been interrupted by the CIO convention issues and limited space in this week's paper.

Canal Zone Wage Parity, Puerto Rico Gains Urged

CONSIDERATION for workers in the Caribbean area was voiced in three resolutions adopted by the CIO convention. Highlights are:

CANAL ZONE: The CIO urged all civilian worker in the Panama Canal Zone to join Local 900 of the Government & Civil Employees Organizing Committee in an effort to eliminate "the artificial barriers to better living standards."

The resolution referred to the discriminatory practices under which local rate workers received as much as $1.50 an hour less than U. S. rate workers in similar jobs.

"The CIO urges all agencies of our government concerned with Canal Zone policies to conform to American principles of fair play so that we may merit the good will of free peoples everywhere," the resolution concluded.

PUERTO RICO: The convention hailed the development of the CIO and its affiliates in Puerto Rico, where 80,000 members have been signed up in the last four years.

The island was granted autonomous government in a pact with the U. S. last year. The resolution congratulated the Puerto Ricans, and their leaders including Gov. Luis Munoz Marin, "for their achievements in the field of democracy and self government."

Gov. Munoz and the Puerto Rican Legislature were asked "to provide the safeguards necessary to assure to the workers of Puerto Rico their just participation in the fruits of the island's industrialization program."

VIRGIN ISLANDS: The CIO urged that "pending the grant to the Virgin Islands of the right to elect its own governor, the practice of appointing as governor a native of those islands be continued." Interior Sec. McKay has announced his intention of replacing the present governor in the near future.

150 Foreign Unionists At Convention

The visitors are in this country as members of teams sponsored by Foreign Operations Administration and the Dept. of Labor. Most of them are spending only a few weeks here, but some are in the United States for a year's stay under FOA's work-study training program.

Their hosts for the convention visit were the members of the CIO Committee on International Affairs. Associate Dir. Harry H. Pollak arranged their convention program.

Countries represented in the group included Italy, Germany, Mexico, Nicaragua, Uruguay, Austria, Netherlands, Switzerland, Sweden, Haiti, Great Britain, Greece and the Philippines.

Resolutions In Summary—

'The People Won't Be Pulled Back To Past'

THE EISENHOWER Administration's failure to act either in the field of international or domestic affairs was scored as "a hazard to the welfare of our country" by the CIO Convention in a political action resolution.

"We are not alone in this belief," the resolution said. "It has been clearly indicated by the results of special elections and municipal elections held this year. The resentment of the people in all walks of life toward the cynical campaign promises of a year ago has become manifest.

"The election returns indicate that people still search for leadership to move our country forward, and they will reject any attempts to pull them back into the past."

Criticizing Pres. Eisenhower's "vacillating resistance to domination by the extreme right wing of the Republican Party," the PAC resolution reminded that "the 1952 Republican victory was not a mandate for reaction.

"Yet, to an unparalleled degree, the direction of the Administration has been turned over by the President to certain reactionary congressional leaders and cabinet members."

Looking to the future, the resolution pointed out that "only an Administration conscious of the future of America and dedicated to the achievement of an ever-expanding economy, based upon the full utilization of our productive resources, can cope with problems that lie ahead."

CIO's Political Action Committee was directed to "continue its traditionally non-partisan" support of progressive forces in the two major parties. Support for CIO-PAC's voluntary dollar drive was reaffirmed for 1954.

U. S. Employes

An end to harassment of federal employes by the Eisenhower Administration and guarantees of the bargaining rights of all federal, state and local government workers were demanded in a series of CIO resolutions.

"The CIO calls upon the Administration to put an end to the attacks on the civil service career system," one resolution stated. "We call on the Administration to strengthen the civil service system and to give assurance to government employes that they will not be subjected to harassment and indiscriminate firing.

"We call upon the Administration to assist career employes already fired from government service to find other jobs either in private or public employment."

Another resolution said that the firing and harassment of federal employes and appropriation cuts has weakened government services.

Union Labels

"Unremitting activity is necessary to maintain and increase the effectiveness" of CIO union label campaigns, the convention said.

The delegates endorsed all CIO union label campaigns and urged the Committee on Union Labels to step up CIO activities in support of such drives.

"The cooperation of union members and of the general public in union label campaigns not only strengthens the labor movement in organized plants, but aids in securing recognition from employers otherwise disposed to deny recognition to their workers' unions," the resolution said.

It specifically mentioned the label campaigns of the Clothing Workers, Paperworkers, Brewery Workers and Lithographers.

Histadrut

A resolution also pledged the CIO's "fullest cooperation to the American Trade Union Council of the National Committee for Labor Israel."

The resolution listed outstanding accomplishments of Histadrut during its 33 years. It hailed the growth of the movement which now has more than a half million members. It declared, "With dependents, Histadrut represents one-half of the entire population of Israel, while its social and health services embrace two-thirds of the people, Jew and Arab alike."

The U. S. and the United Nations were urged to pursue a policy leading toward permanent peace between Israel and the surrounding Arab states without impairing the rights of these countries.

Shipbuilding

A 19-point program to strengthen the U. S. merchant marine and shipbuilding industries was urged by a CIO convention resolution.

The first plank called for CIO action to attempt to stop the Administration's efforts to eliminate the U. S. Public Health Service hospitals which care for merchant seamen.

Also urged were a proper subsidy program for the merchant marine, a long-range ship replacement program for U. S. private shipyards, and legislation to halt transfer of American ships to foreign registry and to bring back under the American flag ships owned by U. S. companies flying foreign flags.

"The shipbuilding and repair industry is still depressed with unemployment in shipbuilding centers," the resolution said. "Despite this fact, American shipowners and the U. S. Government continue to place orders with foreign shipyards which are rapidly expanding and already have a backlog of orders which will take years to fill."

Cooperatives

A CIO convention resolution reaffirmed support for credit unions and all other legitimate cooperatives. It called them "vital agencies which serve to advance the interest of all consumers in our national economy."

It pointed out that "several hundred CIO-inspired credit unions have saved million of dollars which otherwise would have been paid out (by CIO members) to small loan companies" charging excessively high interest rates.

The cooperative movement was hailed as "an effective agency in the effort to increase the purchasing power of workers' wages" and "a growing force in the battle against monopolies."

War Memorials

The CIO convention called for the passage of three bills to establish a National War Memorial Arts Commission. The three measures are H.R. 5397, H.R. 5136 and S. 1109.

"These bills would correct a glaring deficiency in the composition of the present Fine Arts Commission, which in the past has not included representation by many of the groups which possess and cherish a definite, direct and leading interest in the arts and the culture of our great nation," the resolution declared.

Handicapped

"Rehabilitation services and employment opportunities . . . to restore America's handicapped to useful citizenship" were urged in a resolution adopted by the CIO convention.

The resolution commended CIO affiliates for activities in behalf of the handicapped and called for expansion of efforts "to meet this tragic and growing need."

City Of Hope

The CIO convention joined in celebrating the 40th anniversary of the City of Hope National Medical Center, near Los Angeles. In these four decades, a resolution said, thousands of members of the labor movement have been restored to health through the services of the City of Hope.

The CIO reaffirmed its support of the City of Hope, and urged all its affiliates "to give moral and material support to this important work."

Women's Status Bill Again Gains Convention Support

A CONVENTION resolution reaffirmed CIO support for the Women's Status Bill and its opposition to the miscalled Equal Rights Amendment or similar measures that would endanger protective labor and social legislation affecting women workers.

Freedom from political interference was urged for the Women's Bureau in the Labor Dept. Despite the handicap of a small budget, the resolution said, the bureau has furthered understanding of protective legislation, equal pay laws and women's rights. At present it is threatened with further staff reductions and harmful political pressure.

The CIO pledged to continue its fight for passage of effective federal and state laws to safeguard the principle of equal pay for equal work, while recognizing that effective administration of such laws requires not only proper government machinery but strong unions.

CIO affiliates were called upon to cooperate with the Committee on Civil Rights to intensify efforts to overcome discrimination against women through clauses in union contracts against discrimination in pay, hiring, up-grading, training, layoff or similar procedures.

Women And The 'Family Voter' To Get Special PAC Attention

A PROGRAM for "integrating the family voter into the CIO political action program" was adopted by the convention in recognition of the growing importance of women voters in all phases of the nation's political life.

Citing the fact that there are now 1.5 million more women than men of voting age and the "increasingly active role in politics" taken by women in the 1952 presidential election and in local contests, the convention warned:

"Anti-labor groups have conducted in the past, and at present are conducting, well-organized and effective campaigns to mobilize the growing political effectiveness of women as voters and as campaign workers.

"In many instances these campaigns are attempting to reach into industrial communities and affect the wives of CIO members and women members of our organizations."

To help counteract this campaign, the CIO-PAC was authorized to conduct a series of regional conferences on women voters, with all affiliated unions and councils urged to participate.

All CIO councils and unions also were urged, where practicable, to assign PAC staff members to responsibility "for integrating the family voter program into the over-all political action program."

Economic Outlook Says—

Guaranteed Annual Wage 'Basic Unsolved Problem Of Democracy'

THE GUARANTEED annual wage, bargaining goal of many CIO unions, is the "basic unsolved problem of democracy," the current issue of the CIO Economic Outlook declares.

It is a problem that must be overcome, the publication of the CIO Dept. of Education & Research says, "not only for the welfare of our own people, but so that we may help develop and strengthen the free world."

In asking for the GAW, the CIO is challenging the most powerful business interests to tackle the evils of mass unemployment seriously, the Outlook states, but instead of joining in a quest for practical solutions, industry spokesmen maintain that "we are asking the impossible."

"THE SPOKESMEN for business are again looking at cost, not human welfare," it says. "They forget or never knew the dreadful anxiety and the suffering that result from lay-offs and inability to find a job. To them, the measures of success are sales and profit figures.

"This is an old story . . . From the start of the industrial revolution the workers have had to battle against the inhuman nature of modern industry, its callous unconcern with the people who serve its machines and buy its products. Stunted lives, maimed bodies and ruined hopes have never appeared on corporate balance sheets."

The CIO and earlier unions, the Outlook recalled, have fought against such things as child labor, unsafe machines, the speedup, unhealthy working conditions "and the entire approach of driving a man to the utmost and then dropping him on the scrap heap when his strength or usefulness was gone."

"AS WE HAVE protested each abuse," it continues, "we have been told that we were asking for the impossible, that we were going to ruin business, that we were interfering with the rights of management . . .

"All the arguments now used against guaranteed wages were being used only five years ago against our demands for pension clauses in union contracts."

The Outlook points out that CIO unions are "flexible and practical" in formulating their proposals, and recognize that individual plans must be tailored to specific industries.

Chrysler Sounds Off Against Wage Plan

Pres. L. L. Colbert of the Chrysler Corp. had the CIO Auto Workers wondering last week—wondering how he could condemn the guaranteed annual wage as "impractical" because of the industry's "instability," before the union even has a plan.

"How does Mr. Colbert know that what we will propose is not feasible before he knows what we will propose?" asked Dir. Norman Matthews of the union's Chrysler Dept. "We are still studying it . . . When the Chrysler Corp. rather than its workers bears the major cost of instability, there will be less of it."

CIO, Major Unions Join With West Virginia Council In Planning For '54 Election Drive

NATIONAL CIO and several international unions have pledged cooperation with the West Virginia CIO Council in the 1954 congressional campaign.

The pledges were given at a meeting called during the Cleveland convention by the new president of the council, Paul Rusen, who is also director of CIO Steelworkers Dist. 23 which includes West Virginia and parts of Ohio and Kentucky.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther called for recapturing the spirit of early days of CIO when all unions pitched in together in meeting a common problem.

Reuther, who is a native of Wheeling, W. Va., praised the PAC job already under way in the State.

ANOTHER West Virginia native, John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president, recalled that he and another Mine Workers organizer were beaten up, thrown in a river and given up for dead when they entered the State many years ago.

He said that CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Van A. Bittner, former director of the CIO Southern Organizing Committee, who were then Mine Workers organizers, kept going back to West Virginia until the miners were organized. Later through organized labor's efforts officials favorable to unions were elected, he pointed out.

RIFFE URGED the Council to coordinate its political action with that of the Mine Workers and the AFL.

"The political situation can be improved," he said. "You'll have to sacrifice a little. If you don't do that you'll have to sacrifice a great deal."

Rusen said the council faces a tough fight in 1954 to help retain the present Democratic representatives and to re-elect Sen. Neely, and to defeat the one Republican congressman who was elected in 1952.

He praised the PAC work of the Textile Workers at Parkersburg and the Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers local at Glendale, which already has collected $460 for PAC.

THE NATIONAL CIO also was represented by Robert Oliver, assistant to Reuther; Carl McPeak, assistant to Riffe in charge of councils, and George DeNucci, CIO regional director. DeNucci said that his new assistant, Robert Edwards, would work in West Virginia to aid the PAC program.

National PAC was represented by Darrell Smith, assistant to PAC Dir. Jack Kroll.

International union officers present included Pres. O. A. Knight, Oil Workers; Pres. Burl Phares and Vice Pres. Leland Beard, Glass Workers; Pres. Elwood Swisher, Chemical Workers; Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray, Government & Civic Workers; PJ&NW Pres. Alex Bail; Glen Watts, Communications Workers board member, and Harry Block, Electrical Workers board member.

Other unions represented included Brewery, Furniture and Textile.

'Good Government Begins At Home,' CIO Reminds

CIO COUNCILS and local unions were urged to participate in city, county and state elections "in order to insure good government at all levels."

In a resolution on state legislative and political action, the convention noted that "important areas in the lives of our citizens are governed by the actions of state legislative bodies."

The resolution pointed out that "too often states which have been quick to raise the 'states rights' issue have been slow to take the steps necessary to improve state legislative practices."

Workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation were stressed as major factors in the lives of working people. "The amount of payment received by an unemployed worker or a worker injured on the job is determined by the state legislature.

"INADEQUATE remuneration to state legislators is unfair to public-spirited citizens who wish to serve their states, and frequently places legislators in debt to special interest groups."

State and local CIO organizations got a pat on the back for effective political action work because "in only one instance was the nation-wide effort to achieve passage of harsh, state anti-labor laws successful."

Delegates Rap 'Callous Men' Who Cut Funds For Safety

"CALLOUS MEN" who in the name of economy are reducing federal and state appropriations for safety and health regulations were scored by the CIO convention.

A resolution cited the high toll of industrial accidents, which last year were estimated to have killed 15,000 workers and injured an additional 1.9 million.

"We refuse to be content any longer with the mere devising of programs calling for improved state legislation," it said.

"We therefore look to our national government to enact legislation necessary to impose decent and reasonable standards of safety and occupational health in all the work places of the nation, producing the goods and commodities that move in interstate and foreign commerce."

National CIO officers and the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health were directed to do all within their power "to bring about broader public knowledge and understanding of the human and economic costs of industrial accidents and diseases."

Stewart Named Economic Adviser

Pres. Eisenhower last week named Walter W. Stewart as the third member of his Council of Economic Advisers.

Stewart, 68, is a retired professor at the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, N. J. He formerly was chairman of Case Pomeroy Co., a New York investment firm, and once was an economics adviser to the Bank of England.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

I DON'T THINK it would be right to say that the 15th CIO constitutional convention is behind us. Our conventions do not look to the past; they look to the future. The future is a challenge. Our international unions, through their delegates, have laid down guideposts along the road ahead. We, the national officers of CIO, are obligated to move forward as is demanded by the mandates of the convention.

The constitution of CIO places two major departments under my direction, Organization and Councils. I believe I can pledge a program for those departments that is in keeping with the high spirit and resolve of our union.

In the field of organization:

1. We shall never tire in our efforts to organize the unorganized.
2. We will assist in material and manpower those international unions which need and desire help.
3. We will assist in coordinating the organizational efforts of our various international unions so that the maximum good is achieved from our joint action.
4. We will do all that is possible to mobilize the total spiritual and material resources of CIO to create an atmosphere of good will in which we can not only achieve the organization of the unorganized, but in which our established organizations can continue to prosper.

In the field of councils:

1. We will do all in our power to assist the councils in undertaking the grave responsibilities which they now must face.
2. We will support the councils in their efforts to achieve the leadership in their communities which is their proper function.
3. We will increase and improve our services to the councils through national programs created in the best spirit of the trade union movement.
4. Through our regional directors, we will place at the disposal of the councils the opportunity to coordinate their efforts in solving our national problems, while still maintaining their ability to deal with local matters at an effective grass-roots level.

MY PERSONAL PLEDGE to you is that I will give all of my heart and mind to the achievement of our purposes. What can be done, will be done. And maybe we'll take on a few of the things that some folks call impossible.

We do not fool ourselves by saying these times are easy. But it would be even more foolish if we were to let ourselves forget, for one moment, the ability we have to meet and conquer the greatest of hardships. We were born in depression, and nursed on struggle. Now that we are grown strong and healthy, we can meet the call to leadership as was never before possible.

The eyes of millions of American men and women are fixed on us. Countless other men and women across the world are looking to us. We will not let them down.

I also want to take the opportunity to thank the delegates to the convention, and the national officers of CIO, from the bottom of my heart for the trust and confidence they have placed in me by electing me to this important office.

TWU Calls $2 Award Floor In N. Y. City System Talks

THE CIO Transport Workers last week hailed the $2 hourly wage awarded by the arbitration panel in a dispute with nine New York City privately-owned bus lines as they opened negotiations for 44,000 workers on the city's own transit system.

TWU-CIO Pres. Michael J. Quill and Pres. Matthew Guinan, TWU-CIO Local 100, said the $2 rate is "the highest in the country" but warned "we bargain upwards."

TWU last week sent a letter to the State-created Transit Authority which operates the city's system, stating the union's demands and requesting an immediate meeting.

"We will use the $2 rate won in the award," the TWU leaders said, "as a floor, not a ceiling in our negotiations with the Transit Authority and transit managements all over the country." They declared TWU is demanding "a 40c-an-hour package."

QUILL and Guinan also hailed as a victory the decision of Judge Walter Hart, impartial adviser in the schedules dispute between TWU and the authority.

"The position of the TWU has been vindicated. The arbitrary attitude of the Transit Authority has succeeded only in delaying a decision on schedules, demoralizing its employes and adding to the anxiety of the harassed straphangers."

2 New Stations Carry Vandercock

CIO has added two new stations to the more than 150 now carrying the John W. Vandercook commentary over the ABC network each week night.

The two new stations are WKBZ, 850 on the dial, in Muskegon, Mich., where the program is heard at 7:15 p.m., and, WHBC, 1480 on the dial, in Canton, O., where the time is 10 p.m.

There is also a time change in Raleigh, N. C., where WNAO, 850 on the dial, will now carry the broadcast at 7:30 p.m.

CWA Starts Preparing For '54 Wage Talks With Bell System

WITH the past year's negotiations having brought nearly $50 million in wage increases, the CIO Telephone Workers have already started reviewing existing contracts with a view toward 1954 bargaining.

The first Bell System contract expiration date is Apr. 18. CWA's contract section and the Research Dept. at the international headquarters are seeking to determine what changes are needed to bring these contracts into line with convention-set bargaining objectives.

THESE "NATIONAL items" are included in all sets of demands where the specific clause is applicable. They cover such matters as company-paid hospital and surgical benefits, establishment and improvement of pension plans, a general wage increase, a shortened progression schedule, reclassification of clerical wage rates, elimination of area differentials and elimination of the merit wage system in Western Electric and the Bell Laboratories.

Basic wage goals will not be set until some time early next spring, closer to the first bargaining session, "when the general economic situation can be better evaluated." Preliminary studies of bargaining goals will be studied at a week long executive board meeting to be held in December.

3500 Out In Drug Strike

ALMOST 3500 CIO Chemical Workers at five plants of the Sharp & Dohme Div. of Merck & Co. struck last week after the company refused to meet contract demands.

Plants in Philadelphia, Glenolden and West Point, Pa., were closed down first by 1800 members of Local 86. Their action was followed by more than 500 members of Local 580 in Danville, Pa., and later by Local 575 in Rahway, N. J.

AF Ruling Rejected In Loyalty Case

AIR FORCE Lt. Milo J. Radulovich last week was cleared of charges that he was a security risk because members of his family reportedly had Communist sympathies.

Air Force Sec. Harold E. Talbot overruled a military trial board ruling that recommended Radulovich's discharge for too close and continuing a relationship with his family. Radulovich, a World War II veteran, never had his own loyalty questioned.

Emil Mazey, CIO Auto Workers secretary-treasurer and Veterans Dept. director, protested to Talbott several weeks ago when the case attracted national attention.

1500 More Join IUE In 4 Elections

CIO ELECTRICAL Workers won a 3.5% hourly wage increase in one plant and added 1500 additional members through election victories in four others from coast to coast.

The increase was negotiated for employes of Sylvania Electric Co. and is retroactive to Aug. 31. Workers will average $25-$45 in back pay. Sylvania will also pay workers make-up pay for jury duty. The contract is for one year.

Largest of the four election victories was scored at the General Electric lamp works in Newark, N. J. Day shift workers voted 302-48 to drop membership in the Communist-led UE and join IUE-CIO. Several days later the plant's night shift followed by unanimous vote. Approximately 1000 are employed in the plant.

SALARIED workers at Westinghouse Meter Div. in Newark gave IUE-CIO its second victory, voting 264-54, after the Communist-dominated UE failed to win a place on the ballot. The election completed IUE-CIO's victory at this plant. Approximately 3000 production workers voted CIO affiliation in September.

Two more victories were registered on the West Coast. At Huntington Park, Calif., Westinghouse workers voted 58-32 to switch from UE to IUE-CIO. An unorganized group of General Electric tube workers in Los Angeles chose IUE-CIO.

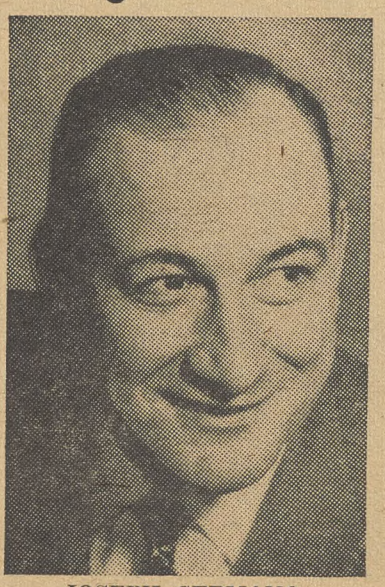
USA's Joe Germano To Get Award For Civil Rights Work

JOSEPH GERMANO, president of the Illinois CIO Council and director of the CIO Steelworkers Dist. 31, will be honored at a testimonial dinner in Chicago on Dec. 11 for his leadership in upholding civil rights.

Guest speaker will be USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald, it was announced by Chairman Jacob Siegel of the Jewish Labor Committee, which is sponsoring the dinner at the Morrison Hotel. Abraham Brussell, chief counsel of the State CIO Council, will be the toastmaster.

Siegel will present Germano with a scroll enumerating his many accomplishments in serving the labor movement and community.

"In his position as director of the CIO Steelworkers and president of the State CIO Council," Siegel said, "Germano has been an outspoken enemy of prejudice and intolerance. He has waged a steady and constant fight for better understanding among all peoples regardless of race, color, creed or national origin."



JOSEPH GERMANO

Talks Set Dec. 16 On Labor Unity

Next joint meeting of the CIO and AFL committees on labor unity will be held Dec. 16 in Washington, it was announced last week. It will be the first session since ratification of the no-raiding agreement by recent CIO and AFL national conventions.

The Story Of A Strike—

Government-By-Injunction In Cane Fields

(Last of two articles)

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

THE FAMILIAR pattern of government - by - injunction has crippled but not smashed the hopes of Louisiana's sugar cane workers to form unions and win their economic freedom.

The courts of Louisiana, echoing the statements of the big plantation owners, struck down the month-long strike of the National Agricultural Workers, AFL, with injunctions more restrictive than any issued in many years elsewhere in the nation.

CIO unions have promised help in taking the legal battle to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary to assert the workers' right to organize and to convince the plantation aristocracy that America long ago moved into the Twentieth Century without them.

Within a week after the strike was called, plantation owners told 2000 families they faced loss of their homes and jobs. Fighting the evictions took valuable time from lawyers who handled the union's cases.

Picket lines were ordered withdrawn almost as soon as they were formed. Highly restrictive injunctions halted concerted action by the strikers.

Louisiana has a "Little Norris-LaGuardia Act" which is supposed to prevent capricious injunctions against labor. All unions in the state now are watching with apprehension the new interpretations of this statute.

'Haphazard' Justice

Typical of judicial attitude in the cane belt is the restraining order issued in Terrebonne Parish. Southdown Sugars, Inc., one of the Big Four companies, applied for a ban on picketing.

The judge regretted that the plaintiffs made a "haphazard" case. This, he said, placed him in the "awkward" position of "attempting to draw a line . . . between the testimony in the record and our own personal knowledge." That knowledge, he admitted, was gained by 25 years residence on a plantation, most of the time that of the plaintiff, as an employe's son and an employe himself.

What Judge Ruled

This judge was more liberal than most. He conceded the workers' right to organize—but not at harvest time. He ruled that the harvest season is an "annual emergency" and that any act intended to disrupt or deter it was "wrongful."

Most judges and the American Sugar Cane League, which speaks for the planters, deny completely the workers' right to organize.

They contend that federal and state legislation excludes agricultural workers from the right to form unions. A long legal battle lies ahead, one that probably will be taken to the U. S. Supreme Court before this issue is decided.

The league in large newspaper ads hurled a barrage of charges at the union and its leaders. The union was accused of "seeking to pit race against race, class against class."

In far more temperate language the union answered the charges. It was the moderation of the reply that enlisted powerful allies for the strikers.

The Catholic Committee of the South, through its New Orleans unit, issued a statement far stronger than was expected.

The big issue, the committee said, on which it could not remain silent was "the basic, moral right of workers, industrial or agricultural, to organize."

The plantation owners were reminded that "in addition to the right to organize, every man has the obligation where necessary, to protect the security of his economic interests, not only for his own welfare, but also for the welfare of his family."

"In the formation of a union," the statement continued, "the agricultural workers are exercising their God-given right and seeking better to secure the economic and social welfare of their families."

Blight On Nation

The economic welfare of the workers is a serious problem and a blight on a nation with the highest living standard in the world. Jim Mitchell works at Oak Forest plantation in Terrebonne Parish. Married and the father of seven, he made $700 last year.

Harry Johnson, Jr., was luckier. He earned $875.95 to support his wife and five youngsters.

The average wage for laborers is between $600 and $700 a year. Skilled labor, like tractor operators, can earn $1100 annually.

Their homes on plantations usually consist of two rooms and a front and back porch. Many owners in figuring wages set a value of $20 a month rental on homes scarcely fit for habitation.

'Old American' Homes

A lot of the homes were built 70 years ago and have had few repairs since. Workers furnish their own light and heat.

A union lawyer pointed out that the only source of water for workers on one plantation was the trough from which mules drank. The plantation owner admitted this was so.

"But it's good water," he added blandly.

Maybe the water is good. But other conditions against which the field workers struck are far from good.

Their strike was not lost. They made gains. Most important, they focused the attention of the nation on their plight. Buoyed by the knowledge that they have found friends and spokesmen, the field workers are determined to hold their union.

Just as determined are the unions that these workers will attain the dignity of which they have been robbed.

Busy Signal

Communications are always a problem in a strike. In Reserve, La., the AFL Farm Workers Union had a real roadblock when it came to discussing strike strategy on the telephone.

The union office and the headquarters for a big plantation fighting the strike shared the same phone party line. Company officials boasted they knew when union representatives were arriving in town and the purpose of their visit, presumably through listening in on the union's calls.

The bread-and-butter question of bringing America's social security program up to date is a top issue coming before Congress. The CIO supports constructive proposals of the Lehman Bill to improve benefits for the 47 million now covered and to extend social security to the millions now exempt. But the basis of old age insurance was under fire from GOP lawmakers as a House inquiry concluded. (See Page 3.)

CIO Joins Challenge As School Bias Is Argued In High Court

THE LONG struggle to make the public schools truly democratic comes to a head this week when the U. S. Supreme Court hears oral rearguments in five cases growing out of the determination of Negro parents to get their children the same kind of education the white kids have.

Already briefs have been filed by the five communities in which the cases originated—Virginia, Kansas, South Carolina, Delaware and the District of Columbia—by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which has spearheaded the long legal battle, and by other interested groups, including the CIO.

After studying the briefs and weighing the arguments, the country's highest court will decide whether or not racial segregation in the public schools is compatible with the 14th Amendment. This is the amendment that prohibits the states from enacting or enforcing legislation that denies "the equal protection of the laws" to "any person."

THE IMPLICATIONS of the ruling will carry far beyond the immediate cases, as the CIO and Dr. Channing Tobias, chairman of the NAACP board of directors, have pointed out.

"At ultimate stake," wrote Tobias in stating a belief with which the CIO agrees, "is the future of the anachronistic system of segregation not only in education but also in all other phases of the public life of the nation.

"We of the NAACP have long maintained that segregation is a divisive and anti-democratic device designed to perpetuate an obsolete caste system which flatly contravenes the basic ethical concepts of our Judaeo-Christian tradition. We have held that segregation per se is unconstitutional.

"Should the court uphold this point of view it could mean that all laws requiring or permitting racial segregation in schools, transportation, recreation, shelter and public accommodation, generally, would ultimately be invalid."

THE APPEALS made on behalf of Negro school children in Virginia, Kansas, South Carolina and the District are from lower court decisions that state laws or constitutional provisions do not violate the 14th Amendment. In the Delaware case, the State is appealing a decision ordering Negro children admitted to white schools in one county.

Legal arguments center around two major points: whether it was understood that the 14th Amendment would abolish school segregation when Congress submitted it and the states ratified it; and whether the Supreme Court has the authority to order such segregation abolished.

The CIO brief was filed by General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg and Thomas E. Harris and David E. Feller, assistant general counsels. It is devoted to one issue the court cited in ordering re-argument and asking for briefs last June—whether the court should order segregation abolished "forthwith" if it is found unconstitutional, or permit "gradual readjustment."

THE BRIEF takes the same position the CIO has maintained in the past—that non-segregation could be effectuated with less disturbance by a "forthwith" decree. This is a conclusion, it points out, which rests "on a very considerable body of experience" growing out of the traditional CIO stand against racial prejudices where they exist.

It cited experiences of the CIO Auto Workers, CIO Steelworkers and the CIO itself in dealing with racial tensions in support of the belief that if a community practice is changed unequivocally, the new practice is accepted and "attitudes come to reflect it."

CIO Brief Says—

School Segregation Harms Negro, White Kids Alike

The CIO "friend of the court" brief filed with the U. S. Supreme Court in the school segregation case sets forth the following CIO principles:

THE CIO IS DEDICATED to the protection of our democratic system of government, and, hence of the civil rights of all Americans. Therefore, it supports the elimination of racial segregation and discrimination from every phase of American life.

The CIO's interest in the specific issues before the court in this case is two-fold.

First, racial segregation in the public schools directly affects the millions of CIO members whose children attend these schools. The CIO is convinced that school segregation is harmful to the Negro children who are thus treated as inferior, to the white children in whom attitudes of racial hostility and discrimination are thus engendered and encouraged at an early age, and to the community as a whole.

School segregation is a weakening and divisive force in American life. At the CIO's convention in November of this year, the delegates unanimously declared their opposition to school segregation, and their support for the position taken by the plaintiffs in these cases.

Secondly, the outcome of these cases will have indirect effects of great importance to the CIO. The CIO is endeavoring to practice non-segregation and non-discrimination in the everyday conduct of its union business. This effect has repeatedly been obstructed by statutes, ordinances and regulations which require segregation in public meeting halls, public dining places, toilet facilities, etc.

These laws seek to require CIO unions to maintain "equal but separate" facilities even in their own buildings, despite our membership's repudiation of segregation in any form. Since the constitutionality of these laws rests on basically the same line of reasoning which is put forward to justify school segregation, the decision of this court in these cases will, in all probability, have far-reaching implications as to the validity of these other segregation laws.

1000 Attend Rally To Combat Job Layoffs

SOME 1000 CIO Auto Workers this week were expected to attend a Washington conference to act on a program for full employment in the auto, aircraft, and farm implement industries.

The conference was considering a program, adopted by the UAW Executive Board in September. The program aimed at:

1. Exerting pressure on government at national, state and local levels to carry out its responsibilities for full employment.

2. Bargaining for a program that will expand purchasing power and increase employment to the highest possible level.

In a letter to UAW leaders detailing the program, Pres. Walter P. Reuther said the union "is determined in this situation to do everything in its power to combat the current recession."

BECAUSE FARM income is falling, he said, "farmers are buying less equipment, and agricultural implement workers are being laid off." Unemployment in the auto industry resulted from scheduling too much production in the first half of the year, despite the union's warnings, he said.

"Cutbacks in defense industry are affecting employment in aircraft and aircraft engine plants, tank and truck production have been curtailed, and civilian production is now being expanded to take up the slack left by decreases in defense output," Reuther said.

MEANWHILE, citing the new BLS price index climb, Reuther said last week the "continued eating away at consumer purchasing power becomes an even greater threat than in the past."

"The present need," he continued, "is for lower prices to expand markets instead of higher prices designed to maintain profit totals in the face of shrinking sales.

"There is no justifiable basis for continued inflation. The still upward spiraling prices point to a failure on the part of the national Administration to live up to promises made during the presidential campaign.

"Among the major victims of the failure are the farmers, who are caught in the squeeze between falling prices for farm products and high and rising prices for manufactured goods."

Reuther On TV Program Dec. 18

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will be interviewed by Edward R. Murrow, one of the nation's leading radio-television newsmen, on his CBS-TV program "Person to Person." The program will be aired at 10:30 p.m. EST, Friday, Dec. 18, on CBS television stations.

Signs On The Economic Horizon . . .

PRICES: The wholesale price index of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics climbed .2%, first gain in two months, indicating another climb in the consumer price index which has set records for each of the past five months.

FARM PRICES: However, crop and livestock prices received by farmers dropped .4% in the month ending on Nov. 15, according to the Agriculture Dept. It was the fourth straight monthly decline, to a level 16.8% below a year ago. Farmers' costs, however, are going up. And the farm parity index is at the lowest point since 1941.

EMPLOYMENT: The latest Labor Dept. employment report lists "small to moderate employment declines" in the past two months at a time when there is a normal seasonal expansion of employment. "Key centers" such as Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Milwaukee topped the list.

PRODUCTION: Basic steel operation has been at 86.8% of capacity for the last two weeks, the lowest level in 15 months.

PROFITS: The Commerce Dept. reported that dividend payments for the first 10 months of the year were $6.6 billion, up 4% over 1952. Total corporate profits are running about 10% above last year, Labor Press Associated estimated, and dividend payments for the full year may total about $9.5 billion.

Labor Has Big Stake In Social Security Fight

By GERVASE N. LOVE

PRELIMINARY skirmishes have been fought in what promises to be one of the major battles of the coming session of Congress—a "pocketbook issue" battle in which every member of the CIO has a direct personal stake.

The big embroglio will be fought around the old age pension and survivors' provisions of social security, the system set up by the New Deal to assure most Americans of a measure of protection against want and penury when they are too old to work, or when the family breadwinner dies.

The CIO and a lot of other organizations and individuals who have their feet on the ground want to improve the present law by bringing it up to date. A lot of Republicans—in Congress and out—the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the American Medical Association and other devotees of an outmoded past want to weaken it.

A Rigged Inquiry

The CIO is supporting the bill introduced by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) and other liberals, highlights of which are given below.

The feeling-out test of strength ended a few days ago when the House Ways & Means subcommittee headed by Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.), who thinks social security is "immoral," completed two weeks' of public hearings as part of its so-called study of the system.

As the curtain went down, Curtis and the staff he assembled were in confused retreat before a barrage of charges that the study was rigged.

The charges came from Arthur J. Altmeyer, the "father of social security," whom the Eisenhower Administration kicked out as head of the agency five weeks before he would have been eligible for full pension rights; Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.), a member of the full Ways & Means Committee who had been attending the hearings; and Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.), a subcommittee member.

STUDY of social security by House Ways & Means subcommittee was branded biased by former Social Security Commissioner Arthur J. Altmeyer (right) at recent hearings. Shown with him during recess are (l. to r.) Reps. Eberharter (D. Pa.), Dingell (D. Mich.), and Goodwin (R. Mass.) in back, and Chairman Curtis (R. Neb.).

"I think you are doing more to destroy the confidence of the American people in the social security system than anyone else except the chairman of this committee," Altmeyer bluntly told Robert H. Winn, subcommittee counsel.

Eberharter, in addition to backing Altmeyer's stand, issued a statement accusing Curtis of turning the study into "nothing but an attempt to discredit and smash the present social security system," and describing the hearings as "anything but objective."

"Every question has been carefully prepared and formed so as to elicit an answer which criticizes, ridicules and assails the system," he said.

". . . The printed hearings will be a monumental compendium of all possible objections which can be voiced against the present Social Security Act. The inevitable result can be only to put fear in the minds of the millions of persons who have built up rights in the present system."

What A Record

What kind of a voting record does Chairman Curtis (R. Neb.) of the House Social Security subcommittee have in Congress?

This question, put to the CIO Legislative Dept. brought a tally of Curtis' votes on 80 key issues from 1947 to date.

He was credited with having voted right only six times—an average of 7%.

Dingell bitterly assailed Curtis for subpoenaing Altmeyer and declared the chairman "should be ashamed of himself." He also stepped in frequently when questioning of Altmeyer degenerated into browbeating.

Curtis offered Altmeyer a job last June as a consultant to the subcommittee. The former social security official turned down the bid in a letter he read into the record charging Curtis with conducting a "biased investigation," and declaring the chairman's views put social security in "grave danger." To serve as a subcommittee aide, the letter continued, would only "confuse and mislead the friends of social security."

Questioning of Altmeyer followed the same discredited line first used by former Gov. Alf. Landon of Kansas, when he was Republican candidate for president in 1936.

Landon then declared the people were being deluded into thinking they had definite protection against the hazards of old age and death, and that actual benefits depended on the whim of whoever was running the country at the time they became due.

No "insurance contracts" cover the 90 million people protected by social security, Curtis claimed, and Congress can alter the system whenever it wishes.

Altmeyer conceded that there is no "contract." He declared, however, that there is a protection stronger than a contract—a "statutory right" with the "full faith and credit of the United States behind it."

"I have more faith in Congress than you," he told Curtis and Winn.

New Coat Of Paint

The campaign to jigger social security around would give it a nice new coat of glossy paint while undermining its foundation.

The gloss comes from a "pay as you go" theory preached by the U. S. C. of C. and picked up by Pres. Eisenhower. It has a fine, business-like sound, but it could ruin social security in its present stage of development.

It must be remembered that social security is an insurance system. Those covered by it pay a portion of their earnings as a tax which is matched by the employer. These taxes go into the Old Age & Survivors Insurance trust fund, giving those covered protection — based on earnings — which has been bought and paid for.

During the 18 years social security has been in operation, the fund has grown to about $18 billion. This is an impressive figure.

Figure Juggling

The benefits paid out have been less than the taxes paid in, just as was anticipated when the plan was set up. But the amount paid out is growing each year as workers who have been covered since 1935 grow older and retire. If the original plan is left unchanged, the tax receipts will just about balance the benefits paid out by 1970. Then everybody covered will have assured protection.

This is the simple, solid insurance plan some Republicans and many business leaders want to junk. They want to jerk the tax rate around so it yields only the amount paid out in benefits. What they don't face up to is the fact that when estimated peak demands for benefits are made in another 20 years or less—there may not be enough money to go around.

CIO Urges 'Constructive' Pension Hikes

Support of the "constructive program" to improve social security in a bill (S. 2260) sponsored by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) and other liberals was voted unanimously at the recent CIO convention.

The measure would provide benefit improvements, add temporary and permanent disability insurance, increase funds for rehabilitation, liberalize the retirement test, and extend coverage.

On benefits, for instance, it would boost the maximum for an individual from the present $85 a month to $135, and increase the limit for a family to $200 from the present $168.50. It would liberalize the method of calculating benefits, and authorize raises of $5 to $14 for those now entitled to them.

Coverage would be extended broadly, with the main occupation groups to be added including more farm and domestic workers, some self-employed professional workers, and clergymen on a voluntary basis. The bill would allow beneficiaries to earn $100 a month instead of the present $75.

Improved Social Insurance Urged To Strengthen Nation

THE WORN-OUT cry of some business interests that security legislation is turning American workers into an aimless bunch who'd rather collect than work took a good, round thumping at the recent American Assembly in Harriman, N. Y.

Sixty conferees, representing labor, business, government and other groups, took a long look at the whole social insurance system and didn't like what they saw.

They called for revisions to coordinate responsibilities now divided between different segments of government, pointed out that unemployment insurance has not kept up with the times, and urged that every working person in the country be covered by old age and survivors' insurance.

"We believe that there is no inescapable conflict," it bluntly noted, "between security, on the one hand, and individual initiative and freedom, on the other . . .

"We believe that we are a stronger people—not a 'softer' people—because of the economic security developments of the past half-century.

"We see no reason for fear that the attainment of a reasonable standard of protection against the security exigencies will threaten any of the traditional American virtues — the will to work, the will to save, the disposition to deal generously with a needy neighbor."

Behind Those Tears, There's A Mighty Pecuniary Interest

That loud wail from many sections of business about the worker whose social security tax is going from 1.5% to 2% on Jan. 1 has all the deep humanitarianism of the dollar sign behind it.

It's strictly a cash-on-the barrel-head operation. The strain on gold-plated tonsils reflects no concern for the workers, despite the piousness of the protests. The fact of the matter is that when the workers' tax goes up, so does the employers'—and the bosses are anxious, but anxious, to save themselves several million dollars a year.

There's another motive behind it, too. That's to disguise, however thinly, the phony across-the-board 10% income tax reduction also due the first of the year, and to gloss over the fact that while the worker will get a cut of a few pennies, the wealthy will save thousands of dollars they don't need for the necessities of life.

The increase in the social security tax likewise means but a few cents a week for the worker. But it buys him additional security for his old age he can get in no other way. It assures the solvency of the trust fund from which his benefits will come when he retires. Without it, his old age may be spent in want and penury.

Pres. Eisenhower asked Congress during the last session to head off the coming increase. The CIO and others interested in a stable, solvent social security system protested, and Congress did not act. Now the same device to hamstring the system is floating around in a sea of business' crocodile tears.

The CIO, at the Cleveland convention, reiterated its stand against postponement of the tax boost and reaffirmed its previous claim that "labor is willing to bear its fair share of the cost of an adequate program."

The Texas Story

Texas is more than fables, wide-open spaces, 10-gallon hats, booming industry, and free-spending millionaires ("primitives in oil," they've been called) moving rapidly on to the national political scene.

Texas also is men and women who work hard for a living. Sometimes, thanks to unions like the CIO Oil Workers, it's a good living. Often—as in the case of dime store clerks working 48 hours a week for $18—it's pretty meager.

That's the case of the retail workers in Port Arthur, on the Texas Gulf Coast, whose fight is for better wages.

For that reason, a malicious attack in the pattern of Martin Dies has been unleashed by such Texas officials as Atty. Gen. John Ben Shepperd (see Page 12).

The retail workers in Port Arthur, newly chartered as CIO Local Industrial Union 1814, are standing up to this attack, demonstrating the union spirit of the Thirties. They're getting the effective aid of the National CIO Organization Dept. and of CIO and other unions in Texas. They're writing a better chapter to the Texas story.

Keep Your Guard High

When an expert like Arthur J. Altmeyer flatly tells the Curtis subcommittee that its study of social security is biased, it is time for Americans who enjoy the law's protection to be on guard.

The former social security commissioner knows what he's talking about. The line Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.), committee chairman, and his staff followed in questioning him bears this out. It's a line first used by former Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas when he ran for President in 1936, and it has been eagerly seized by other reactionaries every time anybody has talked about improving the law since then.

Social security must be strengthened, not weakened. The CIO convention endorsed the Lehman Bill because it embodies the improvements needed. It's up to all of us to make sure our senators and congressmen know about the Lehman Bill—and to keep an eye on them when they get back to Washington after the first of the year.

The School Case

The kind of democracy that a lot of Americans appear to believe in isn't good enough for most of us.

Those of us who believe in genuine democracy refuse to hedge it in with ifs, ands or buts. Those who believe in a lesser kind—if it can be called "democracy" at all—apply a variety of restrictions which reflect their prejudices.

All of these restrictions weaken democracy. None is more weakening than racial discrimination. And no phase of racial discrimination is more weakening — or more shameful—than a policy of segregation which condemns little children to ghetto schools simply because of color.

This week the U. S. Supreme Court again takes up its task of attempting to decide if it is legal for a state or local community to set up separate school systems for young citizens of different colors.

But the real issue is even more fundamental than the U. S. Constitution. It's a matter of justice, simple justice, to several million kids whose path through this somewhat less than perfect world will be tough enough as it is without the added starting handicap of an irrational public school caste system based on pigment.

In Other Words—

All Perched On The American Bough

This defense of the United States by a European, printed in part below, was written by Fritz Marbach, professor of economics at Berne (Switzerland) Univ., and was published as "We Are All Perched On The American Bough" in the official weekly of the Swiss Metal Workers Federation.

By FRITZ MARBACH

THERE SEEMS to be an urgent need for attention to be drawn to the serious danger Europe runs if it continues to indulge in the "anti-American mood"—particularly marked in leftist circles in some countries.

When such trustworthy correspondents as Werner Imhoff, of the New Zeitung of Zurich, report that Americans feel betrayed by the Allies and are becoming bitter about Europe's attitude toward their country, that should suffice to cause people everywhere in Europe to ponder what each can do to promote better mutual understanding. For if America were to turn isolationist again, then God have mercy on us!

This is not a question of high politics. Of much more immediate concern to us is to combat the evil mockery and suspicion of everything American so skillfully disseminated from Moscow.

Growth Of American Labor

In no country in the world have radical, leftist ideologies gaining so little footing as in the U.S.A. Those doctrinaire non-Communists who consider this a failing should be reminded that it is possible for an impressive trade union movement of some 16 million members to flourish in the U.S.

Of course, this trade union movement, like all powers in the world, has its abuses. We in Europe are fully informed as to the nature of those abuses in contrast to our lack of knowledge of Russian "trade unions." But should one forget the value of the wood because of a few dried-up firs?

There are many people in Europe in whose eyes social change is less important than the manner in which it comes about. They cannot admit such a transformation if they do not bring it about themselves in accordance with their politics.

Thus the U. S. comes to be constantly denounced as the stronghold of capitalist exploitation, though nowhere else has the working class, with the possible exception of Switzerland, Sweden and Belgium, attained a standard of living in any way comparable with that of the American worker.

All too many Europeans appear to be completely ignorant of the general evolution of the social picture in America, its progressive collective contracts, the not inconsiderable taxation paid by its citizens (including employers), and the restrictive effect on the growth of the power of capital exercised by anti-trust laws.

They even forget that mothers in Ohio, Wyoming, California and Texas had to send their sons to Korea not to guarantee Wall Street dividends, as simpletons everywhere, the unwitting agents of Communist policy, go around saying, but to guard the freedom of the whole western world, including our own.

Some Examples In Europe

Certainly the methods of a McCarthy do not fit in with our conception of state policy and humanism. But McCarthy does not suit many others, either, nor indeed the majority of Americans.

I think there are more interesting and important things to criticize in Europe than those aspects of the American way of life that do not suit us.

We could, for instance, criticize the reluctance of French citizens to give to the state what is the state's, the truly shameful unprogressive attitude on social questions of French employers, or the greed for pensions that has seized, so to speak, all circles in this countrry.

Whatever one's private opinion of the U.S. may be, no one can fail to recognize that the old, precious, and it is to be hoped, eternal Europe is alive today thanks only to the States, and hence—in spite of geography—owes a far greater duty to the transatlantic community of nations than to the Eurasian hinterland.

We are perched on the bough of the American trunk and should therefore be glad at the growing strength of this freely growing trunk in free earth, instead of missing no opportunity to saw at it and whisper to our brother how much we value his dollars and how little value he himself has in our eyes.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

CONSUMERS don't have many friends in Washington these days but they won an astounding victory when the Supreme Court in effect told the Federal Power Commission to start regulating the rates charged to interstate pipelines by the Phillips Petroleum Co.

This is a famous case, involving the authority of the FPC over hundreds of so-called "independent" gas producers, a veto of a congressional bill by former Pres. Truman, and the financial welfare of gas consumers.

It includes the fact that the Senate kicked out of office one FPC member who believed that Phillips' prices should be regulated and that another member was denied Senate confirmation long enough to let Pres. Eisenhower come in and replace him with a new nominee.

Retort

Washington merchants report the appearance of cards saying: "Don't tell me your troubles. I voted for Stevenson."

The FPC has been thoroughly "packed" with pro-producer and anti-consumer members. Its recent tendency has been to allow gas pipeline companies to raise their rates, and electric power rates are certain to follow them upward. Bills are pending in Congress to curtail the regulatory authority of the FPC and make it subservient to state commissions. The FPC—now headed by Mr. Eisenhower's appointee, Jerome Kuykendall—offers no objection.

Smear Job Recalled

The FPC several years ago started an investigation to determine whether it had authority to regulate the rates charged by Phillips—an "independent" but also a vast corporation complex owning gas wells and pipelines.

The Senate suspected that Leland E. Olds, then FPC chairman, was in sympathy with this action, so Southwestern senators waged a smear campaign to blow him out of office.

Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) sponsored a bill specifically designed to save Phillips and other "independents" from regulation. Truman vetoed the bill, but Truman's own appointee as Olds' successor in the FPC "vetoed the veto" by writing a final decision under which the FPC voluntarily abdicated responsibility.

At this point consumers of gas in Wisconsin, Michigan and other states got angry. Their state officials appealed to the courts, saying that the FPC wasn't doing what the law commanded—its job of rate regulation.

The Federal Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia handed down a clear-cut decision favoring the states and overruling the fainthearted FPC. It directed the FPC to regulate Phillips.

An Extraordinary Ruling

The Supreme Court affirmed the appellate court, in effect, by refusing to hear an appeal. This is extraordinary for two reasons:

First, the high court is always zealous in checking bureaucratic agencies that attempt to stretch their legislative grants of power. It is unusual for the courts to tell any agency that it hasn't gone far enough, that it isn't doing enough to effect what Congress intended.

Second, the Supreme Court's refusal to hear an appeal indicates that not even four justices out of nine felt that the case was worth discussing. Not a single justice took the trouble to issue a sentence saying that he disagreed.

There will be huffing and puffing about all this in the next session of Congress. Bills are pending to re-enact the Kerr bill. The FPC is frankly shocked, and Kuykendall's cohorts will have to do some hard thinking to invent a way out.

It is barely possible that they won't find a way out. Southwestern producers will do their best but their chances of getting legislation next year are slim.

It's an election year and there are more voters in the gas-consuming states than in the gas-producing areas. Even in 1950 the majority of Senate Republicans voted against the Kerr bill.

The N. Y. Press Blackout

A word should be said about the New York publishers who allowed a total blackout of newspapers in America's largest city because of a quarrel with their unionized photo-engravers.

A newspaper is a private property. It may be sold, closed out, or otherwise halted in publication by the owner's decision. A publisher has no legal obligation to publish.

The suggestion may be made, however, that a whole city's established newspapers have a moral obligation to print the news.

New York's publishers, like newspaper owners elsewhere, resist censorship indignantly. They argue, as they resist it, that freedom of the press is not just a privilege for publishers but a vital matter of public interest, involving the people's right to know what goes on in their government and in the world.

What about the "people's right to know" when publishers mismanage their labor relations so as to stumble into a strike? What about the "people's right" to buy the New York Herald Tribune, which was NOT struck, but voluntarily ceased publishing so that the newspaper proprietors could present a common front against their unionized employes?

A newspaper isn't a public utility, required to furnish service, but publishers should think of their institutions as verging on the field of quasi-utilities.

The "people's right to know" is an absolute, and it should not be limited either by censorship or clumsy handling of labor relations.

Death Of The Salesman?—

Ad Agencies Ride For A Fall As '52 Political Hoopla Turns Sour

"DEATH OF THE SALESMAN" in American politics—the era in which advertising agencies and public relations counsellors were in full bloom—may have been signalled a few weeks ago when the voters went to the polls in Wisconsin, New Jersey and other states around the nation.

For the American voters, in handing a series of local election defeats to the Republicans, appear to have invoked their own popular "Pure Food & Drug Act" in politics, blowing the whistle on the ad men just as the government has had to do for many years in the case of numerous cure-all ad claims.

Republican leaders—despite all the resources of newspapers, magazines, radio, TV and advertising and publicity agencies at their command—complained they had not been "doing a good selling job." And Democrats suggested that the exaggerated claims of autumn 1952 boomeranged in the GOP's face 12 months later.

Twin Patterns In Politics

The complex situation resulting from the emergence of big advertising men as a big factor in American politics is examined in detail by William Lee Miller, a Smith College assistant professor writing in The Reporter magazine.

There are twin patterns: One is the use of high-pressure advertising and publicity to defeat ideas and policies.

The best example is the effort, so far successful, by the American Medical Association to prevent the American people from getting decent medical care and reasonable cost. That has been accomplished by the Whitaker & Baxter political publicity firm, which learned its lessons in California (where ad firms long have had a field day in politics) and then expanded nationally to shout against "socialized medicine."

The other pattern was the application of ad writer's tinsel to a specific candidate—Tom Dewey in New York's 1950 gubernatorial campaign.

Last year the twin patterns merged. The advertising trade press boasted that the GOP national convention was "almost a convention of advertising and publicity men." There emerged the Eisenhower-Nixon Research Service (which still is functioning), the sadly climatic four-network broadcast of Richard Nixon about the little dog Checkers plus a few words on his political trust fund, the Eisenhower "I shall go to Korea speech," and the GOP saturation campaign.

The ad men, Miller points out, "have now come to include the planning of entire campaigns and even, most recently, the conduct of government."

Case History Of One Of Ike's Whoppers

Number One example of the use of advertising techniques for selling sugar-coated corn flakes in the 1952 campaign for selling sugar-coated candidates was the series of spot announcements with which the Republicans saturated radio and TV listeners in key areas of the country.

An example of exaggeration by Candidate Eisenhower, which Pres. Eisenhower since has had cause to regret:

Voice: "Mr. Eisenhower, can you bring taxes down?"

Eisenhower: "Yes, we will work to cut billions in Washington spending, and bring your taxes down."

Months later, after some of the facts of government had begun to sink in, Pres. Eisenhower at a press conference blandly denied he had ever promised to cut taxes.

All of which recalls the Democratic spot announcement: "They'll promise you the sky. They'll promise you the earth! But what's a Republican promise worth?"

Since Inauguration Day, he recalls, the psychological warriors talked about "liberation" of Communist satellites, but that fizzled out. There was the "merchandising" of Pres. Eisenhower in last June's TV report to the nation. ("One of our best shows," the ad men said.) And recently there has been talk about "Operation Candor," which so far hasn't got off the ground.

Engineering Public Opinion

The ad-publicity men are frank in saying what they're doing in "merchandising" GOP policies. Their goal is "engineering of public consent." Implicit is the view that American people have no decisive role.

Citing the example of the Eisenhower TV report last June, Miller says "this adman's 'show' did not insist that the public make the hard and controversial decisions about world policy. Instead the implied view of the public was that of a docile, harmonious family, waiting to be told a few fascinating facts about its government by Likeable Ike and his swell friends. Government appeared as a merely technical and administrative matter."

Summing it up, Miller tries his hand "at a little sloganizing and suggests "to the Republican Party that what is needed is not a better selling job but a better doing job."

The voters, in Wisconsin's 9th Congressional Dist., New Jersey's 6th Congressional Dist., and elsewhere, seem to agree.

Who Will Control Atomic Power?

By Public Affairs Institute

MUCH OF AMERICA'S future electric power will be derived from atomic energy. An intensive battle is now under way between public and private power advocates over control of this vast new resource.

Private power companies have engaged in an extensive campaign to "take the government out of the power business." As one phase of this campaign they are seeking to open the doors to private atomic power development. They have the support of the Republican Administration.

What Dean Proposes

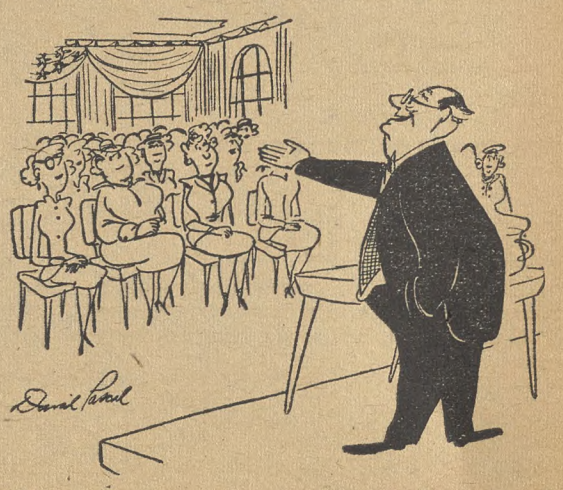
The Congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy has completed hearings on whether the Atomic Energy Act should be revised to open the development of atomic power to private industry.

Former Chairman Gordon Dean of the Atomic Energy Commission, as opening witness, proposed interim legislation to permit:

Ownership and operation of nuclear (atomic) power facilities by groups other than the government; lease and sale of atomic fuel to private sources under security safeguards; and non-government owners of reactors (atomic power stations) to sell and transfer atomic fuel and its by-products subject to regulation of the Atomic Energy Commission in the interest of security and public safety. This represents substantially the program advocated by private industry.

The country's municipally-owned electric systems, the rural electric cooperatives, and organized labor have taken a strong stand against hasty amendment of the Atomic Energy Act to put this great resource in private hands.

Consumer and labor spokesmen have questioned whether this new resource could ever be recovered if turned over to private industry.



"Before I continue my analysis of the political situation, let me say it's a pleasure talking to people who know as little about politics as I do."

Looking To 1954—

Murray Fears Full Employment Act Shelved

(Third in a series about outstanding senators and their views on next year's campaigns.)

By MILTON PLUMB

THE MAN who fathered the Full Employment Act to prevent this country from being plunged into another period of misery and economic chaos like the early 1930's is gravely troubled because his law "just isn't being applied."

James E. Murray, respected humanitarian and the only original "New Dealer" still in the Senate, warned that dire economic consequences may result from this failure on the part of the present Republican Administration.

"The President's Council of Economic Advisers," the Montana Democrat pointed out, "has been allowed to lapse and the Administration has made clear it doesn't want the advice of the council we had."

Danger Signals

Murray said that there are many danger signs in the current economic picture which make the need for a functioning economic council, with an adequate staff assembling and interpreting economic data, greater than ever before.

"If we'd had such a council in the 1920's we wouldn't have had the great depression," he said. "The council would have been able to warn the country in time so that necessary counter-measures could have been taken when they were needed."

What's happening now, Murray believes, is similar to what happened under the earlier Republican rule which led to economic collapse. The council his act created was intended to prevent a repetition of that needless social and economic disaster.

"The Wall Street contingent," he says, "is working to get its hands on as much money as it can without regard to the welfare of the country."

RECENT PHOTOS of Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) at Labor Committee hearings reveal the thoughtful attention which the great humanitarian legislator pays to matters of human welfare. Murray led the fight against enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act, has since worked steadily for its repeal. With him is Sen. Hill (D. Ala.).

When Murray speaks about banking and financial interests, he does so with first-hand knowledge. One of the handful of millionaires in the Senate, Murray for over a quarter of a century served as attorney for his uncle, James A. Murray, pioneer Montana banker and businessman.

Refutes The Charge

In fact, Murray's wealth, inherited from his uncle, originally proved to be a political handicap. His opponents dubbed him "Millionaire Moses" and campaigned against him on the grounds that "the richest man in the Senate" couldn't possibly represent the people's interests.

Murray's outstanding record, maintained throughout 19 years in the Senate, quickly refuted this charge. And so, the same enemies now fight him through such epithets as "darling of the CIO" or "professional do-gooder."

Understood in their right sense, there is truth to both of these assertions. The CIO made clear its high esteem for Murray last year by bestowing upon him the Philip Murray Award for his outstanding service on behalf of human rights. And throughout his career as a professional politician, Montana's senior Senator has worked tirelessly to aid humanity.

But the implications his opponents seek to draw from these facts—that, somehow, he is a "captive" of labor and the multitude of beneficial laws which he authored were really only the calculated acts of a power-hungry demagogue—are clearly shown to be lies by the record of the man himself.

The General Welfare

Even his most bitter political opponents in the Senate have never questioned Murray's deeply religious integrity, or his deep-seated convictions as a reformed capitalist who has given his life to eliminating evils in our economic system. No man in the Senate has taken more to heart the Constitution's declaration that the purpose of our government is "to promote the general welfare."

And Murray, whose parents had none of the wealth he inherited, is, after all, truly a man of the people. When he first went to Montana in 1900, he worked as a "mucker" in the Ticon Mine, shoveling, wheeling and dumping a dozen cars a day, then the standard of "a man's work."

While doing this, Murray was proud to hold a card in the Butte Miners' Union. This was the time of bitter anti-union activity among the Rockefeller, Anaconda and Marcus Daly interests, who also were fighting each other for monopolistic control of the region's great metallic wealth.

Murray never forgot the lessons learned in the mines. He left them to practice law for the next 25 years in Butte and refused to identify himself with any of the great corporations. He was almost the only attorney who fought for the little, independent operators against the great mining interests.

As county attorney of Silver Bow County from 1906 to 1908, he distinguished himself by enforcing the State's generally unused eight-hour day law against one of the major railroads. In 1930 he became chairman of the county's Democratic Committee and actively campaigned for Roosevelt in 1932.

Roosevelt named Murray chairman of the Montana Public Works Advisory Board and he began his campaign for reclamation and development of the State's natural resources, including Hungry Horse Dam. He has continued this fight ever since being elected to the Senate in 1934.

Of the 16 original New Deal Senators, Murray is the only one still in office. He attributes his staying power to the fact that he has been "consistent," never compromising his liberal principles.

Fair Labor Fight

Besides the Full Employment Act, which Walter Lippmann characterized as "the most important piece of legislation enacted during the last half century," Murray has authored many other laws protecting the rights and dignity of labor, small business and family sized farms.

He led the fight for the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, was the author of the resolution setting up the first Senate Small Business Committee in 1940, and as a member of the Interior Committee has fought for reclamation of natural resources and public power development. He has also worked for legislation to aid farmers and for federal assistance in the fields of public health and education.

As Murray comes up for re-election next year, he is likely to run into the same out-of-state big business opposition which has fought him in the past.

In the 1952 race, the reactionary organization Americans for America, with headquarters in Chicago, gave active support to Sen. Ecton (R. Mont.), indicating that it's not above meddling in Montana politics.

Voters Scoffed

Should AFA and similar groups get into the fight against Murray, the campaign against him would probably degenerate into one of pure McCarthyism, with no consideration of issues, since Murray's constituents have repeatedly supported his views.

Murray, however, ran into such a campaign in his last bid for re-election in 1948 and was re-elected overwhelmingly.

One of the charges levelled at him then was that he had taken the idea of the Full Employment Act from the constitution of the U.S.S.R. Montana voters scoffed that one down when Murray pointed out that at least 30 other countries guaranteed work to their citizens.

"Actually," Murray told this reporter, "I got the idea of the Act from the Bible."

Action Doubted On Taft-Hartley

There won't be any amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act next year, in the opinion of Sen. Murray (D. Mont.).

The former chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, now the ranking Democrat, led the unsuccessful fight to get the Administration to act on Taft-Hartley in the last session.

He's still solidly behind efforts to bring justice and fairness to labor-management relations but doubts that the GOP dares to let a bill amending Taft-Hartley reach the floor.

"Pressures from big business for an even stiffer law," he believes, "will prevent the GOP from acting. Any bill reported would be subject to a drive to enact these anti-labor amendments, and the Republicans will seek to avoid such an issue in an election year."

Whee! Moscow Radio Gives Word On CIO Convention

THE RUSSIANS are so hard up for comfort these days they managed to find some—the cold kind—in the recent CIO convention in Cleveland, according to a Moscow Radio broadcast by "our observer," Valentin Zorin.

Valentin, whose little homily was picked up by the Federal Communications Commission, first gave his audience the slanted sort of background material the Communists usually provide.

It is "known," he alleged, "that among the leaders of American trade unions, there are people renowned for their reactionary attitude who have broken away from the working class." This means, he went on, that "the annual CIO congresses are merely show gatherings at which little is said about the workers' needs."

"But this time, things were slightly different," he reported with a note of exultation.

"True to themselves, the reactionary leaders of the congress pushed through a resolution supporting the present aggressive foreign policy of Washington.

"However, in the sphere of home policy, despite the carefully selected composition of the congress, resolutions were adopted sharply condemning Pres. Eisenhower's policy."

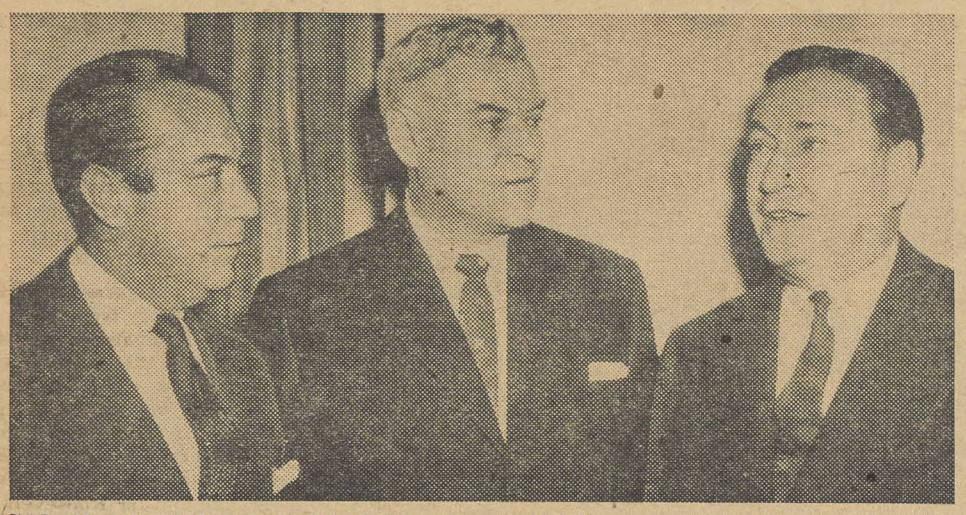
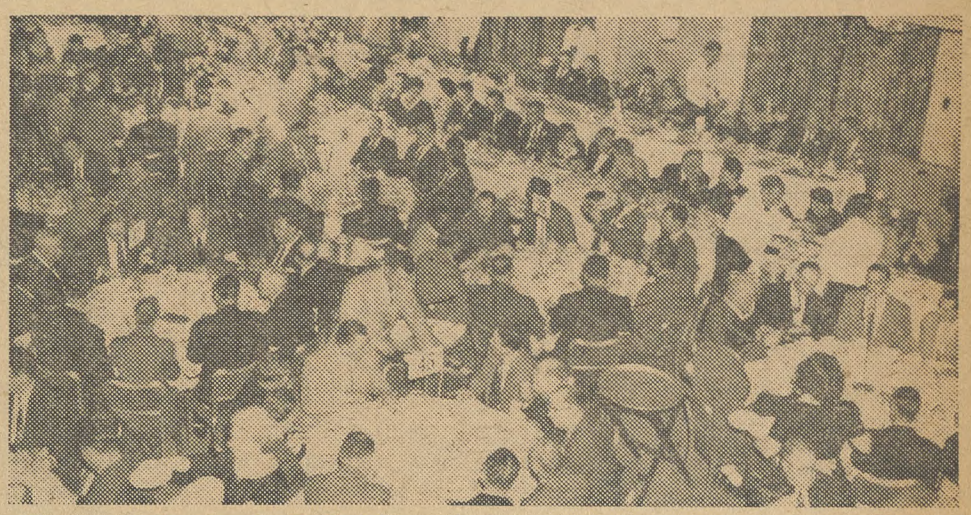
Steel Union President Honored—

McDonald Warns Of Peril To Civil Liberties





STEEL PRESIDENT HONORED—Some 3300 guests attended Pittsburgh dinner on "David J. McDonald Day." The CIO Steelworkers president (center) chats with Mayor-elect Robert F. Wagner, Jr., of New York City, and Benjamin F. Fairless, chairman of the board of the U. S. Steel Corp. At right, part of the crowd which overflowed three hotel banquet rooms. In address, McDonald warned of "police state" danger.

By AL ZACK

PRES. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers last week delivered a blistering attack on those threatening America's basic civil liberties as Pittsburgh celebrated "David J. McDonald Day."

Warning that the U. S. is witnessing "the possible decline of our own American democracy," McDonald blasted those who "are negating" the fundamental rule of American justice "that a man is innocent until he is proven guilty."

Those attacking this ideal, McDonald told 3300 persons attending a banquet in his honor, are "practicing the philosophy of the Nazis and the Communists and the Fascists. They are of the same breed, the same stripe."

While the crowd applauded warmly, McDonald grimly continued: "They prate that they are great Americans. They say you are either for me and believe in me or you are guilty. We must be alert to this danger. We must never establish a police state in America."

The FBI, he continued, is "a wonderful agency, but it is just another bunch of policemen. And because a policeman says such and such is true does not make it true, whether the policeman is a member of the Pittsburgh Police Dept. or the FBI."

McDonald's remarks came during a brief speech in which he thanked the guests who overcrowded banquet rooms in three Pittsburgh hotels to pay him tribute. "I'm a pretty lucky fellow," he said, his voice displaying deep emotion.

The banquet climaxed "David J. McDonald Day," proclaimed by Pittsburgh's Mayor David Lawrence "in honor of one of Pittsburgh's leading citizens whose service to his community and to his fellow steel workers has earned him the esteem, respect, and deep admiration of the people of Pittsburgh and of the entire United States."

The celebration was arranged by Dist. 19 of the USA-CIO and Dist. Dir. William J. Hart was chairman. McDonald was presented with a check which he accepted on behalf of his favorite charity, a Pittsburgh foundling home on whose board he has served for many years.

Speakers at the banquet included Benjamin F. Fairless, chairman of the board of U. S. Steel, who said labor and management "are inseparably bound together in a state of economic matrimony" with interests that are identical and not conflicting.

Other speakers included Mayor Lawrence, Brother Justin of Manhattan College, N. Y., Judge Michael A. Musmanno of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, Bishop Austin Pardue of the Episcopal Church, Sir Archibald MacDonald Gordon, Labor Counsellor at the British Embassy in the United States, and Robert F. Wagner, Mayor-elect of New York City.

Pres. Eisenhower sent a special message of greetings and dispatched Maxwell Rabb, his special assistant, to represent the White House at the celebration.

USA-CIO Worth $13 Million

The CIO Steelworkers have assets of more than $13 million, according to the union's latest semi-annual audit. USA-CIO's worth increased $2,983,096 during the audit period.

CIO Reports On Israel, A Land Of Hope And Glory

ISRAEL in 1953 proved just as impressive to a CIO delegation as it did to another CIO group which visited that "bastion of democracy in the Middle East" four years earlier, according to a report made public at a CIO International Committee luncheon in New York.

This year's delegation consisted of CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who also is president of the Electrical Workers; CIO Vice Pres. Michael Quill, also president of the Transport Workers, and Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel of the CIO and the Steelworkers.

The earlier delegation, which consisted of Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, Pres. Joseph N. Curran of the Maritime Union, and Maxwell Brandwen, their adviser, said on its return in 1949 that it was impressed with the "vigor, intelligence and democratic spirit . . . by the sober, earnest determination of the people."

"The second CIO delegation to Israel reached the same conclusions," Carey, Quill and Goldberg reported.

"We asked searching questions. We sought information in every corner of that little land: we inspected industrial development projects, cooperative farms, irrigation projects and the stormy border between Israel and the Arab world.

"In every corner of Israel, we found that same spirit of determination to build the industrial and agricultural basis of the country; and a firm intention both to maintain friendly relations with the entire democratic world and to seek the means of developing peaceful relations with the neighboring countries."

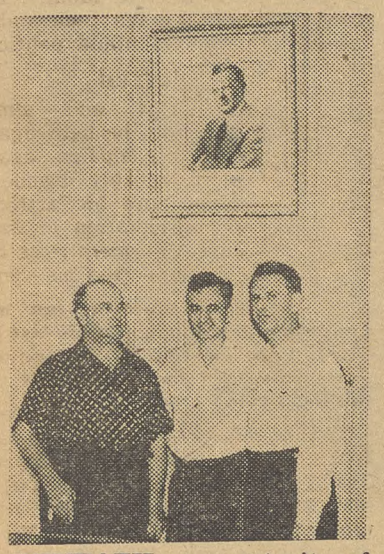
The report, which carries a brief foreword by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, discusses the country generally, her economy, the labor movement, agriculture, industry, the immigrants, Arabs and Jews, and international relations.

The role of Histadrut, the Israel federation of labor, in each of these phases of life is impressive by any standards. It continued to grow as 700,000 immigrants piled in since 1949. Its membership is more than 500,000; members and dependents make up more than half the country's 1.6 million people.

Besides performing the standard functions of a labor union, it plays a major role in integrating immigrants into the life of the country, and controls producer and consumer cooperatives, hospitals and clinics, cooperative farms, newspapers and schools. The dominant political party—Mapei—gets its strength from Histadrut; members and former members hold many high government offices.

Through its Arab Dept. it has done much to ease racial and religious tensions, the major problem of the area, and to introduce Arab workers to economic and trade union democracy, the CIO visitors said.

Copies of "1953 Report on Israel" may be obtained from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl., N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Price, 15c each; 50 for $6.75; 100 for $12; 500 for $50.



BENEATH a portrait of Sidney Hillman in Israel trade school are Michael Quill, James B. Carey and Arthur J. Goldberg.

Carey Criticizes Dulles, UN For Censure Of Israel

STRONG criticism of the United Nations and the State Dept. for their censure of Israel over recent border incidents was voiced last week by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Speaking at the 30th anniversary of the National Committee for Labor Israel in New York City, Carey charged the Arab League with following the Communist line in denouncing the growth of democratic Israel.

"There is a large element of justice missing from the UN's censure of Israel, just as there was a large element of justice missing in the action of Sec. of State Dulles last month when he suddenly suspended the American grant of $60 million in aid to Israel," he said.

He quoted propaganda broadcasts from Arab radio stations which constantly attempt to provoke incidents and aggression against Israel.

Discussing the border incidents between Israel and the Arab countries, Carey said that Israel's relationship with her neighbors "is one of armed truce." He said the Israeli government "has listed 5000 incidents of murder, robbery and sabotage over the past three years" while the UN peace plan was in effect.

"We do not contend that two wrongs can make a right—if indeed two wrongs were involved here—but we do contend that justice can and should be fair and equal," Carey said.

33,000 Out As Can Chains Struck

A MAJOR STRIKE in the steel fabricating industry began last week, as some 32,000 CIO Steelworkers shut down plants of American Can Co. and Continental Can Co. throughout the nation.

Sixty-three can manufacturing plants in the U. S., and five more in Canada, were closed by the walkout which came only after extended but unsuccessful negotiations.

Contract parleys had been under way since mid-October, with the union extending the Continental pact for 30 days to the expiration of the American Can agreement. The USA-CIO has nation-wide agreements with both firms.

Negotiations were held in New York City, with last-minute sessions in Pittsburgh.

The basic contract issues, as described by a union aide, were:

1. Wages: While the union had agreed to a general wage increase on the pattern of the 8.5c hourly gain in basic steel, it is seeking correction of a number of wage differentials. These include sizable geographical wage differentials in several sections of the nation and a 5c hourly differential against women workers.

2. Job differentials: The USA-CIO also is seeking adjustment of the wage rates for different groups, particularly for higher skilled workers.

3. Fringe benefits: The union seeks several contract improvements in this field, including vacation benefits, holidays and shift premium pay

"Light picket lines," the union reported, were effective in closing all struck plants.

The Steelworkers negotiating committees were headed by James Robb, Dist. 30 director in Indianapolis, for the Continental Can talks, and Al Whitehouse, Dist. 5 director in Cincinnati, at American Can.

Wage Gap In Texas Steel Eliminated

THE DRIVE of CIO Steelworkers to eliminate the southern wage differential has made new progress in an agreement recently concluded with the Lone Star Steel Co., basic producer in Texas.

Paralleling terms of the latest basic steel contracts, the USA-CIO eliminated the differential in the new Texas contract.

Wage increases for various job classifications range from 29c to 57c an hour, according to Dist. 37 Dir. Martin Burns.

Total annual cost of the new agreement, he estimated, is some $1.2 million.

The new contract also provides other standard terms of basic steel pacts.

Indicative of the USA-CIO's record in improving southern wages and conditions was the report that the common labor rate at Lone Star has been boosted from 80c an hour in 1948 to $1.47 hourly now, with another 10c boost due next year.

5 Million Get Public Assistance

Five million persons received $207.8 million in public assistance aid during September, the Social Security Administration reported last week. The average grant was $47.59 for the month.

Newspaper Union Solidarity Gains As Engravers Strike N.Y. Dailies

THE UNITY of union members in the New York newspaper field, born on the bricks during the CIO Newspaper Guild strike of the World-Telegram in 1950, was solidified last week by 100% support of an AFL Photo-Engravers' walkout against six major dailies.

Guild members, recalling the solid support they got from the AFL during the World-Telegram strike, honored the Engravers' 24-hour picket line. So did the other AFL unions. The result was suspension of publication by the six dailies—Times, Post, World-Telegram, Journal-American, News and Mirror.

The Herald-Tribune, not affected by the strike because its engraving is done in a commercial plant, voluntarily closed two days after the walkout started but kept its employes on duty.

Some 4500 ANG-CIO members were affected. A scale of benefits similar to that in effect during the World-Telegram strike, averaging roughly $40 a week, was ordered into effect. First payments were made on Dec. 4, when the walkout was one week old.

The ANG-CIO local announced that CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has promised CIO assistance if it is needed.

Publishers of the six struck newspapers have maintained an adamant front against the Engravers.

ON THE OTHER hand, the union has bent over backwards in seeking a solution to six differences with the employers. The members originally had demanded a $15 a week wage increase, plus collateral benefits, and before the contract expired had rejected a $3.75 package which included a pay boost, an additional holiday and an improved welfare program.

Other craft unions negotiating with the same publishers and the Herald-Tribune have turned down the same offer. The ANG-CIO, negotiating under a wage reopener, hasn't received any offer.

Three days after walking out, the Engravers at a membership meeting overwhelmingly refused an employer bid to arbitrate under conditions that could have resulted in a poorer contract than the one that expired Nov. 1.

However, they voted to cut their demands by more than half, offering to settle for a $7.50 a week package retroactive to Nov. 1 and return to work immediately, or to continue negotiations around the $7.50 figure.

THAT OFFER was summarily rejected by the publishers at a night session arranged by Federal Conciliator Bernard J. Forman. Negotiations were continuing late last week.

Dir. Whitley P. McCoy, of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, named a three-man panel to help settle the dispute in what he described as "a further effort to render every possible assistance."

Sons Of Auto, Textile Workers Gain Under Exeter's Scholarship Program

THE SON of a weaver in a textile mill goes to class with the son of an auto plant assembly line worker along with a boy whose mother is a waitress and one whose father is an employe of the National Park Service at Phillips Exeter Academy in Exeter, N. H.

These boys are representative of the 158 scholarship students out of the 750 pupils at the New England secondary boarding school for boys.

They are beneficiaries of more than $173,000 in scholarship aid awarded to boys of outstanding character, ability and need in accordance with their individual circumstances. The scholarships range from $1500, the full rate for one year, to $100.

IN ADDITION to the $173,000 now awarded to boys in the four high school grades at Exeter, an additional $35,000 is granted in prize scholarships, aid funds for travel and personal needs, and scholarships to Exeter boys now in college.

Leo Perlis, national director of the CIO Community Services Committee, is one of several men in the labor movement who are helping spread the information about the scholarship program.

On a recent visit to 173-year-old Exeter to attend a three-day meeting with professional educators from schools and colleges and other leading public citizens, Perlis said "a school such as Exeter is perhaps misunderstood by a lot of people as something beyond their reach.

"I'll bet if I was hurrying to a Chamber of Commerce meeting instead of a Union meeting, you'd be clearing a path for me!"

"It seems to me that most of the people consider Exeter as a school for the rich man's boy. I don't think they are quite aware of the scholarship fund you have here," he added.

Scholarships at Exeter are awarded on the basis of character, scholastic ability as represented by the boy's record, and family financial need.

BOYS may enter the academy in any of the four top high school grades and attend for all or any part of the four years. The scholarships are renewed annually on the basis of a review of the student's scholastic performance.

H. Hamilton Bissell, director of scholarship boys at Exeter, travels extensively seeking the aid of men and women who work daily with boys of school age. Persons in both labor and industry, agricultural work and government assist him in the discovery of talented boys who, because of circumstances in their homes or community, might not attain the degree of preparation for college and later professional schools which they desire.

CIO Protests Bias, Ends Inter-Faith Group Backing

BECAUSE of "basic differences" over discrimination, the CIO regretfully has withdrawn support of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Announcement of the action was made by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, as chairman of the CIO Civil Rights Committee.

In a letter to Lewis W. Douglas, chairman of Brotherhood Week activities of the inter-faith conference, Carey said the action was taken because some of the affiliated bodies of the conference "especially in the South openly engaged in discriminatory practices, such as excluding Negroes from their deliberations or according them only limited participation."

CIO discussed this situation for some two years with the conference, emphasizing "that we could not affiliate ourselves with organizations that permit racial discrimination in their constituent bodies."

In writing to Douglas with the authorization of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Carey said in part:

"Our differences are basic ones relating to the implementation of organizational policies.

"Our organization is fully committed to the abolition of racial segregation and discrimination. Our procedures do not permit us to indulge in partial application of this principle. Therefore, we find it impossible to successfully cooperate with organizations who deal with this subject on a varying basis. The entire situation is very much to be regretted."

Carey said that "in the absence of a forthright policy statement . . . against race discrimination," CIO affiliates will be advised not to participate in the work of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

ICFTU Board Meeting Opens

The executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions met in Brussels last week with an examination of the economic and social program of the Intl. Labor Organization high on the agenda.

Michael Ross, director of the CIO International Affairs Dept., attended as a substitute for CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

CIO Councils In Action

THE EVANSVILLE (Ind.) CIO Council has challenged Evansville employers to clean out "the lunatic fringe in their midst."

In a letter to the Manufacturers Association, the Committee of 100 and the Chamber of Commerce, the Council said it was referring to employers who were clamoring against proposed Taft-Hartley Act changes that even the late Sen. Taft accepted.

The Council's ire was aroused by a newspaper story which said that certain Evansville industrialists were opposed to 19 changes in the Taft-Hartley Law that Pres. Eisenhower sent to Congress but later withdrew.

The letter quoted Fortune magazine which said: "Of all the proposed amendments, only two mentioned violated Sen. Taft's frequently expressed opinions of the Act."

"If Evansville industrialists are not even willing to go as far as the late Sen. Taft in correcting inequities that hardly anyone will defend, that does not bode well for future labor-management relations," the letter said.

Modern Greek

The Greeks have a word, philo, which means loving, fond of, or favorably disposed to.

And the little town of Philo, O., with a population of 881 in 1951, apparently means philo-CIO — fond of CIO, favorably disposed toward CIO, a lover of CIO.

The evidence: In the last municipal election the town elected seven members of CIO unions. They are: Mayor Joseph Hartman, Councilmen Joseph Hendershott, Paul Henderson, Roger Luman, Harry Hill, Wayne Fitz and William Crumbaker.

• Some 36,000 Columbus CIO members set a new record by contributing $308,000 to the United Appeal campaign. Harry Mayfield, Columbus CIO Council president, was among those praised by UA General Chairman Livingston L. Taylor.

• The Minnesota CIO Council improved farm-labor relations by conducting an essay contest at 14 county fairs. Three prizes were awarded, the first going to Sharon Pappa, 16-year-old 4-H member of near Hibbing, who won a Guernsey heifer. The contest provides that all animals awarded prizes in the contest must be entered in the winners' counties next year.

• Iowa CIO Council is holding union counselling courses in Newton, and others were scheduled to start in Ottumwa, Des Moines and Cedar Rapids. Some 70 Community Service Committee members from locals and councils and union officers recently attended an institute sponsored by the Iowa Council and CIO Region 8 at Iowa Univ., Ames.

• The Georgia General Assembly should know by now that the State's workmen's compensation law should be improved. The Georgia CIO Council sent all Assembly members a joint CIO-AFL study, "What's Wrong With the Georgia Workmen's Compensation Law." The law was discussed at local union meetings, the Council compiled more data on recent compensation cases, and local union delegations called on Assembly members to improve the act.

• Here and there: The Virginia CIO Council planned to move its office into the building of Local 88, CIO Clothing Workers, at 102 North Belvidere St., Richmond, and to put up a big sign outside its new home . . . Aldric Revell, former Wisconsin CIO Council executive board member and an official of the Madison Newspaper Guild, was elected PAC coordinator of the 2nd Congressional Dist. . . . The Greater Cincinnati CIO Council urged affiliated locals to aid the Hamilton County Council for Retarded Children, Inc., as a Christmas project.

Union Wife Leads Alabama Drive To Cut Poll Tax

A WOMAN whose husband and father are CIO union leaders is sparking a campaign to modify Alabama's poll tax law.

She is Mrs. Alberta Boartfield, wife of Douglas Boartfield, Huntsville, Ala., joint board manager of the Textile Workers and daughter of William Crawford, regional director of the Steelworkers.

MRS. BOARTFIELD is state chairman of the Voters Service Committee of the Alabama League of Women Voters. She is playing a leading part in efforts to get an affirmative vote Dec. 15 on the referendum to cut the maximum payment for back poll taxes from $36 to $3.

After many years of fruitless struggle to repeal the poll tax, labor and liberal forces in Alabama this year were able to get the Legislature to pass the compromise amendment. A cut in the tax is expected to increase greatly the number of voters participating in the 1954 elections, when a governor will be chosen and Sen. Sparkman (D.) will be up for re-election.

A joint committee consisting of practically all the women's organizations in the State and all the labor groups is pressing for passage of the referendum. It claims that a tax cut would double the number of qualified women voters.

Passage of the referendum faces bitter and tough opposition, although the Birmingham News reported that every daily newspaper favors the $3 back tax limitation.

End Of Voting Time-Off Asked

Repeal of a law giving two hours off with pay on election day is sought by the Associated Industries of New York State.

Veterans Hit Hardest—

Mortgage Moratorium To Aid Laid-Off Workers

A MORATORIUM on home mortgage payments for jobless workers and establishment of a public works program have been asked by Elmer J. Holland, who is both a CIO field staff member and a Pennsylvania State Senator.

Holland wrote to U. S. Sen. James Duff and several Pennsylvania congressmen pointing out that the returned veteran stands to lose his home and savings through layoffs now becoming widespread. With possible months of unemployment stretching before them, Holland said, these men are becoming desperate.

Cutbacks in defense orders, Holland wrote, "will bring hardship and sorrow to many homes in our industrial areas."

The veteran, he said, "used the money he saved while in the Army to make a down payment on a house and then settled down —just like any other good citizen—to make a happy home for his wife and family-to-be."

NOW UNEMPLOYED, these veterans and their families "are feeling the hand of eviction with their homes taken away because, through no fault of their own, they cannot secure work and maintain a sufficient income to meet this monthly payment on their homes," Holland wrote.

He pointed out that during the war the government called in the "master minds of production" to plan top productivity. Veterans are asking now why the same master minds cannot be recalled to develop productivity "to make the things that are so badly needed in America to make life worth living."

Communists in Europe "are gleefully waiting and watching our unemployment lines grow. The time to stop any signs of depression or recession is before it gets a big start," he said.

HOLLAND CALLED for his moratorium on mortgage payments when workers are laid off and cannot be placed in another position at equal pay by the State Employment Office.

Unless such legislation is adopted, Holland warned, "the men who made the big money during the war, through huge profits, will become even richer, for they will be able to buy foreclosed homes at 50% of their value and later sell at a big profit."

Providing jobs by planning a public works program was also advocated by the State Senator.

"Hospitals, schools, homes and roads are badly needed. It is a disgrace to our government that mental patients have to be placed in jail instead of in hospitals," Holland said.

Holland urged the legislators not to wait—"as we did in 1929" —until the Great Depression was at its height before anything was done. He urged that steps be taken at once to "stop it before it begins."

3 Midwest CIO Councils Act To Ease Job Layoff Problem

THREE STATE and county CIO councils have taken steps to meet the unemployment problem.

They are the Illinois and the Four County Councils, with headquarters in Moline, Ill., and the Milwaukee (Wis.) County Council.

The Illinois Council reported that unemployment is particularly heavy in the Rock Island-Moline-Davenport area, where farm equipment plants are centered.

Dir. Roy Cummins of the Illinois Labor Dept. told a State Council committee that the department would help the CIO to remedy the situation and would try to arrange meeting of Council representatives with Rep. Chiperfield (R.), and Sens. Douglas (D.) and Dirksen (R.).

It was hoped that the congressmen might help bring some defense contracts to the area. The meeting with the State official was arranged at the request of the Four County Council.

THE MILWAUKEE CIO Council reported the unemployment in the county has reached "a new high." To meet the situation a list of area plants where jobs are available was being compiled. A committee of CIO international union representatives will aid the council in making job referrals and helping meet the needs of the unemployed.

Jersey CIO Urges 8 Major Gains In Unemployment Pay

EIGHT MAJOR changes in the New Jersey unemployment compensation law have been urged by the State CIO Council.

Testimony was presented to the employment security advisory group by Council Pres. Carl Holderman, Legislative Dir. Harry Kranz and Sol D. Kapelsohn, attorney for the Council. The CIO officials asked that their recommendations be presented to Gov.-elect Robert B. Meyner and next year's Legislature.

An increase in the maximum weekly benefit was sought, from the present $30 to $45 for those with no dependents, and $5 additional per week per dependent up to $65 for a claimant with four dependents. Actual benefits including dependent allowances would still be limited to two-thirds of the normal weekly wage.

Coverage would be extended to an additional 98,000 workers by bringing in employers with one or more employes instead of the present requirement of four or more employes.

THE CIO seeks elimination of the present worker tax for unemployment compensation in line with policy adopted in all but one other state.

The "active search for work" proof requirement would also be dropped and benefit payments would begin immediately when unemployment is caused by an employer lockout and after a four-week disqualification in strikes.

For The Ladies—

A Blonde Swedish Unionist Of 22 Now Is Working For IUE

INGEGERD SCHOLANDER of Stockholm, Sweden—blond, pretty and 22—is in this country on an 18 months' training program in the labor movement.

On leave from the office staff of the Swedish Confederation of Trade Unions in Stockholm, she arrived in the United States last month, and went at once to headquarters of the CIO Electrical Workers in Washington, to work and observe how the union runs its affairs.

When the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions was meeting in Stockholm last summer, Ingegerd met the American delegates and plans for the trip she'd been longing to take to the United States began to take shape. CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey, who also is IUE's president, arranged for her to start her training in the IUE-CIO offices.

After finishing high school, Ingegerd went to night school to study shorthand and typewriting, and worked four years for Sweden's largest union, the Metal Workers, which has 270,000 members. Then she went to work for the confederation. Her father is a union member employed in the food industry, and she has three brothers.

During her stay in the U. S., Ingegerd hopes to learn all she can about American unions and see as much of the country as possible, while working and paying her own way. —H. R.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

MRS. PAUL HAWKINS of Kansas City, Mo., asks a question of vital interest to all parents. She writes:

"Last year we followed your advice—bought the plastic building blocks and a musical instrument (toy) along with other small items. A year later, these toys are still in favor. That's never happened before!

"Our son is six. My husband thinks he should have an erector set. I believe he is too young. He likes and uses small-size actual hammers, saws and screw drivers. I think more tools and possibly a carpenter's bench or work table would be best."

That's the smart approach—to seek toys of enduring play value, not the costly Christmas novelties children soon tire of. As Walter Peters, toy consultant for "The 2-to-5 World" newsletter has written, play-things should be capable of being used in a variety of ways for a long time.

He points out that a strong, adjustable easel, employed by a two-year-old child for purely sensory pleasure, will become a valuable tool at age eight. Similarly, a standard, well-made set of floor blocks can be used from babyhood, when they are merely pushed around, to the school years "when they can be built into little masterpieces of architecture."

Erector sets of course are another bread-and-butter plaything that will provide enduring play value, but most educators feel that few children under eight can handle the intricate metal sets. The set Mrs. Hawkins bought last year, which worked out well, is a simpler type made of colored plastic pieces which are easier to handle because the pieces fit together over knobs rather than with nuts and bolts. It costs about $4.

Another type of building set suitable for children six and up has small hollow bricks made of plastic that interlock so the child can build walls. The sets are $3 and $5, and include doorways, windows and other architectural features for constructing buildings.

On The Right Track

In buying a child tools, Mrs. Hawkins is again on the right track in selecting real ones in small sizes rather than the over-priced toy sets. The tools in such sets are often frustrating to a child because he really can't do anything with them.

In hammers, the cobbler type with a wide head makes it easier to strike a nail. Also, supply the child with nails that have a wide head, like plasterboard nails. The workbench, too, ought to be big and sturdy.

Similarly, for girls, housekeeping toys need to be a good size. For example, one toy expert advises buying smaller-size real plastic dishes in the five-and-tens, rather than the toy dish sets.

Among new items suggested by the Arts Cooperative Service, the nursery teachers' co-op with headquarters at 340 Amsterdam Ave., New York 24, N. Y., are stilts especially designed for smaller children. They are set eight inches from the floor, so even a 4½- or 5-year-old can use them without fear, let alone danger. These cost $2.

'Miracle' Ads Are Deflated

The current crop of "miracle" ad claims by toothpaste makers again has been condemned by the American Dental Association.

A conference of dental research scientists said claims for decay-preventing dentifrices are misleading and based upon incomplete research reports.

Dr. Harold Hillenbrand, ADA secretary, said the dental group "as yet knows of no satisfactory evidence that any dentifrice now on the market will actually prevent tooth decay."

Doctor Backs Labor's Health Stand

A NOTED doctor backs the stand taken by the nation's labor unions and has assailed the American Medical Association for its frantic opposition to comprehensive medical care.

He is Dr. James Howard Means, for 28 years professor of medicine at the Harvard Medical School and chief of the medical service at the Massachusetts General Hospital. He says the American people are not getting adequate medical care at a price they can afford, and blames the "standpattism" of the AMA.

"It is naive to suppose that what is good for the American Medical Association is also necessarily good for the nation," he declares in an interesting book called "Doctors, People and Government" (Little, Brown; $3.50).

The book is the story of the fight for better medical care, and the undying opposition of the AMA to anything that threatens its members' pocketbooks.

DR. MEANS favors comprehensive medical service and group medical practice in health insurance plans—which is what labor unions are seeking, and some have achieved.

Commercial insurance and Blue Shield plans, says Dr. Means, do not offer what the American people need most—services that will prevent disease as well as cure it. Such preventive services would cut wage losses due to illness and the high cost of hospitalized illness, which can wreck a family budget.

He declares that "the affairs of medicine are the affairs of the people no less than of the medical profession." Dr. Means calls organized medicine "a guild of doctors which seeks to preserve at all costs the privileged position of the medical profession" and is "too little interested in cooperation with the government to attain a national health program."

"The doctors seemingly are all for organization when it comes to politics, but they are often against it when it comes to integrating the patient's care," he says. (LPA)

ACWA Record On Housing Praised

THE CIO Clothing Workers is among the unions that have sponsored close to 7000 cooperative apartment dwellings in the New York City area.

These units have 28,000 rooms and represent a $100 million investment.

These are some of the facts set forth in "What Every Co-operator Should Know," which is published by the United Housing Foundation, to which the ACWA-CIO belongs.

Other unions that have taken part in the cooperative housing development and are members of the foundation are the AFL Meat Cutters, the AFL Electrical Workers and the AFL Ladies' Garment Workers.

Several photos of the ACWA-CIO projects are included among the illustrations used in the booklet and attest to the outstanding role the union has played in cooperative housing.

Louis H. Fink, foundation president, said the booklet was published because persons interested in cooperative housing were having difficulty in getting the answers to their questions.

THE GUIDE provides information on the advantages as well as the financial responsibilities of cooperative home ownership. It also describes the differences between true cooperatives and those sponsored by commercial builders. It also explains federal, state and city laws relating to cooperatives, analyzes down payments and carrying charges, and touches on the social aspects of cooperative housing.

Copies of the booklet are available at 25 cents each at the foundation's offices, 345 E. 46th St., New York 17, N. Y.

High Court Upholds Federal Control Of Natural Gas Rates

The Federal Power Commission must now decide whether rates charged by some 2300 gas producers who sell to interstate pipeline companies are reasonable. The FPC originally declined jurisdiction over such rates.

In a brief order, the court rejected the appeal of the Phillips Petroleum Co. from a ruling of the U. S. Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia. That ruling held that the Natural Gas Act of 1938 applied to such firms as Phillips.

Oil firms like Phillips gather gas and sell it to pipeline firms which sell it to utility companies all over the country. Thus, the price charged by the gatherers has a real bearing on the price charged to consumers.

EX-PRES. Truman once vetoed a measure sponsored by Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.), an oil millionaire, which would have specifically exempted firms like Phillips from regulation by FPC. Later, the FPC came around to the Phillips viewpoint which exempted "production or gathering of natural gas" from regulation.

U. S. Sales Tax Would Hit Poor Hardest, Says Notre Dame Prof

THE PROPOSED national sales tax "puts the tax burden squarely on the shoulders of those least able to pay and it does so in direct proportion to their inability to pay."

So says Dr. Paul A. Montavon, economics professor at Notre Dame Univ., writing in The Grail, national Catholic magazine.

HIS ARTICLE says "the proponents of the sales tax are trying to undermine the principle of taxation based on ability to pay," and warns consumers not to be "fooled by high-pressure advertising" in favor of the tax.

"Present indications are," the professor says, "that the tax would be euphemistically called a 'manufacturer's uniform excise.' Nevertheless, the fact is that it is designed to be and would be paid by consumers."

Labeling the tax "regressive," the article points out that "those whose incomes are fully exhausted in purchasing the necessities of life would be paying a tax equal to a high proportion of their incomes, while those whose needs can be amply satisfied by the expenditure of only a small part of their incomes would be taxed at a much lower rate."

Montavon notes especially that imposing the tax at the manufacturer's level leads "most likely" to the probability that "the price of goods to the consumer will be higher by two or three times the amount of the tax."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

REGIONAL DIR. Michael Mann and New Jersey CIO Council Pres. Carl Holderman gathered some of the top officers of various international unions and staff people at an informal dinner just before the 13th constitutional convention of the Council began.

Brother Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers, attended. Carl McPeak, my assistant in charge of councils, and I were grateful for the opportunity to sit down and talk out Council problems with the outstanding leaders in New Jersey. Certainly Holdeman and Victor Leonardis, secretary-treasurer of the Council, have earned the deep respect of all those who have come in contact with them.

I have said many times that the role of the councils is one of the keys to CIO progress and it was particularly gratifying to see the way the leadership in New Jersey was preparing to meet the challenge of the tough days ahead.

AFTER THE WONDERFUL JOB that was done in the recent Jersey elections the Council might well have sat back and rested a bit. But not so. As Brother Holderman outlined their basic program to us, they are seeking to strengthen their organization and their county organizations by laying down firm policies that will enable the smaller groups to achieve financial and organizational stability. That's a healthy way to approach the problem.

It would not matter how great a program the National CIO set for its membership, it would not matter at all how fine the resolutions of our national convention sounded if there were not well organized councils to make these programs and resolutions come to life. I believe the Jersey leadership has the answers and we of National CIO are going to back them to the hilt.

As this column is written I am heading for the Massachusetts and Rhode Island State CIO Council conventions. I'll be able to report to you on these meetings next week.

WHILE THE WORK of the national convention went on, and even as Pres. Reuther was making his dramatic report of organizational gains in the past year, more than 450,000 new members in CIO, your field staff and the international unions were piling up more election victories.

On the West Coast, CIO's Irwin de Shetler reported victories at Somis Lemon, Seaboard Lemon and Oxnard Citrus Associations. CIO Field Rep. Syd Rose was in charge, assisted by Gilbert Garcia. De Shetler also reported a victory at the carrot shed in Tracy, Calif., with credit to CIO Rep. James Spangler and Local Org. Glen McGraw.

CIO Rubber Workers on the West Coast reported a victory at Rubber Corp. of California. The report came through URWA Reg. Dir. Floyd Gartrell. CIO's Chemical Workers won a victory at the Protane Gas Corp., Buechel, Ky. CIO Woodworkers won an election at Timber, Inc., in California. Intl. Org. Frank Gordon worked on this campaign.

CIO's Paperworkers reported victories at Quality Paper Box, East Boston, Mass., with UPA Reps. Henry Carroll and Ed Moore, and CIO Rep. Frank Avallone working on the campaign, and another victory at Crowell Carton Co., Marshall, Mich., with credit due UPA Reps. Elzie Bush, Darrell King and UPA Reg. Dir. Nicholas Vrataric.

CIO Furniture Workers reported victory at the Oak Flooring Co., West Jefferson, N. C. CIO Shipbuilders reported victory at Simms Yacht Builders, Dorchester, Mass.

State Quits Court War On Alabama Anti-Union Law

FACED with a court test by the CIO Government & Civic Employees, the State of Alabama caved in and decided not to enforce the Solomon Act, which provides that any public employe who joins a union or retains his membership in one forfeits his rights to his job.

The law, passed in the last legislative session, was challenged by E. J. Habshey, member of the GCEOC-CIO local in Birmingham for State liquor store employes. Habshey was threatened with loss of his job and all his civil service merit system rights if he maintained his union membership.

THE SUIT, filed by the Birmingham firm of Cooper, Mitch and Black, acting under the direction of CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, asked for a temporary injunction restraining the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board from enforcing the law pending a test of its constitutionality.

GCEOC contends the law is unconstitutional for two reasons: First, it discriminates against membership in a labor union as against membership in a variety of other organizations ranging from the Ku Klux Klan to the Chamber of Commerce.

Second, it discriminates against only certain labor unions, since it specifically exempts teachers and employes of the Alabama State Docks Board, many of whom are members of of AFL unions.

No injunction was issued because of the board's action. The GCEOC is considering further action to have the statute removed from the books even though it is now inoperative.

Adlai On TV

Adlai E. Stevenson, the 1952 Democratic candidate for President, will deliver a "major address" at a Philadelphia Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner this week. His address will be aired at 11 p.m. EST, Dec. 12, over the CBS Television and ABC Radio networks.

Victory At Quad Cities—

UAW Wins Test Harvester Election

A UNANIMOUS vote for the CIO Auto Workers has been scored in the first representation election in the Quad Cities farm equipment center since workers turned against the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers.

With UE withdrawing from the ballot—as it has done many times in the past when faced with defeat by CIO unions—the UAW won unanimous designation by cafeteria workers in the East Moline Works of International Harvester.

The National Labor Relations Board election was preliminary to pending votes covering Harvester production and maintenance workers and the skilled trades unit. These workers, formerly members of UE Farm Equipment Div. Locals 104 and 106, have voted in local union referendums to quit UE and join UAW-CIO.

PAT GREATHOUSE, UAW Agricultural Implement Dept. director, hailed the vote of cafeteria workers, who said they "want the same union" as Harvester production workers.

In the Moline-Davenport-Rock Island area, the Labor Board now is conducting hearings on UAW election petitions covering workers in the Farmall and John Deere planter works as well as the Harvester plant.

The stalling tactics of Harvester management in the case of the East Moline election petition have been protested by the UAW local paper at the Melrose Park, Ill., I-H plant.

The Union Voice, official paper of Local 6, UAW-CIO, said that management and the UE-FE have combined to block certification of Local 104 as bargaining agent.

Members of Local 104 voted to disaffiliate from UE, which was ousted by CIO in 1949 for Communist leadership, and 85% of the members have signed UAW authorization cards.

THE LOCAL 6 publication said that UE and I-H are preventing an election "by stalling and prolonging the hearings with endless cross-examination of UAW-CIO witnesses and introduction of endless exhibits."

When UE lawyers make a statement, the company's attorneys agree and vice versa," the paper continued, "and the hearings are four weeks old with no end in sight."

Explaining the situation, the local said that the company has claimed that it dealt with UE only because of the law. In this case, however, the plant workers voted overwhelmingly to leave UE.

"In contradiction to its publicity, the company does not want an immediate election. The truth is that the company wants to prevent an election and keep UE. They would rather deal with a weak union, regardless of politics, than deal with a strong militant non-Communist union," the union paper said.

HOLLYWOOD-bound is 18-year-old Pat Clark, winner of Kansas CIO Council's talent contest. Sponsored by CIO Communications Workers Local 6405, she'll get two weeks in movieland.

Carey Challenges UE To Winner-Take-All Vote

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week challenged the United Electrical Workers to participate in "winner-take-all" elections in the General Electric and Westinghouse chains.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey announced that the union has petitioned the National Labor Relations Board to hold elections in all plants of the two chains where IUE-CIO and UE represent the workers.

"We challenge the UE's leaders to consent to this winner-take-all election," declared Carey, who also is CIO secretary-treasurer.

"We challenge them to agree to a once-and-for-all determination of whether the workers in the world's largest electrical manufacturing chain (GE) want to be represented by the IUE-CIO or by men who are part of a worldwide conspiracy to undermine America's defenses and destroy democracy itself."

Carey said he was referring to James J. Matles and Julius Emspak, director of organization and secretary-treasurer respectively of UE.

Carey said that if all Westinghouse workers were in IUE they would have "complete unity" with all other workers in their companies — "something they could never achieve in UE."

"Our NLRB petition," he said, "offers the prospect of genuine unity to all GE workers, and even to all workers in the electrical manufacturing industry."

Randall Unit Urged To Aid U. S. Shipping

"WRITE A maritime report that will encourage the achievement and maintenance of an adequate U. S. Merchant Marine."

That was the advice of the CIO Maritime Committee to the Randall Commission on Foreign Economic Policy.

Hoyt Haddock, the committee's executive secretary, told the commission that trying to close the dollar gap by diverting more American trade to foreign ships is a failure. He said "such foreign revenues are greatly offset by the high port expenditures of foreign ships in U. S. ports."

A dollar spent on foreign ships closes the gap by only 8c, he said.

IUE Wins 3 In 3 Days

THREE election victories in as many days were scored recently by the CIO Electrical Workers.

At the Kings Electronics plants in Tuckahoe and New Rochelle, N. Y., IUE-CIO defeated an AFL federal local to win bargaining rights.

Two formerly unorganized plants, Western Hardware & Specialty in Milwaukee, Wisc., and Globe Industries, Dayton, O., voted on successive days to affiliate with IUE-CIO.

Packing Union Wins 8c Raise

A few hours before a strike deadline, the CIO Packinghouse Workers last week won an 8c hourly general wage increase from the Union Stockyards Co. at Fargo, N. D. The union also gained an additional 1c for night work, sick pay, and improvement in seniority rights.

TWU Gains In 2-Day Tieup

PHILADELPHIA parking lot workers, members of Local 700, CIO Transport Workers, won a two-day strike and a 12c increase last week. Approximately 350 men who daily park nearly 30,000 cars gained three paid holidays and other fringe benefits.

The workers are employed by the Sley Co., owners of more than 50 parking lots and garages in the Quaker City. Ten cents of the raise is payable immediately and the other 2c will be granted in six months.

UE Loses Right To Bargain At 2 Coast Firms

FAILURE OF three local officers to sign non-Communist affidavits led the National Labor Relations Board to set aside two orders directing two California firms to bargain with the United Electrical Workers.

The concerns are the Square D Co., Los Angeles, and Pryne & Co., Inc., Pomona.

The officers involved are trustees. The board found that the national union's constitution designated the trustees of local unions as officers. The Taft-Hartley Act requires that all officers of the union must file non-Communist affidavits before bringing any case before the NLRB.

The Spirit Of 1937—

Little People Put Up A Fight In Port Arthur

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

"There hasn't been anything like it since 1937."

Veteran CIO staff members, their memories going back 15 or more years to the robust days of mass organizing, so commented last week on the situation in Port Arthur, Tex.

The waters of Sabine Lake, an arm of the Gulf of Mexico, lap at Port Arthur's front doors. Seagoing tankers poke their sharp bows within a short distance of the city's main street to gulp in thousand-gallon swallows the products of her refineries.

At night, the burning exhaust gases of those refineries light eerie fires against the black skies.

A Union Town

Nearly half of the city's 60,000 population are union members or the families of union members. The CIO Oil Workers saw to that years ago. They fought often, long and always bitterly to win standards that are the envy of the industry.

This is the story not of oil workers but of little people that too often are forgotten once the major industry of their area is organized. This is the story of Port Arthur and its hotel workers, restaurant help, the carhops in drive-ins and the clerks who stand behind the counters of the stores along Procter St., Port Arthur's "main stem."

They couldn't help being envious, these people, of the scale of wages that oil workers commanded. They had sense, too, these people, and knew that those wages came with organization.

Suddenly, spontaneously, without the prompting or prodding of a union organizer, these people demanded organization by the CIO.

They Got Help

They got it—until their numbers swamped the facilities of the OWIU office staff. A call for help went out and a representative of the CIO Distributive Workers was sent to Port Arthur to set up a union for the service industry workers.

The storm broke. Reaction against the attempt by these workers to organize erupted with all the swiftness and violence of a hurricane racing in over the Gulf. It was 1937 all over again.

Back in those days, when the Oil Workrs were getting their first unsure footing in the industry, the cry of communism was raised.

Martin Dies of the House un-American Committee fame saw a link between the CIO and the efforts of the Soviet to dominate the oil fields of Texas. A newspaper headline told the world, "Red query in Sabine sector is promised."

Almost the identical headline appeared last week.

There's a new set of players on today's stage, a new crowd of headline-hunters sees an old menace in Port Arthur's organizing effort.

Low Wages, Long Hours

The long arm of the Kremlin, according to Texas Atty. Gen. John Ben Shepperd, was behind DPO's efforts to raise the wages of a hotel porter who was working 14 hours a day, seven days a week, for $22 a week . . . or behind the dime store clerk working 48 hours for $18 . . . or of kitchen help in Port Arthur's restaurants who got $12-$15 a week for as many as 63 hours work.

The 1937 furor against communism was revived and Port Arthur's name was on the front pages of every Texas paper recently when several hundred workers struck in protest against such wages and conditions.

There were political ramifications behind the attack on the strikers. Texas power politics was being played and some newspapers were brave enough to say so.

They saw Sheppered's move as a bid for the governorship as a red-fighter. They knew that Port Arthur was in Gov. Allan Shiver's home county and the only county he did not carry when he won his seat in Austin, the State capital. They recalled that Shivers led the Texas-for-Eisenhower campaign in 1952.

Communism became the big issue in Port Arthur and all over Texas. A "Little McCarthy" committee was called into session to probe the DPO as well as other unions tried and expelled years ago from CIO because of Communist-domination.

Port Arthur's employers, beset by nearly 30 strikes, pleaded that they had the highest respect for CIO—that the Oil Workers long ago proved their "respectability." But it was a Communist union they feared, they said.

To ally this fear and form a basis for honest bargaining to end the strike, CIO recalled the DPO and the strikers voted to become the CIO Sabine Area Local Industrial Union 1814, chartered directly to CIO.

A Catholic priest, a Protestant minister and an American Legion official agreed to serve on a committee to check on any ties between the old DPO and the new LIU. To date, they have found none, nor will they find any.

Unhappily, this story can't report that the employers sat down to negotiate and everybody lived happily ever after. Resistance continued as strong as ever and it became clear to the strikers that unionism, not communism, was what the employers had been fighting all along.

Along Procter St., though, the store clerks continue to picket undaunted. Business should be booming as Christmas nears but store managers gaze up and down empty aisles as barren to customers as though the front doors were locked.

Business Lags

The dime stores have installed carts and checkout stands like supermarkets to meet the needs of a trickle of customers that cross picket lines in a good union town.

Clothing stores advertise for help and tell customers to serve themselves and save.

Some of Port Arthur's biggest, best and busiest restaurants closed their doors rather than continue the futile fight.

Last week, a mass meeting of CIO and AFL leaders from all over Jefferson County—where there are 15,000 OWIU members—pledged support to the strike and together planned new methods to make it even more effective.

It's too soon to write the end of the story but not too early to make a prediction. With the spirit evident along Procter St., in the old CIO Maritime Union hall to which strike headquarters has just moved, and on the faces of the strikers themselves, the answer is plain.

It's victory—and 1937 all over again.

Joe Sinks His Teeth Into Real Juicy Case Of Spies—And That's For Sure

JOE McCARTHY, who has been known to bite off more than he can chew, has got his teeth into a real juicy spy case—and this time there's not a doubt in the world about it.

The facts about this spy case are all there for anyone to digest, including Wisconsin's Republican Senator, and they don't need any television, subpenas, allegations, innuendos, closed hearings or big headlines to liven up the story. And they're all red, to boot.

The crimson-hued case of spies was tracked down near Oshawa, the Ontario industrial city where CIO-CCL Auto Workers and Steelworkers are strongly organized. And the spies, as reported by the Oshawa Times-Gazette, were arraigned, put into custody, imprisoned in a wicker basket, and sent off by express to Sen. McCarthy for his fullest investigation.

What's this case of northern spies all about? Just precisely that. A group of McCarthy's sardonic admirers on the Toronto Globe & Mail rounded up a carton of "Northern Spies," the pride of Canada's apple orchards. For good measure, they tossed in a McIntosh "Red." And the whole package came from the "Red Wing" orchards, natch.

Boss Tosses The Book—It's A Boomerang

THE HINDE & Dauch Co. in Detroit "threw the book" at Local 998, CIO Paperworkers, but it proved to be a boomerang.

The firm tried to force some 20 changes in the contract in an effort to eliminate the local as an effective representative of the 140 workers. It penalized seven employes 30 days.

It moved dies out of the plant —thus attempting to eliminate a number of jobs—while the local was holding its annual picnic.

That touched off a 71-day strike. The walkout ended when H&D agreed to an 8c hourly general increase, a 5c hourly adjustment for maintenance workers and boiler operators, and a general improvement of the pact.

Shoe Workers Sign Brown Pact

The CIO Shoe Workers and the Brown Shoe Co. have reached a new agreement, retroactive to Nov. 1, containing a wage escalator clause, the modified union shop, and improved health, welfare and hospitalization provisions. The contract covers nearly 5000 union members, and will run for two years.

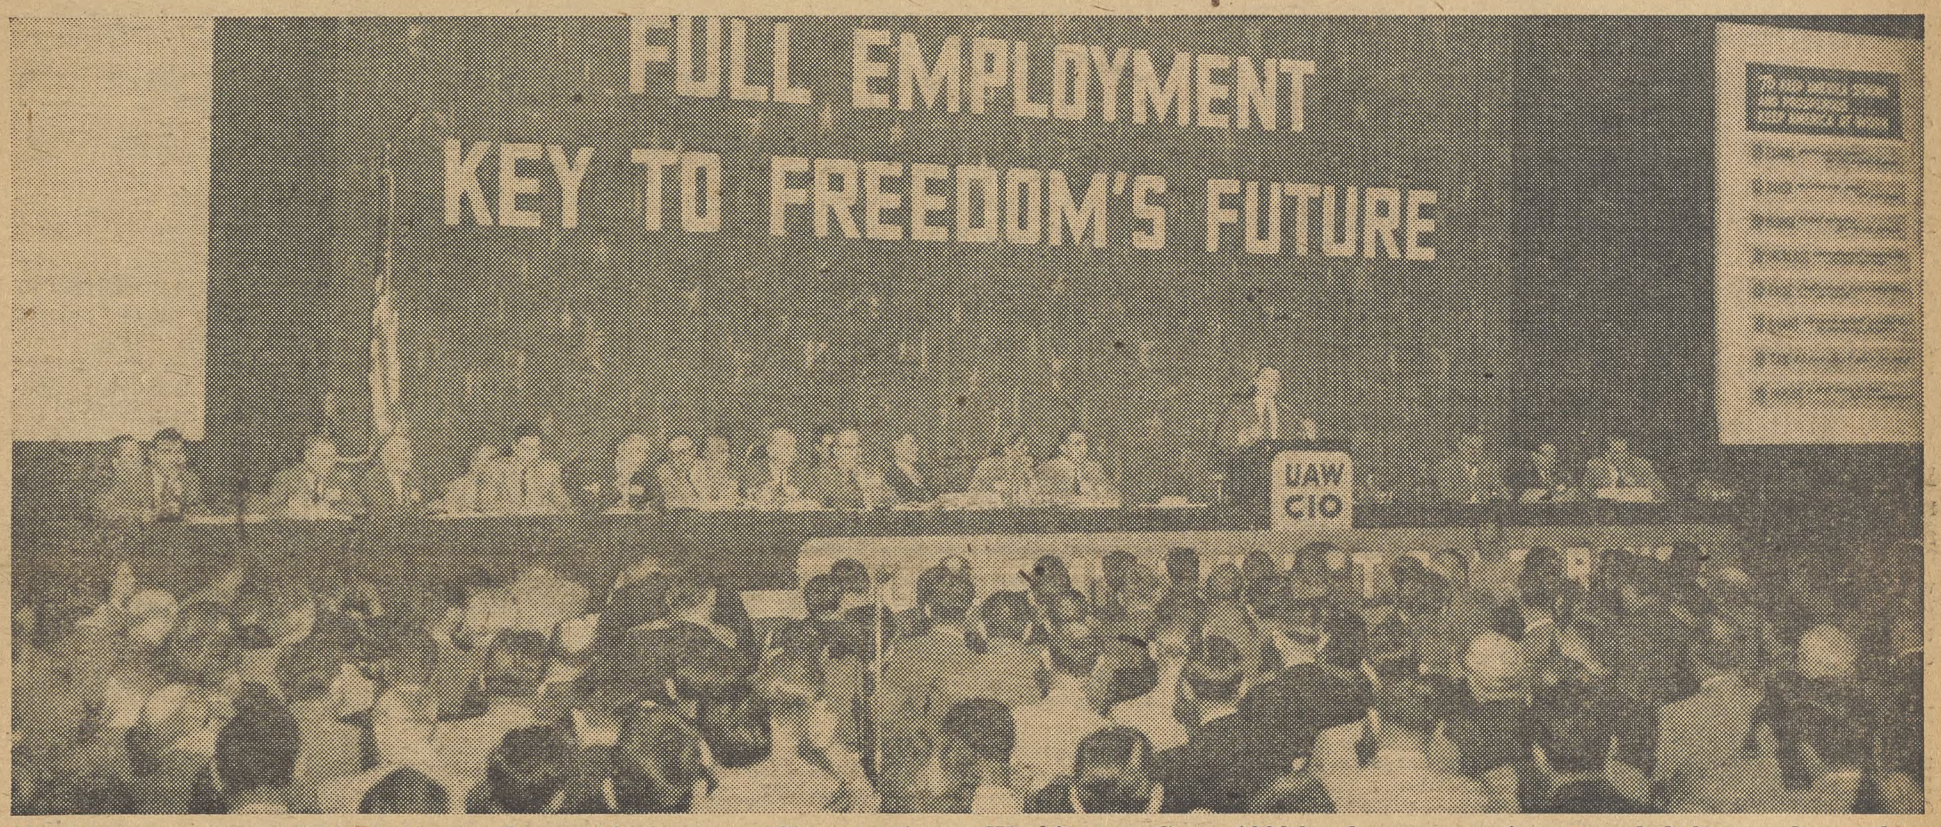
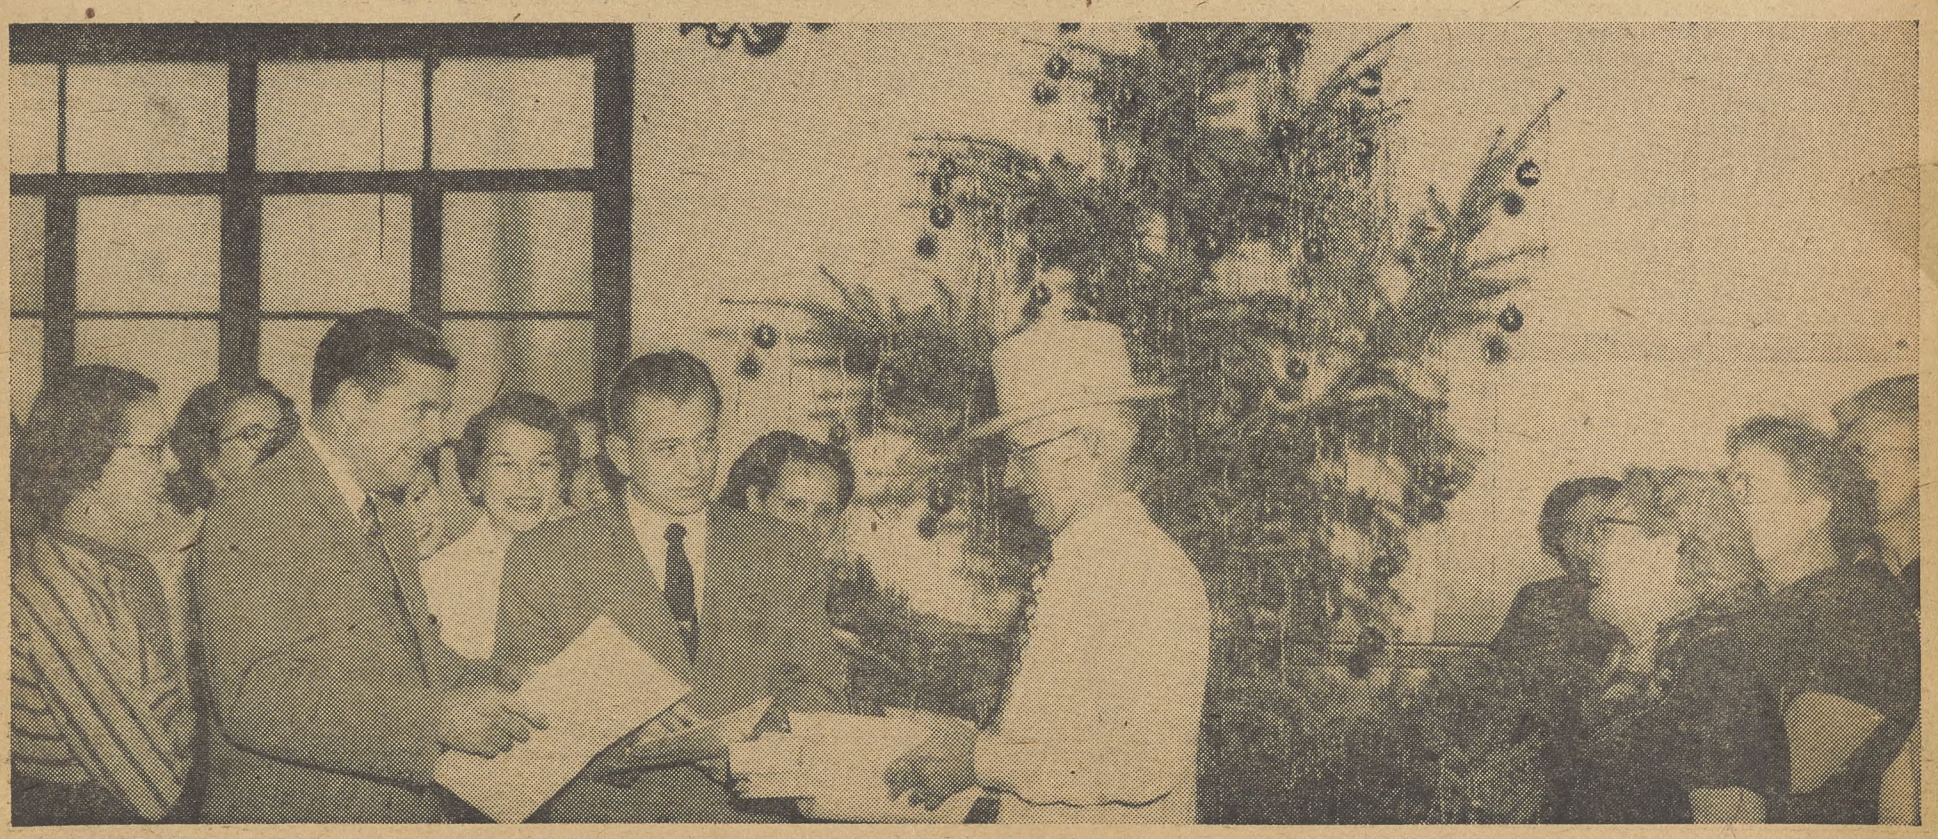
'Keep America On The Job'

UAW Begins Drive To Stop Mass Layoffs

—See Pages 6-7



'Little Men' of big business who anticipate "a small, corrective depression" as "very possible and perhaps even desirable" were vigorously condemned by CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther (above), addressing national full employment conference in Washington. Some 1000 local representatives attended the two-day parley, adopted a wide-range "Keep America At Work" program, and urged Pres. Eisenhower to implement the Full Employment Act to curb the fast developing layoff trend. (For a full report of the conference, see Pages 6 & 7).



'White Christmas' came early in Christmas-tree decorated hall of CIO Sabine Area Local Industrial Union 1814, on strike in Port Arthur, Tex., when Deputy Sheriff Newt Reese (center) showed up with an armful of citations. He's serving them on CIO National Rep. Fred Pieper and Knox Walker, CIO representative (at left), while striking CIO retail workers find situation amusing. Legal papers were served in anti-picketing suit brought by 12 of the struck Port Arthur firms. But the latest employers' move failed. (See Page 12.)

'Bull Of The Woods' Learns The Hard Way

THE FOREMEN at General Motors don't have much trouble preaching safety, but they sure have a tough time practicing it.

At least that's the story reported in The Transmitter, publication of the CIO Auto Workers local in the GM factory at Saginaw, Mich., which makes transmissions for Chevrolets. Here's the story:

Attempting to speed up production in Dept. 54, one foreman, Jim Withrow, suffered the loss of his finger.

Harry Pritchard couldn't keep his fingers out of trouble. Frank Shulaw darn near lost his whole hand. Harold Johnson is walking around with a stub, and now Jim "Speedup" Withrow has joined the elite circle.

Cheating a man out of a job, or sending him to an early grave by a speedup is a crime. Crime doesn't pay. Just ask Harry, Harold, Frank or Jim.

It certainly is no chore to separate the sheep from the goats, or members of supervision from members of stupidvision. They separate themselves.

Fortunately this mad speedup scheme of foreman Withrow's backfired on him.

A new hire had been operating this job. Withrow insisted that the new worker operate the job Withrow's way. The new worker evidently recognized the folly and danger. He refused to run the job as foreman Withrow insisted it be run.

One argument led to another. One threat led to another. Finally, unable to stand the badgering, the worker quit and went home.

Withrow then eagerly took the worker's place at the machine. It looked like a premeditated plan. With the worker out of the way, foreman Withrow started to speed up the job as he tried to force the new employe to do.

The net result is now known. The worker who quit still has 10 fingers. Jim has nine.

Isn't it hitting below the belt when a member of management has to badger a worker to quit his job, and then move in on the job and speed up production?

"It is not the policy of your editor to say anything bad about anyone," The Transmitter noted. "Therefore, in the case of foreman Jim Withrow we say . . . good."

IUE Wins At Lynn, Sets GE Pay Goals

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week defeated the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers in National Labor Relations Board elections at the General Electric plants at Lynn and Everett, Mass., as IUE-CIO drew up contract demands for the entire GE chain.

There were two elections, one for the production and maintenance workers, and the other for the office workers.

The results in the first election were: IUE 5546, UE 4806, no union 66, and challenged 533. Votes cast by the office workers tallied: IUE 852, UE 276, AFL Office Employees 306, no union 25, and challenged 434.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, accused GE of playing "footsie" with both the UE and AFL.

EARIER, the union's GE Conference Board at a meeting at Boston mapped contract proposals for 78,000 UE members in GE plants. Demands for a "substantial" pay increase and the guaranteed annual wage highlighted the program.

The exact amount of the general wage increase will be determined by conditions when negotiations open in about four months.

The union in addition wants a companywide minimum rate of $1.25 an hour; reinstatement of the profit sharing plan, cancelled with UE connivance in 1947; equal pay for equal work for women, and a better pension plan under which GE cannot cut payments.

"We intend to press in our next negotiations for a guaranteed annual wage in order to provide hourly and weekly paid workers the same assurance of income that is given to corporation officials and supervisors. We have to live by the year just as they do, our bills go on whether we are laid off or not.

"With such a guaranteed annual wage program widely extended, American workers will have a secure income, the nation will have secure purchasing power, and our economy will be freer than ever before from fear of recession or depression."

★ Carey Raps GE's Order On Firings

DEFENSE against Communist industrial espionage and sabotage is not served by "picking on" rank and file workers and letting ringleaders go free, Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers declared last week.

Commenting on the General Electric Co.'s new "security" plan, Carey noted that it took three years of evasion and double-talk by the firm before IUE-CIO warnings about the danger of having Communist-dominated unions like the United Electrical Workers associated with its plants sank in.

"GE would, by its procedure, fire or suspend some rank and file workers who were dupes of Communist leaders," he said.

"But GE proposes to do nothing to interfere with the national ringleaders of the UE who direct all UE members. I refer to James Matles, UE organizational director, and Julius Emspak, UE secretary-treasurer, who have consistently refused to testify on their Communist connections."

The company announced it will discharge any employe who admits being a Communist, a spy or a saboteur. It will suspend without pay an employe, accused of being a Communist in sworn testimony before a government agency, who declines to give rebuttal testimony under oath, or who invokes the Fifth Amendment in refusing to testify concerning Communist affiliations.

Carey also challenged GE to agree to the IUE-CIO's petition for a chain-wide representation election so as "to eliminate once and for all and at one blow the Communist control in its plants where UE has bargaining rights."

U. S. Reports Sharp Climb In Jobless

A SHARP monthly increase in unemployment figures was reported last week by federal agencies, but Commerce Sec. Weeks nevertheless claimed that the job situation "continues to be favorable."

The Census Bureau reported the number of unemployed climbed by 266,000 in the period from Oct. 10 to Nov. 14. It was the biggest monthly climb this year. The total is 1,428,000.

And the Labor Dept. Bureau of Employment Security reported new claims for jobless compensation benefits are at the highest point of the year, while continued claims are above one million.

LAYOFFS in manufacturing industry are the chief cause of the unemployment increase. Three per cent of the nation's factory workers, it was estimated, now are unemployed, compared with 2% a year ago.

Another federal report said that the factory hiring rate dropped by 15% in October, while the layoff rate has doubled in the past four months.

In Michigan, unemployment totals 125,000—the highest in 16 months. (See Pages 6 and 7 for story on CIO Auto Workers full employment conference.)

CIO Hits Court Curb On Union Free Speech

STRIKERS who say things that aren't "nice" about their employers during a walkout are fair game for firings, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled last week in a 6-3 decision strongly protested by the CIO.

The case grew out of a strike by the AFL Electrical Workers against television station WBTV, Charlotte, N. C., in 1949. The station discharged nine strikers for distributing handbills critical of the quality of its broadcasts and hinting it considered the community a "second class city." There was no mention of the strike on the handbills.

As a result of the firings, the union lost its majority and the company refused to bargain. The union appealed to the National Labor Relations Board, which upheld the firings. The District of Columbia U. S. Circuit Court reversed the ruling.

THE SUPREME COURT majority, in reversing the Circuit Court, agreed with the opinion of Justice Harold Burton that "there is no more elemental cause for discharge of an employe that disloyalty to his employer."

Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel of the CIO and the CIO Steelworkers, attacked that stand as a "dangerous concept" which sharply restrict's labor's right of free speech in a strike.

The high court took an unrealistic view of strikes, he said, disregarding the fact that quite often "nice things aren't said by the participants on one side or the other." The ruling apparently was based on the fact that the court considered the handbill "not nice," he added.

HST's School Brief Gets GOP Backing

THE LEGAL arguments of the Truman Administration against segregated schools received support of the Eisenhower Administration before the Supreme Court last week.

As the court heard three days of oral argument on five cases of school segregation, Assistant Atty. Gen. Lee Rankin—under close questioning by the justices—said flatly:

"It is the position of the Dept. of Justice that the 14th Amendment does not permit any discrimination based on race or color."

Rankin was questioned concerning a non-committal "friend of the court" brief filed earlier by Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell. That brief said the court had authority to outlaw segregation but took no definite stand.

THEN RANKIN voiced his flat statement, and said the department is adopting the same anti-segregation stand taken by the Truman Administration. In a brief last year, former Atty. Gen. James P. McGranery said school bias should be outlawed as unconstitutional.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, led by Thurgood Marshall, earlier told the court that segregated education is a "sorry heritage from slavery."

The NAACP lawyers argued that civil rights legislation at the end of the Civil War was aimed at all racial caste legislation and sought "complete equality" for all Americans. They also struck at arguments for "separate but equal" schools.

Ohio CIO Fighting Mad Over GOP Failures

By AL ZACK

A FIGHTING MAD Ohio CIO Council last week detailed its grievances against the Administration, Congress and the Ohio Legislature, and planned to make its protest felt at the ballot box in 1954.

In three days of meetings at Cincinnati's Hotel Sheraton-Gibson, the 1250 delegates to the largest convention in Ohio CIO's history found one ray of hope.

"The public as a whole," it said, "is fed up with the new Administration's lack of leadership and its inclination to turn the country over to Big Business lock, stock and barrel."

But there was no inclination on the part of the delegates to sit back and wait prayerfully for a miraculous solution. Rather, they decided upon an all-out PAC campaign to elect public servants "dedicated to the welfare of the people."

The principal speakers, led by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), bluntly attacked the Administration's failures and the giveaway tactics of Congress. By resolution, the delegates roundly condemned much of what they found on the national scene and the record of failure chalked up by the Ohio Legislature.

Lengthy Grievances

Pres. James P. Griffin, CIO Steelworkers district director from Youngstown, set the pitch in his hard-hitting keynote speech, and the officers' report to the convention spelled out the Ohio CIO's list of grievances.

Of Congress, the report said its record had been one of enactment to aid and enrich those least in need, while it failed to adopt measures for the most needy.

Of the Administration, the report observed that "the team is supposed to push in one direction" but "the direction of the Eisenhower 'team' is away from the people and toward entrenched, extreme conservatism."

Bitter Disappointment

Of the Ohio Legislature, the report expressed "bitter disappointment" shared by "those who hopefully looked . . . for some sound progress in labor and social legislation."

"The 100th General Assembly," Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman told the convention, "did nothing in an era when all the facts pointed to an obvious need for modernizing social legislation."

Adopting a series of resolutions, the convention:

- Charged the Eisenhower Administration with "dismantling and weakening" important social welfare functions of government and demanded the Administration reverse its policy to "strengthen the economic and social fiber of the country."
- Called for a federal program to meet the threat of recession and depression "by strengthening and broadening the base of consumer purchasing power."
- Urged that present immigration laws be replaced by those "consistent with 20th century conditions and ideals."
- Pledged to fight with increased vigor "to realize the democratic rights promised by our Constitution regardless of race, creed, color or national origin."
- Pledged its full support to every CIO union fighting for the guaranteed annual wage.
- Offered support to legislative measures which would insure farmers maintaining a just income.
- Reaffirmed its demand for repeal of the unfair and unjust Taft-Hartley Law and condemned the return of "government by injunction" in Ohio.
- Condemned the federal sales tax, whether presented openly or in disguise as a manufacturers' excise tax.
- Pledged support for "the maintenance of the integrity of our school system."

Unity

Unity was the watchword of the Ohio CIO Council convention—and nowhere was it better demonstrated than in the election of officers.

Steelworker James P. Griffin was unanimously re-elected president for his second term. Steelworker Jacob Clayman was unanimously re-elected secretary-treasurer for his sixth term.

And 19 vice-presidents, comprising the state executive board, were unanimously elected from all sections of the state and from a variety of international unions—all without opposition.

Lausche Seeks Another Term

THE 1954 Ohio political prospect was clarified last week, when Democratic Gov. Frank J. Lausche announced he will seek reelection to his fifth term.

A short time later, Sen. Burke (D.)—named a few weeks ago by Gov. Lausche to fill the unexpired term of the late Sen. Taft (R.)—announced that he would seek election to a full Senate term.

Ohio Petition Drive Seeks Better Compensation Law

THREE MAJOR TASKS—all of them tough—will be on the Ohio CIO Council's schedule for the coming year. Rolling up its collective sleeves, the Ohio CIO voted to:

- Undertake the gigantic task of revamping the state workmen's compensation law by the initiative petition and referendum route.
- Drive to register 750,000 more voters for the important congressional elections of 1954.
- Seek to revamp state election laws which are "so rigged as to discourage voting."

Pres. James P. Griffin said the petition campaign was designed to "appeal to the people from the Legislature's failure to extend substantial justice to the 335,000 workers injured yearly in our shops and factories and the widows and children of the 1250 who are normally killed each year by the industrial machine."

THE STATE CIO will undertake a petition campaign demanding the Legislature adequately care for injured workers. It will, CIO leaders believe, become the major issue in state elections during 1954.

Under Ohio law, the people can force the Legislature to act on a specific issue by submitting signed petitions. If the Legislature fails to act favorably, they can force the issue onto the ballot in the next general election.

Complicated and surrounded by legislative red tape, the initiative petition and referendum issue is little used in Ohio, but CIO is tackling the job to gain a better compensation program.

The Ohio CIO-PAC reported its surveys showed more than a million potential voters in urban areas are not registered and thus are not eligible to vote.

"We are determined to cut that figure by 75% between now and Sept. 22, last date for registration," the PAC said.

Question

"People often ask me to discuss my views on the Eisenhower program," Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) told the Ohio CIO convention.

"I tell them it would be the shortest speech of my career. The only thing I could say in such a speech," the Senator said with a grin, "would be:

"What program?"

Carey Predicts GOP Will Keep On Using Smearcase

THE EISENHOWER Administration last week was branded as a convert to McCarthyism by a succession of major speakers at the Ohio CIO convention.

Top CIO spokesman and convention guests unanimously condemned the smear tactics of Sen. McCarthy. And CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, in discussing the Harry Dexter White case, charged:

"The record shows that this Administration has deliberately embraced McCarthyism and intends to keep on using it wherever and whenever it is politically expedient."

PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, president-emeritus of the big Ohio Council, joined in the attack, saying the Republicans were trying to remain in power by "waving the red flag in the American people's eye" and "using the FBI as a political instrument."

Kroll accused the GOP of following the pattern "set by dictators of Russia, Germany, Italy and Spain"—the scare technique and the secret police.

"McCarthyism," Carey explained, "is a coldly calculated political device by which the reactionaries hope to maintain big business control of our government for an endless period."

Carey declared the Administration's adoption of McCarthyism is "clearly the reason for the disgraceful and lieing attack" on the patriotism of former Pres. Truman by "a top Administration spokesman—Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell, Jr."

"It seems to me crystal clear," he added, "that we in the CIO — an organization which has always militantly fought the good fight for freedom of thought and expression—must be in the forefront of this battle."

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) hit out at the "hindsight" of the Eisenhower Administration. Referring to the White case, the Senator said:

"I'm not in favor of combing the graveyards for those who betrayed us. It isn't going to do us any good now. If some of those who are now waving the bloody shirt had done one-tenth as much to fight the menace of Communism as have religious leaders and labor leaders, the world would have been rid of the Communist threat today."

Three secretary-treasurers of major CIO unions warned the delegates of a developing economic recession in America.

I. W. Abel, secretary-treasurer of the Steelworkers and for many years a vice-president of the Ohio CIO, warned that unemployment is certain to rise during the coming year. Abel predicted that when the USA-CIO opens discussions with the steel industry next spring, the industry "may be ready to give serious consideration to the guaranteed annual wage."

Emil Mazey, Auto Workers secretary-treasurer, likewise discussed the serious unemployment picture and hit out at those who consider a "little depression" a good thing. Mazey said the UAW had asked Michigan's Gov. G. Mennen Williams to call a special legislative session to deal with the problem of mounting unemployment in that state and he urged the Ohio CIO to take similar action.

John Chupka, secretary-treasurer of the Textile Workers, told the convention that his organization had already felt the "storm of unemployment. He said "we've been hit and hit hard during the last six to nine months."

Murray Lincoln, president of the Ohio Farm Bureau, told the delegates it was possible to have a healthy economy even without war or preparations for war. Our major objective, he said, should be to gear our economy "primarily to consumption rather than production."

Atoms For Peace

Pres. Eisenhower has proposed a unique, practical first step for transporting the almost unbelievable power of atomic energy from the negative, destructive field of war into the positive realm of peacetime humanitarianism.

True, the specifics of the President's proposals have yet to be unveiled. As yet, the Soviet Union has been demonstrating only its automatic reflex rejection of every Western proposal—stupidly contending that somehow this proposal for peace is a threat of war. Of course, some diehard isolationists on Capitol Hill are muttering that "it can't work."

Discussion and debate, which are so much a part of our democratic way of life, may well improve and strengthen this germ of a plan for universal use of atomic power for peaceful purposes.

Certainly, Pres. Eisenhower's proposal for such use of an international uranium stockpile is in line with the CIO's convention thinking. The convention strenously urged that this new force be harnessed for "good as well as evil"—that it be used "for power, medicine, biology and other civilian uses."

Implicit in the Eisenhower proposal for international control is the second thought the CIO convention expressed: that the government maintain ownership and control of fissionable material and atomic energy patents for the benefit of all the people who paid the cost of atomic development to date.

Prodded by an awareness of the horror of wartime use of atomic energy, guided by a desire to serve the interests of world peace and dedicated to the service of humanity, we can yet make atomic energy the servant—not the master—of mankind.

Nobel Prize Winner

Every American can share a bit in the pride that Gen. George C. Marshall has received the Nobel Prize for peace.

George Marshall has been the very model of a top-ranking general in a democratic society.

He was the architect of a mighty army that helped defeat the Axis. Then, at a time when retirement was in sight, he served Pres. Truman as Secretary of State—and presented the world with the Marshall Plan, which became the symbol of American democracy's will for peace and prosperity.

Little men from the isolationist camp have sniped at George Marshall, and in their fury at Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman, have gone so far as to call him a "front man for traitors." The idealism of the Marshall Plan has been hacked down by short-sighted congressmen and administrators.

But the concept which George Marshall sponsored is remembered with gratitude by the peoples of the world. The Nobel Prize, awarded to the General in Oslo last week, will be remembered long after the petty attacks on a great American have been forgotten.

Action Will Tell

Two leading "balance the budget" Congressmen, Republican Curtis of Nebraska and Republican Reed of New York, staunchly deny they intend to cut out the insurance features of the Social Security program in favor of the disastrous "pay as you go" plan sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce. Welcome words—but we'll make our final judgment on the basis of congressional action, not pre-Congress speeches.

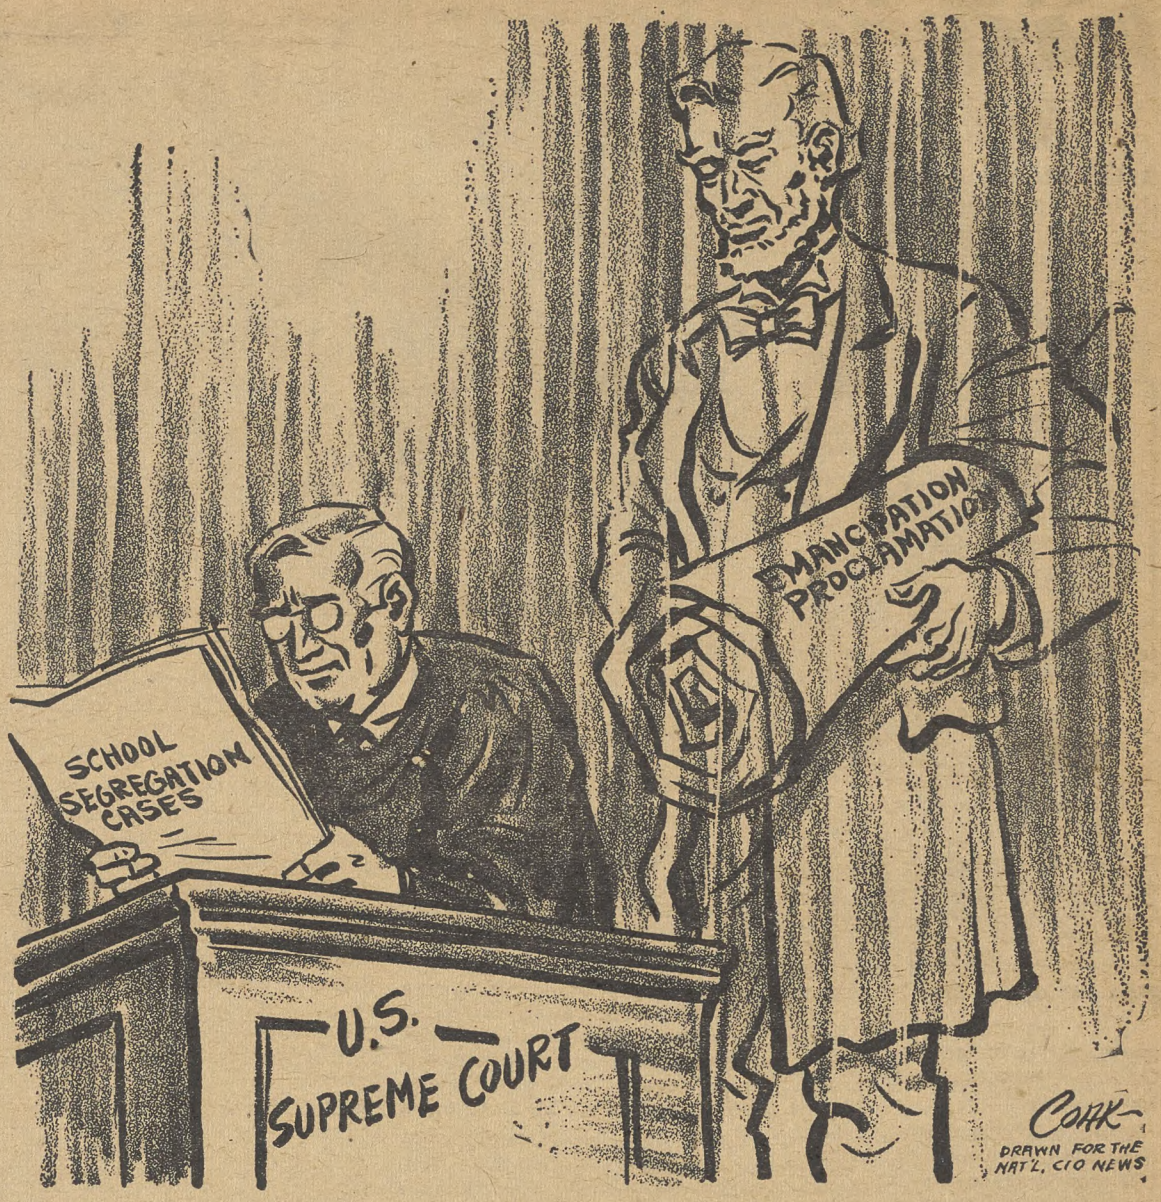
'Can I Be Of Any Help?'



In Other Words—

We Mean Business On Annual Wages

By REV. GEORGE G. HIGGINS

Joint labor-management studies of the guaranteed annual wage, the avowed goal of several CIO unions, are urged by Father Higgins, assistant director of the Social Action Dept., National Catholic Welfare Council, in his weekly column.

THE GUARANTEED annual wage is standing by in the wings ready to take the center of the collective bargaining stage as soon as contract negotiations are opened up again in the auto, steel and electrical manufacturing industries.

The CIO unions in these bellwether industries have publicly announced that the GAW is their next major objective. There is every reason to believe that they mean business and are not merely using the GAW as a talking point.

Their GAW (argument) up to this point has been couched in generalities, but it is well known that their research people are now putting the finishing touches on detailed proposals which will be publicly unveiled within the near future. The publication of these proposals, which are being worked out with the professional advice of some of the best economists in the United States, will mark the official opening of what promises to be one of the most important chapters in the history of collective bargaining in the United States.

C. of C. Counter-Attacks

The long-range importance and far-reaching implications of this concerted drive for the guaranteed wage are clearly recognized by the business community and are now being seriously discussed in business-sponsored publications. A counter-offensive against the CIO's forthcoming proposals has already been launched, with the U. S. Chamber of Commerce supplying much of the ammunition in a new booklet.

On second thought, "counter-offensive" is probably not the correct word to characterize the strategy of the Chamber of Commerce. The C. of C. is very much on the defensive. This is most unfortunate, in our opinion, for the guaranteed annual wage can never be achieved on a broad scale—without excessive governmental intervention—until American industry becomes enthusiastic about the idea.

Some employers, Prof. Joseph Snider pointed out in a book entitled "The Guarantee of Work and Wages," shy away from the guaranteed annual wage altogether. This, he says, is "an ostrich-like attitude." Employers cannot hide from something which is already here.

Prof. Snider concludes that a mental readjustment is required on the part of American industrialists. The average employer, he says, will have to develop a firm conviction that he must do everything possible to increase the stability of employment and the regularity of wages.

Followed—To A Point

Prof. Snider's advice is being followed by the Chamber of Commerce—up to a point. The C. of C., in its policy statement on the guaranteed annual wage ("The Economics of the Guaranteed Annual Wage"), goes out of its way to encourage individual American employers to increase the stability of employment and the regularity of wages.

"All such efforts," the C. of C.'s new booklet states, "are rich in reward to the workers, to the community and to the employer." This is sound advice as far as it goes . . . but it will have to be supplemented by industry-wide agreements arrived at jointly by labor and management.

"If one company or even one industry cannot act alone," the CIO concluded in a 1947 policy statement on the GAW, "labor-management councils on an industry-wide or inter-industry basis should tackle the problem."

To leave the impression—as the C. of C. booklet does—that there is something sinister about this proposal is very unfair. There's nothing sinister about it at all. It is just plain ordinary horse sense—and it is thoroughly in accord with Catholic social teaching.

The CIO does not have—and does not pretend to have—all the answers on the subject of the guaranteed annual wage. The subject is admittedly very complicated.

All the more reason, then, for management to study it jointly with the unions in labor-management councils at the industry as well as at the company level. Let us hope that the Chamber of Commerce and other employer organizations will throw their support behind this very logical and very sensible approach to the GAW before it is too late.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A CHILLING denunciation was all the Soviets served in their first reaction to Pres. Eisenhower's United Nations speech on atomic energy. Americans are nevertheless entitled to pride that our President found the energy and initiative to attempt a new departure in our world relations.

In speaking before the UN, he chose the proper forum. He acknowledged for the record that Russia has certain fears and attitudes that we must take into account.

No Change

According to the Wall Street Journal, "a new tribe of 'influence men'—Republican now, of course—is beginning to show up in Washington."

One of them is that the Soviet rulers may have sound historical grounds for fear of invasion from the West. Within a generation Russia was twice invaded by Germany through the present Soviet satellites.

Another is that the Baruch-Acheson-Lilienthal plan for international control of the atom is dead, for the time being, because the Soviets simply will not accept the inspection system.

The President changed the context of past discussions by suggesting a substitute—a modest proposal that all powers possessing the "secret" of the atom contribute some fissionable material to a UN agency that would experiment toward peacetime exploitation of atomic power.

He did not—despite Russian early comments—"threaten" the Soviets by talking about our power. On the contrary, he told Americans that any "quantitative superiority" we might possess was not sufficient to justify a continuation of atomic threats. He told Americans that no defenses, static or retaliatory, were enough for us to tolerate the existence of international tension.

The Power Of Leadership

Mr. Eisenhower has frequently misused or failed to use the great powers of leadership inherent in the office of the Presidency. On many domestic issues he is tolerating the destruction of important social gains.

On this occasion he bluntly declared that if changes in our domestic laws were necessary to secure American participation in a UN atomic agency, he would ask Congress for the changes and felt confident that Congress would grant them.

A President who talks in these terms, and who is certain his course is right, can command overwhelming bipartisan support in the country and the Congress. He is acting as a Chief Executive ought to act in moments of great peril.

Mr. Eisenhower broke the stalemate of the dead past with a new, creative and constructive idea. He planted a seed. No matter what the immediate comment of others, a fruitful harvest may follow.

A Storm Over Power

There is precious little about it in the newspapers, but a storm in brewing for the Republicans among the rural electric co-operatives —the farmer-owned groups which in 20 years have electrified more than 90% of America's farms.

Interior Sec. McKay doesn't like public power. He doesn't like big multipurpose federal dams and federally built transmission lines to move electric power to places where customers can compete for it.

He has tried to alter the interpretation of the "preference" clauses that, in many statutes, have given co-ops and municipalities the privilege of first rights to cheap public power.

A Senate monopoly subcommittee recently began hauling McKay's assistants before it to explain these programs, and a full-fledged investigation of the entire anti-public power policy was threatened.

The Colorado co-ops are up in arms. So are the co-ops of the Southwestern area including Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Rural co-ops in the Southwest have created a "super-co-op" to "buy" any transmission lines, dams and generating facilities McKay and his colleagues decide to "sell."

Sen. Aiken, a Republican whose own state of Vermont is starved for lack of electricity, predicted months ago that power policy might be as dangerous an issue for the GOP next year as the issue of farm prices. His prediction is already vindicated.

Millions of farm families got the blessings of electricity through the public power and rural electrification programs of the New Deal. They will not tolerate a new federal policy that robs them of their advantages by "selling" federal dams, destroying the preference clause, turning them back to the mercies of private utilities and high rates.

A Question For Jenner

Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark, although rejecting a subpena in the Harry Dexter White case, volunteered to give "careful consideration" to any questions asked him by an appropriate congressional committee.

Clark was Mr. Truman's Attorney General and he obviously has information of importance. But the Jenner committee that let Herbert Brownell and J. Edgar Hoover assail Truman has never submitted questions to Clark. Jenner dropped the issue and skipped to a new controversy with Canada about the onetime Soviet consular agent, Igor Gouzenko.

Is Jenner afraid to submit questions to Clark? Is he fearful that Clark's replies would sustain Mr. Truman loyalty and integrity and undercut the effect of Brownell's assault?

Heywood Broun's Famous Column—

'There Should Be A News Union... At 9 O'clock I'll Help Get One Up'

Fourteen years ago this week, on Dec. 18, 1939, Heywood Broun died. Distinguished newspaperman, fighting liberal, a man who learned from experience, Broun was the founding president of the CIO Newspaper Guild. Here is his famous column on how the Guild was formed at the depth of the depression:

By HEYWOOD BROUN

"YOU MAY HAVE HEARD," writes Reporter Unemployed, "that, although the newspapers are carrying the bulk of NRA publicity, a number of the publishers themselves are planning to cheat NRA re-employment aims.

"The newspaper publishers are toying with the idea of classifying their editorial staffs as 'professional men.' Since NRA regulations do not cover professionals, newspapermen, therefore, would continue in many instances to work all hours of the day and any number of hours of the week.

"The average newspaperman probably works on an eight-hour-day and six-day-week basis. Obviously the publishers, by patting their fathead employes on the head and calling them 'professionals,' hope to maintain this working week scale.

"And they'll succeed, for the men who make up the editorial staffs of the country are peculiarly susceptible to such soothing classifications as 'professionals,' 'journalists,' 'members of the fourth estate,' 'gentlemen of the press' and other terms which have completely entranced them by falsely dignifying and glorifying them and their work.

What They Really Are

"The men who make up the newspapers of this country would never look upon themselves as what they really are—hacks and white-collar slaves. Any attempt to unionize leg, re-write, desk or make-up men would be laughed to death by these editorial hacks themselves. Union? Why, that's all right for dopes like printers, not for smart guys like newspapermen!

"Yes, and those 'dopes,' the printers, because of their union, are getting an average of some 30% better than the smart fourth-estaters. And not only that, but the printers, because of their union and because they won't permit themselves to be called high-faluting names, will now benefit by the new NRA regulations and have a large number of their unemployed re-employed, while the 'smart' editorial department boys will continue to work 48 hours a week because they love to hear themselves referred to as 'professionals' and because they consider unionization as lowering their dignity."

I think Mr. Unemployed's point is well taken. I am not familiar with just what code newspaper publishers have adopted or may be about to adopt. But it will certainly be damaging to the whole NRA movement if the hoopla and the ballyhoo (both very necessary functions) are to be carried on by agencies which have not lived up to the full spirit of the Recovery Act. Any such condition would poison the movement at its very roots.

They Are Like The Weather

I am not saying this from the point of view of self-interest. No matter how short they make the working day, it will still be a good deal longer than the time required to complete this stint. As far as the minimum wage goes, I have been assured by everybody I know that in their opinion all columnists are grossly overpaid. They have almost persuaded me.

HEYWOUD BROUN
"I think I could die happy . . ."

After some four or five years of holding down the easiest job in the world I hate to see other newspapermen working too hard. It makes me feel self-conscious. It embarrasses me even to think of newspapermen who are not working at all.

Among this number are some of the best. I am disposed to talk myself right out of a job, but if my boss does not know that he could get any one of 40 or 50 men to pound out paragraphs at least as zippy and stimulating as these, then he is far less sagacious than I have occasionally assumed.

Fortunately columnists do not get fired very frequently. It has something to do with a certain inertia in most executives. They fall readily into the convenient conception that columnists are something like the weather. They are these and nobody can do anything much about it.

Not A Legree In Lot

All my very many bosses have been editors, and not a single Legree in the lot. Concerning every one of them it was possible to say, "Oh, well, after all he used to be a newspaperman once himself."

But the fact that newspaper editors and owners are genial folk should hardly stand in the way of the organization of a newspaper writers' union. There should be one. Beginning at 9 o'clock on the morning of Oct. 1, I am going to do the best I can to help in getting one up.

I think I could die happy on the opening day of the general strike if I had the privilege of watching Walter Lippmann heave half a brick through a Tribune window at a non-union operative who had been called in to write the current Today and Tomorrow column on the gold standard.

Why Is It A Man Has To Die?

"Why is it that man has to die before an employer becomes interested in safety measures to prevent untoward accident and death on the job?"

That's the question asked by News and Views, Ohio CIO Council newsletter, which continues:

"This is the story of a small manufacturing firm in one of our smaller Ohio industrial communities. In one of the factory rooms were portable grinders, rotary files and hand files.

"All there were kicking up excess accumulations of magnesium, dust which clung to the clother of the workers.

"Yes, what strange irony . . . 1.5 hours after the local union complaint was registered with the division a fire commenced in the shop, presumably from a welding spark, and one of the men was quickly enveloped by flames and because of the presence of magnesium dust in heavy concentration on his clothes, he suffered desperate burns which soon resulted in death.

"Undoubtedly the company will now take preventive measures. But we raise the eternal question—why must men die before action can be obtained?

"Why isn't our Factory and Building Inspection Service given sufficient funds to adequately police Ohio's factories to minimize needless and heedless death and maiming? Why don't we become civilized and put the worth of human life above pennies and dollars?"

Steady Jobs And Steady Pay—UAW E

1000 Join In Big Capital Parley

By FRED ROSS

"THE HECK there's no depression. I'm in it. There are 700 to 800 people out of work at my plant alone."

These were the sentiments of Delno Cole, agricultural implement worker from Des Moines.

He was just one of a score of delegates at the CIO Auto Workers' full employment conference at Washington who called for passage and action on a Keep America at Work program.

The resolution was adopted unanimously by some 1000 delegates representing about 1.3 million UAW members—90% of the union's membership. It called for a comprehensive program of federal and state action to aid the unemployed and to guarantee full employment.

It also called for an international program of economic aid and trade. The resolution also supported a proposal made last April by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther that Pres. Eisenhower call a conference of industry, labor, agriculture, consumers and the government to make plans for full employment and full production.

Ike's Pledge Recalled

(In his letter to Reuther, the President wrote that "I firmly subscribe to the principles of the Full Employment Act," which, he added, "reflects a determination on the part of the American people to see to it that the stupidity of mass unemployment never again visits this land.")

"Let's take the resolution back home and wear it out," Cole continued. "Let's preach not only to our members but to all the people back home.

"I was in the other depression and was raising six kids. I'm just a stump jumper from Missouri and I don't want to eat boiled acorns again."

The UAW Executive Board reported to the conference that unemployment in industries in the union's jurisdiction had increased by 250,000 in the recent months.

Layoffs Going Up

A union survey showed that employment had dropped from a peak of 1,506,160 in civilian and defense work to 1,269,399 in October.

Reuther charged "the seriousness of the unemployment problem in the automobile, agricultural implement, aircraft and supplier industries is obscured by the government figures on overall national employment."

"The figures not only do not take into account the serious problem in specific industries, but, if properly interpreted, show a far more serious overall picture than appears on the surface," he said.

Reuther quoted the November estimate of the Bureau of Census which shows 1,428,000 unemployed, an increase of 266,000 over October.

"Furthermore, the civilian labor force—those employed plus those looking for work—was actually lower by 300,000 in November, 1953, than in November, 1952," he continued. "Had job opportunities been as plentiful this year as they were last November, the labor force would have been about 700,000 higher rather than 300,000 lower.

"In other words, there can be added to the 1,428,000 officially reported as unemployed, another one million who probably would be working or looking for work if the employment situation were better.

"If this 'hidden unemployment' is added to the officially reported unemployment, the total would not be far from 2.5 million."

A Michigan UAW conference will be held at Lansing to press for improved unemployment compensation.

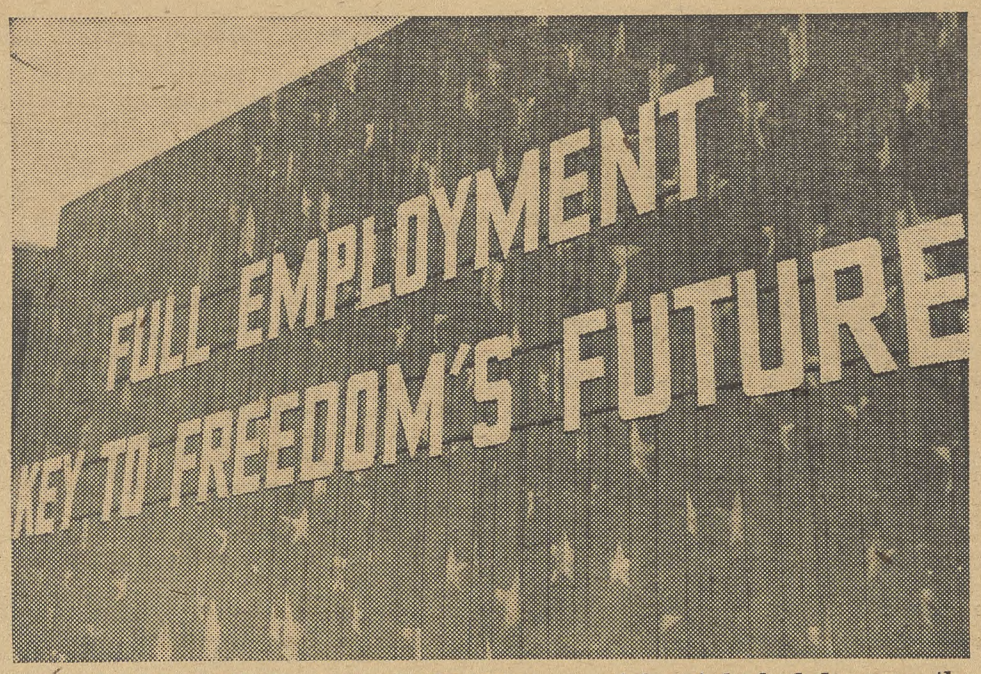
During the discussion, UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey said "we've got a program to sell to the American people that's good for them."

A Big Job To Do

Concluding the discussion, Reuther said that selling the program was like building the UAW—"difficult but not impossible."

He said that if UAW members worked hard at enlisting the support of the American people behind the program, "we can change some faces in Congress in 1954, and in 1956 we can finish the job."

"Millions of little people working together can lift mountains," he said. "If they can lift mountains they can do anything."



FULL EMPLOYMENT CONFERENCE slogan (above) looked down on the 1000 delegates who attended the two-day meeting in Washington. The delegates represented some 1.3 million workers—90% of the union's membership.

The Shape Of Things To Come?

Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther assailed Republican Administration officials who believe a "little bit of depression is a desirable thing."

"That's like a little bit of pregnancy—it won't stop there," he told the Washington conference. "This is the attitude that can make a big depression out of a little recession."

'Little Men Of Big Business' Rappe By Reuther For Predicting Depressio

"THE LITTLE MEN of big business" who say "a depression is the only way" were unmercifully attacked by CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther at the UAW full employment conference.

He quoted a number of business leaders and business publications who supported the inevitable-depression philosophy.

These included Business Week, the New York State Chamber of Commerce convention, Vice Pres. Shields of Manhattan Bank, and the executive vice president of the American Iron & Steel Institute.

"A small, corrective depression is very possible and perhaps even desirable," Shields was quoted as saying in the New York Times of Sept. 23.

A 'Good Thing' For U. S.?

"It would probably be a good thing for the country and for the steel industry if steel operation dropped back to around 80% of production," said the institute official on Dec. 4.

"We say to these little men of big business that we reject the defeatist philosophy that depressions are inevitable," Reuther said.

"We say that they are not inevitable, and we are going to work and fight to see that we don't have another depression in this great country of ours.

"Everybody knows that the little men of big business have taken over the government in Washington.

"It is no secret that the Republicans are hell bent on trying to use the power of government to advance the interests those who have more than they need the expense of the many who have little.

More At The Top

"Frankly we are in trouble because of the people at the top of our econo pyramid have an income greater than 41% at the bottom . . . And yet the Rep licans in power are trying to give the 1 who have 66% of the assets, even more deny the 15 million families who have assets their rightful equity.

"If General Motors gets a $400 mil tax reduction (through expiration of excess profits tax in January), someb will have to pay that. That's why t have got this federal manufacturers ex tax coming up.

"What we ought to do is to maintain excess profits tax plug the loopholes which wealthy corporations and wea families escape their proportionate sh of the tax burden, and raise the leve exemptions for low income families $1000 per person."

Reuther urged the 16 or 17 million U members to call for such a tax progra sending penny post cards to their congr men. He continued:

"Our job is to mobilize the Amer people on the tax front and on these o legislative matters and say to these actionary politicians:

"'Okay, you try it that way and we keep score and will even that score 1954 when the elections come around'."

armers, Labor Lose Together— 0% Are Unemployed In Quad Cities

N UNEMPLOYED farm implement orker from Iowa and a Minnesota rmer last week agreed that they e an uncertain future.

The worker was James Steinbach, stew-d and former vice president of CIO Auto orkers Local 450, at the Des Moines ant of John Deere Co. Like Robert Olson, aseca, Minn., farmer, Steinbach attended e UAW full employment conference.

Conversations with both of them re-ealed that the prosperity of each is de-endent on the prosperity of the other. ince farm purchasing power is down, armers can't buy implements and work-rs are subsequently laid off. It follows hat jobless workers can't buy farm roducts.

rmer Raps Benson

The plight of the unemployed agricul-al workers was brought home to the nference by Dir. Pat Greathouse of the AW Agriculture Implement Div. He said at in "the Detroit" of the industry—e quad city areas of Rock Island and oline in Illinois and Davenport and Bet-ndorf in Iowa—there are 10,000 unem-oyed implement workers out of a total ce of 50,000. The national number of bless in the industry is 40,000, he says.

In a speech to the convention, Olson, o is a local leader in the Farm Bureau, d that Agriculture Sec. Benson "is con-ually filling the metropolitan presses and the air waves selling the American public on the evils of price supports."

He recalled the promise made by Pres. Eisenhower, when a candidate, that he would try to get the farmer 100% parity on his crops.

"I'll bet even money that before 1956 rolls around the Republican high command will claim it was merely an optical illusion at Kasson, Minn. Ike wasn't even there!"

Depression already has struck Steinbach, who one of 500 laid-off out of 1000 employes at the Deere plant.

"You figure it out," Steinbach said. "My weekly unemployment checks of $26 will total $104 a month, out of which I must make a payment of $60 on my home. I have a wife and two children. That leaves $44 for groceries, the light bill and other expenses."

Homecoming

Paul Silver, a delegate from CIO Auto Workers Local 351 in Detroit, told the conference about a farmer who voted for Pres. Eisenhower because he said he would send the farmer's son home from Korea.

"My son is still in Korea," the farmer said, "but Ike sent my other three sons home from the Detroit auto plants."

Mitchell Renews Promise To Seek Minimum Wage, Jobless Pay Boosts

SEC. OF LABOR Mitchell had some good news for delegates to the CIO Auto Workers full employment conference.

They applauded him when he said he "expected" an increase in "both the benefit and the duration of benefits" of unemployment compensation would be recommended to the session of Congress opening next month.

"We are convinced that substantial improvements are needed in the unemployment insurance system to make it a better shield against economic reversals," Mitchell said.

He repeated the promise made at the CIO convention last month that he would seek to have Congress boost and extend the coverage of the minimum wage law. The present minimum is 75c an hour, and the CIO and the UAW want it raised to $1.25. Mitchell did not say how much of an increase he would propose.

Mitchell's minimum wage proposal, first voiced at the recent CIO national convention, quickly drew criticism from Republicans in Congress.

And the Labor Dept. chief's call for improving unemployment benefits drew attention to CIO's long-standing plea for a single, federal jobless benefit program.

Actually, all Mitchell could propose was that Congress recommend improvements to the states, which now separately determine amount and duration of benefits. The only federal control is in setting administrative standards.

Plan For Public Works

He also said the Administration is planning major public works "to be undertaken in the event of a private investment slump."

Leon Keyserling, former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, was critical of the failure of the Eisenhower Administration to come forth with any plans to meet a recession.

"This is no time for the Council of Economic Advisers," he said, "to hide its light under a bushel so that working people and business people can only guess and surmise what plans the government has or whether it has any plans at all."

Other speakers included Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.); Pat Greathouse, director of the union's Agricultural Implement Div.; Leonard Lesser, legal consultant, UAW Socieal Security Dept.; and Clayton Johnson, director of the union's Compensation Dept.

Goals In Summary

"DEPRESSIONS are man-made, and can be avoided by the wise and vigorous action of men."

That was the heart of the Keep America at Work resolution adopted unanimously by the CIO Auto Workers full employment conference. Highlights of the program were:

- Immediate action by Pres. Eisenhower to implement and strengthen the Full Employment Act of 1946.
- Good homes for the American people, including a minimum of two million new homes a year to sell or rent at reasonable prices and rents, low-term mortgages at low interests rates, promotion of low cost, high quality housing.
- Good schools with no discriminatory barriers, based on eight legislative proposals including direct federal aid and grants to states and the use of royalties from off-shore oil development for education.
- An adequate health program which would require federal and state legislation to put in effect the recommendations of former Pres. Truman's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation.
- Modernization of the nation's road system, river valley developments and flood control, ending discrimination in employment, increasing and extending unemployment compensation benefits by the states, raising the minimum wages to $1.25 an hour and extending the coverage of the wage-hour act, extending social security coverage and increasing the monthly payments to $200 a month.

MMON PROBLEM faces James Steinbach, unemployed agriculture im-ment worker (left), and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Olson. Because income of rmers like Olson is falling, implement workers are unemployed.

Jersey CIO Celebrates Election Victories

By MILTON PLUMB

THE SEEDS of good government for all the five million people of New Jersey that were planted by the State CIO Council through political action in last month's elections began to be harvested last week.

Nearly 1000 delegates, representing 400 local unions with 250,000 members, ran up a record registration in Atlantic City for the CIO's 13th State convention. The gathering was described in the press as a "victory celebration," with CIO prestige in the State at its highest point in history.

"In 1938 when we began to organize, the then Gov. Hoffman and Mayor Hague both said that the CIO would never be permitted to organize in New Jersey," Council Pres. Carl Holderman recalled in his keynote address.

"Today, on our 15th anniversary, we are stronger than ever in membership and influence while Mayor Hague and Gov. Hoffman have both passed into political oblivion."

Earlier, Holderman had been offered the post of Commissioner of Labor and Industry in the cabinet of Gov.-elect Robert B. Meyner, chief convention speaker.

Praise For CIO Goals

"I had hoped," Meyner said, "Mr. Holderman might be available to the State but, sincere man that he is, he prefers to continue to devote his services to the labor movement."

Praising the concept of the CIO as voiced by Pres. Walter P. Reuther in his report to the last national convention, Meyner called it "statesmanlike" and said that "we here in New Jersey can do our part in implementing this courageous philosophy." He praised the state CIO-PAC for the "great job" it had done in support of his candidacy.

The delegates heard similar praise from Rep. Howell, chairman of the State Democratic Committee, and Rep. Williams (D. N.J.). The latter's election with Meyner has been credited with having so scared the GOP that it led Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell to make his McCarthy-like attack on former Pres. Truman.

For his action, Brownell was strongly condemned by CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve and CIO-PAC Asst. Dir. Tilford Dudley in other addresses.

Quick Results

One of the first actions of New Jersey CIO convention delegates was adoption of a resolution strongly condemning the present Republican State administration for its delays in paying unemployment conpensation benefits.

A backlog of more than 63,000 compensation claims has piled up as the result of recent layoffs of over 500 unemployment compensation office workers.

A few hours after the convention resolution was adopted, the New Jersey Legislature voted a $500,000 appropriation to speed up processing of unemployment claims.

"When a man can be convicted on the statement of a government official, without proper evidence and without a trial, I say our liberties are in danger," Rieve declared.

Rieve's Warning

Rieve, who is president of the CIO Textile Workers, also blasted FBI Dir. J. Edgar Hoover for his subsequent testimony on Brownell's charges.

Recalling that Hoover had been in charge of the notorious Palmer raids following World War I, when "every socialist, every non-conformist, every trade union leader was considered to be some kind of Bolshevik," he said Hoover had again engaged the FBI in partisan political controversy.

"If we let the chief of police overrule the elected officials of this country, we'll have a new brand of Hooverism that will make us wish we had the old kind back," Rieve declared.

Charging that Hoover had put "the FBI in politics, and politics in the FBI," Dudley said that he was "afraid we've come to the point where we must warn Gov.-elect Meyner that the FBI is now building a file on him. He may have thought that winning the election was difficult, but, brother, his life is just beginning!"

Legislative Setback

Paul Krebs, State PAC chairman, warned against placing too much importance upon the election victories. He pointed out that although CIO-PAC candidates were elected as governor and congressman, other liberal candidates for the Assembly and State Senate failed to win.

"We've got a liberal governor pledged to forwarding the ideals and kind of program we in CIO can support, but because we didn't give him a liberal Legislature he isn't going to be too successful in getting his program through," Krebs predicted.

A Big One

Before the meeting opened, Council officials predicted a "record 600 delegates" would be present. On opening day, the press reported "a record attendance of more than 700."

But the final count of the credentials committee showed that nearly 1000—almost twice the highest previous record—turned out. The official tally was 756 regular delegates, 14 alternates, and 215 fraternal delegates.

Other speakers included CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, Asst. Director of Councils Carl A. McPeak, Rep. Hart (D. N.J.), John C. Yeldell, assistant director of the CIO Community Services Committee, and John Brophy, director of the Free World Service Fund. Michael Mann, director of CIO Region 2, covering New York and New Jersey, called the convention to order.

The delegates voted unanimous continuing support to the strike, now in its third week, of a newly chartered local of the CIO Chemical Workers at the Merck Co.

In his address, Meyner promised to "proceed at once to improve the climate in which labor organizations operate in New Jersey." He called for a modern State labor relations law "patterned after the underlying principles of the Wagner Act."

Terming the Public Utilities Disputes Act "a positive menace to good industrial relations," he said its provisions for compulsory arbitration "operate to vitiate collective bargaining and, therefore, to destroy the democratic give and take around the conference table that brings about a meeting of minds."

Asks Higher Benefits

Meyner also called for increased benefits for workmen's compensation, unemployment compensation and temporary disability insurance. He said the present $30 maximum is "a complete anachronism and entirely unrealistic" and that soaring living costs make action imperative.

Further revision of the state's labor laws, he added, should include revision of the "prehistoric" minimum wage law, providing for a 40-hour work week, higher rates, time and a half for overtime, and coverage for both men and women.

All elections of Council officers were without contest. The convention, in addition to re-electing Pres. Carl Holderman, Sec.-Treas. Victor D. Leonardis and two vice presidents, named six new vice presidents to guide the organization during the next two years.

Enforcement Of Wage-Hour Law Hit By Labor Dept. Staff Resignations

THE LABOR DEPT. has lost another of its top lawyers as pressure continued to get men into top staff spots in the Solicitor's office whose views coincide with the Eisenhower Administration.

Assistant Solicitor Donald M. Murtha is the latest to go. He announced he is opening a Washington office for private practice. A few weeks earlier it was Assistant Solicitor Charles Donahue, who had been chief of the department's legislative division.

Murtha was in charge of the Opinions Section of the solicitor's office for the last several years. Out of his unit came the interpretations which guided the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Div. inspectors in enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards and Walsh-Healey Acts.

Murtha, like Donahue, had been in the Labor Dept. legal battery for more than a dozen years. His first post with the Wage and Hour Div. was as regional attorney at Minneapolis, where he handled the legal side of the enforcement of the Wage and Hour Law against paper companies which had been exploiting hundreds of families in the Northern Minnesota woods.

Everyone from the small children up in these families worked at felling, piling and peeling the pulp logs. The families lived in tar-paper shacks and the pay was on a piecework basis. The pay was far below the 25c-an-hour legal limit then in effect.

Murtha took the case to the U. S. District Court, and had the company fined $10,000 for its child labor violation.

For the Labor Dept. to lose the services of these experts in the legislative history and the court interpretation of these laws is a real loss to working men and women who must look to vigorous enforcement of these statutes for protection.

Further attacks on these protective laws may be made more subtly through "interpretations" and guidance to enforcement inspectors for a "more reasonable" approach than the interpretations which had spread the protection and benefits of the law under court decisions to many thousands of workers needing this protection. (LPA)

AVC Convention Call For More Liberal Labor Laws

A PROGRAM calling for more liberal labor laws, including amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act to remove "provisions which impede labor's progress," was adopted by the American Veterans Committee at its seventh national convention in Atlantic City.

Some 300 delegates representing 135 chapters also demanded an increase in the federal minimum wage to at least $1 an hour; rebuilding the Labor Dept. into an "effective" agency to represent the labor viewpoint in government and effectively to enforce protective labor laws; greater uniformity and higher benefits under unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation laws, and federal legislation to retrain and place workers from obsolescent industries and those displaced as a result of tariff changes.

The convention opposed "anti-intellectual and hysterical efforts to suppress criticism, dissent, private opinion and the freedom to read and think," and called for a "national awakening to the harmful effects caused by use of smear techniques based on innuendo, hearsay, unfounded accusations and outright lies."

"These techniques were or are the stock in trade of Goebbels, Stalin and McCarthy," the resolution said.

Bill Mauldin, cartoonist who created "Willie and Joe" as characteristic U. S. soldiers during World War II, was elected national chairman.

Morse Urges U. S. Use Surplus Foods To Win Friends Abroad

By ED LASHMAN

RHODE ISLAND CIO members heard Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore). describe surplus food production as "an asset, not a liability," and make a plea for an "economic foreign policy based on international barter agreements."

Morse suggested the U. S. should trade its surplus food for "economic opportunities for investments in the backward areas of the world." He said the people in these countries "want a better way of life, and they're going to get it."

The Oregonian pointed out that the largest share of the world's population increase is in the under-developed countries, and said, "I want them on the side of freedom."

THE SUGGESTION for utilizing food surpluses in ways to help build America's economy came after an indictment of Pres. Eisenhower's promise to present "a progressive program to enhance the general welfare" to the next session of Congress.

The Senator called this a "repetition of the double-talking platitudes the General has repeated ever since he became a candidate." He charged that much of the Republicans' program "cannot be reconciled with the general welfare."

Morse defended the congressional right to conduct investigations, but said the "Independent Party's answer to McCarthyism" and other "abuse of congressional investigating powers" is the Morse Bill, which provides procedural safeguards that keep committees from abusing the rights of witnesses.

RHODE ISLAND'S Sen. Pastore (D.) called for free trade as essential to the world's economy. He pointed out that "less than 1% of American production is competitive with imported goods."

Pastore urged "federalization of unemployment compensation" as necessary to protect workers "dislocated" by competitive imports.

Gov. Dennis J. Roberts praised the Rhode Island CIO Council for its fight against a rate increase for natural gas, now being urged before the State Utilities Commission. The Council's attorney, Jules Michelson, is heading the battle.

The Governor also urged CIO cooperation in helping the state diversify its industry.

Heading the list of CIO speakers was Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, who told the delegates the way to keep depression from the door is to organize the unorganized.

"With strong unions to win us the money to buy the products we're producing, there'll be no depression," Riffe said.

He urged every member to work to build his union "so that the unorganized will look at your union and say, 'That's the kind of union I'm hungry for.'"

CIO Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve lashed out at the "slander" against former Pres. Truman by Atty. Gen. Brownell, and attacked the "partisan role" of FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover as "a new kind of Hooverism that will make us wish we had the old kind back again."

ALEX BAIL, president of the CIO Jewelry Workers, told the convention that PJNW will soon begin a campaign to organize the 20,000 unorganized jewelry workers in Providence "with the full support of the CIO in both resources and manpower."

Martin J. Walsh, CIO Steelworkers New England district director, asked the Council for financial support for the 16-week-old strike at Nicholson File Co. in Providence.

"You are fighting for a state minimum wage of $1," he said, "but if Nicholson File has its way, $1 will be the maximum wage in Rhode Island."

At Home

CIO Council conventions in Rhode Island have been meeting at the Narragansett Hotel in Providence for some time, but delegates really felt at home this year when Council Pres. Frank Benti told them the Narragansett is now a CIO hotel.

The hotel's staff was organized during the past year into the Hotel, Restaurant and Culinary Employes Local 730 during the past year. The local is affiliated with the CIO-Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union.

Maryland CIO Reports Council Strength At Peak

THE STRENGTH of the Maryland CIO Council is at an all-time peak, Pres. Audrey M. Smid reported to the 15th annual convention last week in Cumberland.

Mrs. Smid—a member of the Communications Workers, and only woman president of a state CIO council — reported the Maryland unit has tripled its financial resources in the past year, while affiliated Council membership set a new record.

Some 200 delegates considered, debated and passed more than two-score resolutions on a variety of national and state issues and setting forth policy for a year of increased activity.

THE PRESIDENT'S report praised the Council's membership for being united "in the cause of good unionism and good government," and facing up to the "obligations and responsibilities" Council members have as "a respected segment of Maryland society."

Topping the list of accomplishments, Mrs. Smid's report said, was "the reputation we established for ourselves" during the last legislative session.

Sec.-Treas. Charles Della was credited with a "phenomenal" job of representing CIO's and the public's interests during the session.

Mrs. Smid's report called for a stronger and more effective political action program, and emphasized the urgency of "100% participation" in raising PAC dollars for the 1954 elections.

R. J. THOMAS, assistant CIO director of organization, told the convention the "way to whip communism is to organize workers all over the world into strong, free, democratic trade unions."

Thomas warned of "danger signs on the economic horizon" in this country, and charged that "nobody is doing any planning" to prevent a depression. "When the farmers begin to suffer," he said, "you can bet industrial workers will be next."

Other speakers included Cumberland Mayor Roy W. Eves, State Sen. Robert B. Kimble, John L. Estes of the Maryland Employment Security Board, and Henry Goldstein, executive director of the Histadrut Campaign Drive for Israel.

Mrs. Smid was re-elected president in a contest with Robert Martin, of the CIO Auto Workers in Hagerstown. Della, of the CIO Steelworkers in Baltimore, was re-elected secretary-treasurer in a contest with Charles Nelson, also USA-CIO. Baltimore.

Unanimous

Most popular resolution at the Maryland CIO convention was one hitting out at high rates of federal excise taxation on distilled spirits and beer.

"Prohibition by taxation" was the resolution's phrase as it noted these taxes "have proved to be a protective tariff for the moonshiner and the bootlegger."

Serious concern was voiced about lay-offs and short-time in Maryland's huge distilling and brewing industry, much of which is CIO-organized.

But the thirsty delegates shouted their approval of the resolution calling upon Congress to reduce beer, wine and whiskey taxes to the pre-war level.

Struck Rice Brands Named

THE CIO Brewery Workers has called attention to the brand names of rice produced by the Arkansas Rice Growers Cooperative Association and the Wonder Rice Mills, Inc., Stuttgart, Ark., where 200 employes have been on strike for two months to win their first union contract.

Both employers are fighting the union bitterly and are operating with scab labor. The cooperative produces rice sold under the following brands: Riceland, Green Shield, Perfection, Monogram, Lotus, Sultana, Sunnyfield, Tohoco, Tropical, Gold Coast, Good Treat, Osceola, Oversea and Chico.

UGCCW Heard On Lab Closing

A subcommittee of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy heard protests of the CIO Chemical Workers against "virtual abandonment" of the Atomic Energy Commission's Mound Laboratory, Miamisburg, O., in closed door sessions at the laboratory last week.

The subcommittee was composed of Sen. Bricker (R. O.), chairman, and Rep. Price (D. Ill.).

Rent Curbs, Consumer Unit Urged By Rhode Island CIO

A STATE rent control act and the creation of a "consumers' council to protect consumers from exorbitant prices on all necessities of life" topped the list of legislative proposals urged by the Rhode Island CIO Council.

Improvements in workmen's compensation and unemployment security laws were sought in a pair of resolutions. They called for higher benefits in a number of categories and elimination of provisions causing delays in processing cases. Creation of a state fund, instead of the present system of private insurance, was also urged for workmen's compensation.

State employes, who are members of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, were the subject of a number of resolutions dealing with wage increases, retirement programs, dues checkoff and job security.

One key convention resolution voiced strong defense of former Pres. Truman against the "vicious and ill-conceived accusations" that he was "soft on communism." The resolution said the attack "was not on Harry Truman alone. It is a dangerous and un-American attack on the fundamental principles of American constitutional government."

The delegates, representing 40,000 CIO members in Rhode Island, voiced their "condemnation and concern" of "the Brownell speech, the Velde-McCarthy-Jenner circus tactics and the lack of affirmative White House leadership," which the resolution called "a disgraceful chapter in American history and a dangerous precedent for the future."

Riffe Heads CIO Group At Mexico Farm Labor Meet

THE FIRST international conference between the CIO, AFL and the Confederation of Workers (CTM), Mexico's most important labor organization, will be held in Mexico City Dec. 14-16.

CIO's delegation will be headed by Executive Vice-Pres. John V. Riffe, and will also include two CIO vice presidents, Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers and Vice Pres. James Thimmes of the Steelworkers.

Other delegates are R. J. Thomas, assistant to the executive vice-president; Ernst Schwarz, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee; Milton Murray, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Government Employees: John Edelman, legislative representative of the CIO Textile Workers; and Irwin DeShetler, Robert Starnes, Timothy Flynn, David Sternback, and Nicholas Dragon of the CIO Organizational Dept. staff.

Although both CIO and AFL have previously met separately with the CTM, this meeting, which has been called by the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), will mark the first time that the three organizations have met to draw up a program of cooperation on common international problems.

The subject of Mexican "wetbacks" and the use of Mexican farmhands in U. S. agriculture will be a major topic of discussion. The conference will also consider for the first time in detail the development of a program for joint action on matters of industrial relations affecting workers in identical industries in the U. S. and Mexico.

Pennsy Opens Holiday Season With Layoffs Periling 7000

THE PENNSYLVANIA Railroad, at the height of the most profitable year in its history, has launched a campaign of layoffs that may find 7000 employes celebrating Christmas by looking for new jobs.

"The company says it is cutting back because carloadings dropped off in November and it fears a recession tailspin," Chairman John Green of the CIO Railroad Workers reported after a conference with officials of the carrier in Philadelphia.

"I cannot accept this gloomy prophecy."

Most of the layoffs are coming in the maintenance department. The company has already shut down its steel car shop at Enola, Pa., throwing 475 men on the streets; several hundred others have been furloughed at the Altoona, Pa., shops and at other construction, repair and maintenance locations—all since Nov. 30.

The Philadelphia meeting was sought by the union to protest the layoffs and try to win reinstatements for those already jobless. The railroad flatly refused to take the plight of its employes into consideration, Green said later. Its spokesmen described the layoffs as a "management prerogative it is handling as it sees fit," he said.

THE UNION quoted a company spokesman as saying "it costs too much to make a buck servicing the traveling public, and we would rather discourage passenger trade."

"Obviously, the company's interest is solely concerned with increasing its margin of profit," a union statement said, "rather than its obligations to employes and the public that makes these profits possible."

The company turned down a union-suggested "share the work" program, Green said, and predicted further layoffs in the next three months.

The PRR recently announced that profits after taxes and all other charges for the first 10 months of 1953 were $31.4 million, $7.9 million more than last year and the highest in history.

CIO Protests Atom Grab By 'Monopolists'

STRONG opposition of the CIO to giving atomic facilities, patents and further operations to "the large, privately-owned monopolistic corporations" was voiced at the Mid-Century Conference on Resources for the Future.

The CIO position, as expressed by Anthony W. Smith, secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development & Conservation, was unpopular with the conservative and business spokesmen who were in the majority at the Washington conference.

It was supported, however, by the claim of Atomic Energy Commissioner Thomas E. Murray that private industry is unwilling to spend the vast sums necessary for development of atomic energy for peacetime uses.

IN A STATEMENT read into the record to assure that the CIO position was clear despite the opposition of most delegates to the conference, Smith declared there was "no reason why the principle of public initiative should be abandoned at this time."

"We have come to the conclusion that public ownership in this field is not enough," he said. "Several years ago we took convention action calling for public operation, and not merely public ownership. We concluded that the farming out of operation by the government to the big corporations was undesirable. The government itself, we were satisfied, could do a better job."

The conference discussed a wide range of subjects dealing with natural resources and their future. The CIO and the American Public Power Association joined forces to prevent the panel on electric power from being turned into a field day for the private utilities.

URW Praises Housing Leader

The CIO Rubber Workers lauded Public Housing Commissioner Charles E. Slusser, former Republican mayor of Akron, O., for the "high degree of responsibility" he displayed in a recent speech condemning slums and citing the advantages of low-cost public housing.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster and Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs of the URW-CIO, in a letter to Slusser, offered the union's aid in his campaign "to awaken the general public to the necessity for an adequate public housing program."

Labor's World—

OWIU Leads Planning For World Petroleum Group

THE FOUNDING meeting of the Intl. Federation of Petroleum Workers will be held in Paris beginning Apr. 5 with the CIO Oil Workers playing a major role. The new world-wide free union organization will include workers engaged in oil drilling, production, pipeline operations, refining, and petrochemical and natural gas operations.

Announcement of the founding convention was made by Loyd A. Haskins, OWIU-CIO staff representative who was named temporary secretary when a preliminary organization was set up last summer by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and Andre Miffre, representative of the French Force Ouvriere, who has been aiding with preliminary work at OWIU-CIO headquarters in Denver.

About 35 delegates from unions in 12 countries are expected to attend the Paris meeting. One of the new body's first tasks, Haskins said, will be the organization of 150,000 underpaid workers in the Middle East.

The new body will be an addition to the international trade secretariats, which have done much to bolster the work of the ICFTU and to bring workers in the same industries in different countries closer to each other.

Nicaragua

The Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) has opened a membership drive among democratic labor unions in Nicaragua with rallies at Managua and Granada addressed by Assistant Sec. Serafino Romualdi. Communists and Peronists in control of the General Confederation of Labor tried in vain to disrupt the meetings.

ILO

The Governing Body of the Intl. Labor organization, meeting in Geneva, voted to ask governments which have not ratified the four ILO conventions, or treaties, dealing with forced labor and native labor to act speedily; to consider application of the conventions without modification to their non-metropolitan territories; to consider revising the 1930 convention so as to make it provide for the complete suppression of forced labor.

Norway

The national committee of the Norwegian Federation of Trade Unions (NFTU), after evaluating the economic situation in that country, recommended that unions not seek a general revision of wage agreements during 1954.

The committee took the position that changes since January 1953 have not been great enough to justify cancellation of current agreements with a view to seek a general wage increase. However, it recommended that attention be made to eliminating wage inequities for certain job classifications, and that improvements in fringe benefits be sought where justified.

East Of Eden

Life in that workers' paradise, Soviet Russia, is going to get better and better if forecasts of Red economists are carried out.

By 1955—the year after next—the Russians will have built 330,000 refrigerators for their people, or one for every 600. There also will be half a million nice new vacuum cleaners or one for every 400 homes. Likewise, 200,000 streamlined baby carriages for a nation increasing at the rate of five million infants a year—or a load of 25 babies for each carriage.

Reuther On TV Program Dec. 18

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will be interviewed by Edward R. Murrow, one of the nation's leading radio-television newsmen, on his CBS-TV program "Person to Person." The program will be aired at 10:30 p.m. EST, Friday, Dec. 18, on CBS television stations.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius For LPA

A COW is not only too much trouble in Los Angeles, but it's also too much trouble for an urban workingman. Otherwise, you might see a lot of them tethered in the backyards of moderate-income neighborhoods these days.

For the high price of milk in many cities has been a rough deal for families already harassed by rising costs of rents, fuel and other necessities.

Gored

Again consumers find that the U. S. Agriculture Dept. gored its own bull, but unfortunately, ours too.

One of the first actions of Agriculture Sec. Benson was to remove compulsory federal grading of meat. The meat industry no longer had to designate meat according to whether it was Prime, Choice, Good or Commercial grade.

Recently the Agriculture Dept. had to make a survey of beef prices, and found that because of lack of compulsory grading, it couldn't tell what grades various stores were offering.

"Some of the advertisements were of a nature to make impossible a comparison of prices between the different U. S. grades of beef offered to the consumer," complained the Agriculture Dept. If its experts can't tell the quality, how can a non-expert housewife without standard grade labels?

A family of four needs about 20 quarts of milk a week, or its equivalent in other milk products. Youngsters need a quart a day, and adults need a pint a day and make a sad mistake if they don't get it.

But at the 25c a quart typical in many areas, the family's bill for milk alone would be $5 a week. The average industrial worker earns about $70 a week at this writing and is generally considered to spend about a third of his money for food—about $24 a week for a family of four. A bill of $5 thus chops a whopping bite of 22% out of the food budget for milk alone.

Naturally the family tries to skimp somewhere. But milk should be the last place to skimp. Even at 25c it's still a comparatively good buy in food value. A quart of milk for 25c costs only 40% of the price of a pound of beef chuck at 59c, but supplies about two-thirds as much food value in terms of calories.

Milk is important for adults too. One of the most serious nutritional deficiencies found among adult American women is a lack of calcium. Milk products are the chief source of calcium. Milk also gives us high-quality protein and many other vitamins and minerals.

There is a way a moderate-income family can get all the nutrition of milk it needs. You don't have to cut down. You can supplement your normal purchase of whole milk with other milk products.

The New York State Extension Service has worked out this formula showing how a family can buy the equivalent of 21 quarts of milk—the equivalent of $5.25 worth of milk at 25c a quart—for only $3.48.

	Cost	Whole Milk in Qts.
8 qts whole milk at 25c	$2.00	8
2 lbs. non-fat dry milk at 33c	.66	8
1 lb. cheddar cheese	.59	3.2
1 14.5-oz. can evaporated milk	.19	.86
	$3.44	21.06 qts.

Santa FPC Stuffs Utilities' Stocking With Your $3 Billion

DON'T LOOK now, but you're giving the privately-owned public utilities a $3 billion dollar Christmas present.

It's a little early, of course, but the Federal Power Commission was kind enough to take care of all the so—(hm'm, almost wrote "sordid") details for you.

It has just ruled, by 4 to 1 majority, that utilities receiving hypoed tax amortization certificates need not pass on the benefits to the customers by lower rates, nor to stockholders as dividends.

The certificates permit the holders to amortize the cost of new construction or improvements in five years instead of much longer terms at vast tax savings.

The beneficiaries, of course, are the same utilities that scream so loudly about "socialism" everytime the government does something for the public at large.

The National Rural Electric Cooperative Association charged that the FPC ruling gives the utilities the use of several billion dollars for up to 33 years without paying any interest. At hearings, the FPC was told that the tax savings amount to an extra gift on top of their "fair return," and that they really should go to the customers in the form of lower rates.

The commission majority, however, took the stand that Congress didn't intend to make cash donations to utility patrons or stockholders, and that the savings should be salted away to pay future income taxes.

It isn't as if the utilities need the money you're giving them. Reports for fiscal years ending Oct. 31 show a healthy increase in net profits over 1952. American Gas & Electric, for instance, soared from $26.4 million to $30.6 million; Consumers Power from $19.9 million to $23.9 million; Illinois Bell, from $21.2 million to $25.6 million.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

IMMEDIATELY AFTER my visit with the New Jersey CIO Council, I had the opportunity to spend some time with the people of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Councils. Their state conventions, I am happy to report, were as stimulating as that of New Jersey.

In Boston I attended a memorable luncheon. Pres. J. William Belanger, of the Council, and CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson had arranged a luncheon for the various regional directors and staff people from all international unions in the state.

We used the occasion to discuss the problem of the 20,000 CIO workers at the General Electric plant at Lynn, Mass. These workers have been under constant attack by the Communist-dominated UE. The attacks have gone on over a long period of years, and the once powerful local has been reduced to poverty in its fight for decent American trade unionism.

One after the other, the leaders of our internationals in Massachusetts pledged their support and assigned their staffs to the cause of the Lynn workers. It was the old CIO spirit, and it was a good thing to be there and watch it flare up. We came out of that spirit. It's something we've got to keep fresh and alive.

THE GOOD PEOPLE of Rhode Island have probably suffered through enough jokes about the tiny size of their state, and I don't wish to add to the list. But if Rhode Island is the smallest state in land size, it's up there with Texas in the bigness of its trade union spirit.

Under the able leadership of Frank Benti, the State CIO Council is outlining a striking program of genuine political and legislative action. I was equally impressed by the determination of delegates from international unions and locals, who appear to cooperate willingly and forcefully to carry our council policies.

At both conventions, a principal speaker was Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.). Morse roused both conventions to a realization of the grave problems that face us.

At these meetings, I was accompanied by Carl McPeak, assistant director of councils. We are in complete agreement that the closest possible working relationships must be maintained with the councils. As their conventions produce new and expanded porgrams, it is obvious that only the highest degree of coordination and cooperation will open the way to full accomplishment of our goals.

On the organizational front, the CIO Textile Workers report a victory at Scandinavia Belting Co., in Charlotte, N. C. CIO's Irwin DeShelter reports a victory at the Garin Co., Brentwood, Calif., with CIO Rep. James Spangler in charge, assisted by Local 78 Representatives McGraw, Parker and Dismond. CIO Lithographers Regional Dir. Frank Bender reports a victory at Craftsmen Press, Baltimore, Md.

A SPECIAL REPORT: As this paper was going to press we learned of the great CIO victory for the workers at the GE plant in Lynn, Mass. This is the same situation we mentioned above, in our report of the Boston convention. This should be a final blow to the Communist-dominated UE. IUE-CIO can take pride in its effort. The entire nation owes thanks to the gallant men and women of this union who have done so much to throw out the Communists, and bring back decent American trade unionism.

PAC Drive To Elect Liberals Set At Bay State CIO Parley

By GERARD KABLE

A POLITICAL action program aimed at replacing advocates of reaction with liberals in Congress and the Legislature was urged on delegates to the 15th annual convention of the Massachusetts CIO Council in Boston.

The theme of the convention was the need for organized labor to help halt the spread of reaction by raising its voice in legislative halls.

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) challenged Pres. Eisenhower to reconcile his concern for the welfare of the people, voiced at his press conference, with the actions of his cabinet and the "give-away, take-away" program of Republican congressional leaders.

"The time has come," he said, "for the workers, consumers and farmers of America to call the bluff of the President of the United States."

He urged the defeat of Sen. Saltonstall (R. Mass.) next year, and called for the election of a Democratic Congress.

FORMER GOV. Paul A. Dever, a convention banquet speaker, detailed the shortcomings of the Republican state administration and also asked support for Democrats in 1954.

Pres. Emil Rieve, of the CIO Textile Workers, charged the "best brains" of the Eisenhower Administration with responsibility for increased unemployment, layoffs and cutbacks.

"The 'best brains' have been so busy worrying about the welfare of big business, increasing interest rates and giving away our natural resources," he said, "that they have forgotten about the people who make our system work —the customers.

"The big businessmen, in and out of Washington, have forgotten they cannot get along by taking in each other's washing. They need us organized workers, the unorganized workers, white collar workers, professionals and small businessmen. Unless we buy, unless we consume, unless we have confidence, the whole economy breaks down."

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, also president of the CIO Electrical Workers, asked for aid in completely ridding the Lynn, Mass., plant of the General Electric Co. of the the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers.

Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.), joined in the plea and urged the Massachusetts labor movement to finish the job of ousting the last Red stooge.

Victor G. Reuther, administrative assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and until recently CIO representative in Europe, asked that the Administration name "a man in overalls as roving ambassador to show the enemies of America that we practice the kind of democracy about which we speak."

OTHER SPEAKERS included CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe; Robert G. Oliver, assistant to the CIO president; Archbishop Richard J. Cushing of Boston; Antonio England, state director of employment security; Reg. Dir. Joseph A. Salerno of the CIO Clothing Workers; Leo Perlis, national director of the CIO Community Services, and Esther Murray, of the CIO Political Action Committee.

J. William Belanger was re-elected to his sixth term as council president by a margin of nearly 3 to 1. Salvatore Camelio was again chosen secretary-treasurer without opposition.

NLRB Widens Loophole For Employer Intimidation

THE INCH the Taft-Hartley Act gave employers on what constitutes a threat to a worker's job during a dispute with a union has been breached into a mile by the National Labor Relations Board.

The board, safe in the hands of the Republicans, used the tweedledum-tweedledee approach to labor-management relations in its latest decision strengthening the employer's hand against unionization.

Basically, the board decided that if a boss actually says he will move his plant if the union wins an election, he's still guilty of an unfair labor practice under T-H. But if he only makes a "prophecy" of what "might" happen should the union win, he's within his rights—and the board's concept of what constitutes a "prophecy" is exceedingly broad.

The case on which the decision was based grew out of a CIO Textile Workers' campaign for bargaining rights at the Bensenville, Ill., plant of the Chicopee Manufacturing Co.

The union said the plant engineer told an employe that "if the union wins, they (the company) will be forced to move the plant." A foreman told another employe "the boss can move the plant if he wants to," a strong hint, in the union's eyes that he'd do just that if the union won.

The TWUA lost the election and asked the NLRB to set aside the result on the ground that the employes had been coerced through threats to their jobs. Hearing Officer Hubert J. Segal, of the NLRB Chicago office, agreed and recommended a new election. The board reversed him.

"WE VIEW these statements," the NLRB said, "under the circumstances, as nothing more than predictions of the possible impact of wage demands upon the employer's business.

"A prophecy that unionization might ultimately lead to loss of employment is not coercive where there is no threat that the employer will use his economic power to make the prophecy come true."

Press Strike Ends In N.Y.; CIO Protests

THE STRIKE of AFL Photo-Engravers, which closed six major New York daily newspapers ended last week, after CIO had protested against the "lockout" tactics of the Herald Tribune.

Settlement came on the 11th day of the shutdown, on the basis of a $3.75 weekly wage boost package and submission of unresolved contract issues to a fact-finding board. The Engravers' picket lines were respected by some 20,000 newspaper workers, including members of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg earlier called for a Justice Dept. anti-trust investigation of the Herald Tribune. That paper—not struck—suspended publication for five days, later resumed a few days before the tieup ended.

Goldberg likened the suspension to "a sympathetic strike or secondary boycott"—for which labor is penalized under Taft-Hartley. He said the failure of the U. S. press or "pro-Taft-Hartley government officials" to criticize the action is a case of a "double standard" in labor relations.

GCEOC Forms Postal Council, Asks Pay Boost

FORMATION of a national council of postal employes within the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee was completed at a meeting in Washington last week which also called for an $800 a year pay boost, plus a cost-of-living increase, for all post office workers.

John D. Bercury, president of the committee's Post Office local in Boston, was elected executive secretary. The council will meet at least semi-annually and will gather again in Washington early next year, when Congress is considering bills dealing with postal workers.

A legislative program in which the wage increases are a highlight was drawn up at the meeting. It included endorsement of the postal pay increase bill sponsored by Rep. St. George (R. N. Y.), with the $800 figure substituted for her $400, and approval of the bill introduced by Rep. Rhodes (D. Pa.) providing for recognition of representatives of government employes' unions for bargaining and other legitimate union purposes.

THE MEETING in addition asked time and a half for all work done on the sixth and seventh consecutive days of one week; elimination of the substitute worker category, or promotion of substitutes to regular posts after one year; repeal of the Whitten rider blocking the accumulation of leave, and intra-department examinations for custodial workers and mail handlers for promotion to clerk or carriers jobs.

Milton Murray, GCEOC-CIO secretary-treasurer, presided. Asistant Dir. John Yancey also spoke.

Correction On T-H Oath Report

The CIO News of Nov. 2 reported that four local union officers have been indicted on charge of filing false non-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The story listed, among the four, "Olga Zenchuk, Local 69, CIO Packinghouse Workers, Detroit."

The national office of the CIO Packinghouse Workers reports that Olga Zenchuk "has not been a member of this local for the past three years."

Light Of Hope Brightens In Port Arthur

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

THE LIGHT of hope, as bright as the gleam of Bethlehem's Star, is shining over Port Arthur, Tex., where several hundred CIO members are on strike.

Cracks in the once-solid opposition to organization of stores, hotels, restaurants and drive-ins made their appearance last week. Negotiations for some of the 23 strike-bound places are under way. A new surge of confidence quickened the steps of pickets patrolling beneath holiday decorations in this city near the Gulf of Mexico.

Pickets Encouraged

Steel-helmeted members of the CIO Oil Workers, fresh from their shifts in Port Arthur's giant refineries, spoke words of encouragement to the pickets as they and their wives did their Christmas shopping in stores not on strike.

At each picket line there was a gaily-decorated box for contributions to the strikers' Christmas fund. Into these boxes change clinked more merrily than it did into nearly empty cash registers of some of the picketed stores.

"You could fire a rifle down the aisles of Woolworth's or Grant's almost any time of day and not hit a customer," triumphed one burly oil worker.

The morale of the strikers runs high. Their strike, begun by the Distributive Workers, and now directed by National CIO, is on the high road to victory.

The membership is chartered as CIO Sabine Area Local Industrial Union 1814 and every vestige of connection with the former organization is gone. It became necessary for CIO to take over direction of the strike when pressure on state officials led to an investigation of "communism in Texas unions."

OWIU Helps

CIO Oil Workers in the Texas Gulf area have been the staunchest friends of the striking LIU 1814 members at Port Arthur.

Local 23, OWIU-CIO, in Port Arthur, presented the strike fund with a $1000 check. Help was also pledged by locals in Beaumont and Port Neches. Plans are under way for a Christmas collection.

An old state commission, long dormant, was reactivated to hear tales of Communist domination of unions expelled several years ago from CIO. To thoughtful people of the Lone Star State it became apparent that unionism—not communism—was standing trial and that organization in Port Arthur touched off the wave of hysteria.

Texas Atty. Gen. John Ben Shepperd paraded a string of ex-Communists before the commission. For days the issue crowded important news off the front page of every Texas paper.

Fred C. Pieper, assistant to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, demanded and was given an opportunity to testify before the commission at Austin, the state capital. After more than two hours of testimony by Pieper and cross-examination, the commission reluctantly admitted there was no evidence that Communists influence a single CIO or AFL union in Texas.

Local In Compliance

The National Labor Relations Board certified the new LIU as being in compliance. A dozen or so of the struck places responded by filing a suit demanding damages from the union. A deputy sheriff arrived at strike headquarters, a former Maritime Union hall, to serve the legal citations (photo on Page 1).

Smilingly he unloaded his armful of documents before the Christmas tree (donated by a local service club) and then paused gratefully for a cup of coffee at the strikers' canteen. If the suit was intended to crush the spirit of the strikers, it failed lamentably.

Several firms have either signed contracts with LIU 1814 or agreed to consent elections. Organization goes on despite the strike, with new groups of workers joining the union almost daily.

Each new agreement signed, each new group of workers who join the union, brings new confidence to the CIO members in Port Arthur.

Wise in their own generation, they are following a star at this holiday season—the star of unionism to lead them to a better and happier city and nation.

UAW Urges Inquiry On Plane Strike

A REQUEST for an investigation of the seven-weeks strike at North American Aviation, Inc., has been filed with the Senate Armed Services Committee by the CIO Auto Workers.

The probe of the walkout that sent some 30,000 UAW members to picket lines at North American plants in Los Angeles and Fresno, Cal., and Columbus, O., was asked in telegrams to the 15 members of the committee from Walter P. Reuther, president of the union and of the CIO, and UAW Vice Pres. John W. Livingston.

In the wire the union charged the company with "spending fabulous amounts of taxpayers' money in an intensive campaign to break this strike and to destroy our union." In addition, it accused the firm of unwillingness to negotiate, mediate or arbitrate.

The union also called the committee's attention to the fact that where the Defense Dept. last year was greatly interested in negotiations, this year it said it has "no interest." The company makes Sabre and Super-Sabre jet planes.

The wires were sent after the union, in negotiations at Los Angeles, drastically modified its demands. The original request for a pay increase of 26c an hour was cut to 10c across the board and an additional 10c for skilled employes, and other proposals were modified.

Gold Miners Stick On The Icy Picket Lines

GOLD MINERS in Northern Ontario and Quebec were still trudging their icy picket lines last week as their employers, representing Canada's most powerful financial interests, showed they have no intention of reaching a settlement on any terms except their own.

The mine operators sent spokesmen without power to act to a conference with the CIO Steelworkers called by Premier Frost and Labor Minister Daley of Ontario. Because of subsidies under the national Gold Mine Emergency Assistance Act, they know they can make a profit whether or not their diggings are working.

However out of the meeting came a government-sponsored proposal for a settlement at the important Hollinger Mine in Timmins.

The provincial authorities proposed a return to work on a pay increase of 5c an hour, negotiations for a further raise if the price of gold goes up, a one-year contract with no discrimination against the strikers, and a study of the economics of the industry and its employes by a government-named fact finding commission.

The USA-CIO announced that while the proposal does not meet the needs of the its members, it will be presented to the strikers if the employer accepts it. The company has not yet acted.

Typical of the profit to be found in a closed mine is Noranda Mines, Ltd., whose president, J. Y. Murdoch, a major power in Canadian financial circles, has demonstrated his inability to think of his employes as human beings.

In the first nine months of 1953—the strike began in August — Noranda earned a net profit of $9.4 million, or $4.20 a share, compared to $8.9 million, or $3.99 a share during the same period last year. The increased profits, Murdoch said, reflect lower operating costs growing out of the strike.

Dominion Minister of Mines George Prudham recently told Parliament that in the last five years, Canada has paid out $51 million to subsidize gold mining.

The rate of assistance can go as high as $13.50 an ounce, permitting a profit where production costs are as high as $40 an ounce. The subsidy for 1953 is at least $1.50 per ounce more than last year—more than enough to pay for the wage increases and other improvements recommended by a Board of Conciliation.

Meantime, gold mining is one of the few Canadian industries still on the 48-hour week. The miners get four paid statutory holidays a year; most Canadian workers are paid for six, and many for eight. In addition, they lack the employer-financed hospitalization, sickness, death, medical and retirement plans generally provided in Canadian industry.

Wages are 50c to 80c an hour less than for comparable jobs in the base metal mines. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported that as of June 1, average hourly earnings were $1.343 in gold mining compared to $1.701 in base metals.

In addition to a pay boost and a 40-hour week, the miners want the voluntary, revocable check-off of union dues as a minimum of union security, and an effective grievance procedure.

ON THE LINE—Pickets at big Pittsburgh plant of Continental Can Co, check car at gate, during national strike of some 32,000 CIO Steelworkers at 69 plants of Continental and American Can Cos. Negotiations on latter pact were set for this week.

Utility Workers Win Wage Boosts

A general wage increase of 5%, with a floor of 8c an hour and a maximum of 13c, was won by Local 157, CIO Utility Workers, in renewal contract negotiations with the Dayton (O.) Power & Light Co.

The average increase was 10.5c. The union also obtained improvements in the pension plan.

'Slave Trade' In Wetbacks Charged By Riffe

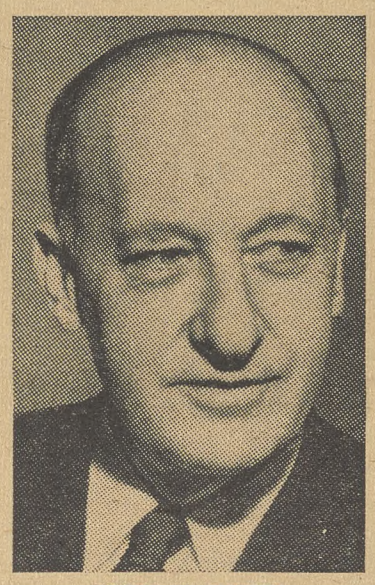
AN ILLEGAL and inhuman slave trade flourishes on the U. S.-Mexican border "with the connivance, or at least the indifference, of both governments," CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe declared last week.

Riffe spoke in Mexico City at the first international conference of the CIO, AFL and Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM). The meeting was called by the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), with the wetback problem one of the major topics of discussion.

Need Decent Wages

He highlighted the vicious exploitation to which Mexican migrant workers are subjected in the U. S., especially in agriculture in the Southwestern states, and pointed out that each worker "permitted by either country to cross the border illegally is virtually sold into involuntary servitude."

"If the 'braceros' are really and truly needed to plant and harvest the crops of our side of the border," he said, "they should be contracted for legally (under the U. S.-Mexican treaty) and guaranteed to receive at least the same wages and working conditions as do our own workers.



JOHN V. RIFFE
Hits migrant slave trade.

A Common Problem

"I say 'at least,' because these workers are with us only temporarily to help in an emergency, do not receive the long term benefits of our resident workers, and are, therefore, entitled to a higher pay.

"If they are not needed—or are brought in or allowed to come in illegally—or if they are brought in legally and discriminated against, given poorer conditions of employment and lower wages than are received by our own workers, then the object is to lower the living standards of our workers and to exploit the misery of the poorer people of Mexico.

"This should not and cannot be the policy of either government."

Moving Northward

Riffe told the conference that the wetback situation is a problem that concerns workers, "and therefore it is our problem."

Illegal immigration from Mexico has affected both agricutural and industrial workers in the U. S., he said.

"Many more cross the border than can be absorbed in agricultural tasks," he explained, "while many find that the wages offered on the farms do not permit them to subsist.

"These two groups have moved northward and spread out in all directions so that today they are to be found in almost every state. Remember that they are fugitives, driven by need and hunger to accept any employment offered, who can be cheated, abused and robbed but who dare not complain.

Move Into Industry

"These are the illegal migrants who are infiltrating into industry, who work for less than the usual rate of pay and . . . who at times are used as strikebreakers."

The CIO leader offered a program to both governments based on "drastic action" to halt the illegal traffic across the border, which he estimated is pouring one million Mexicans into the U. S. annually.

"We must insist that the U. S. government enforce the immigration laws, and enact legislation making it an unlawful and punishable offense to employ illegal entrants," he said. "It must also forbid the legalization of illegal migrants through any device.

"We must also insist that the Mexican government strictly enforce its emigration laws, and it effectively and energetically patrol its northern boundary and the concentration points where the illegal traffic originates.

Sold Like Cattle

". . . Smugglers recruit the innocent 'braceros' in search of work along the border, take them across the border and then sell them like cattle to other soul-less, men, who in turn sell them at a higher price to unscrupulous plantation owners. The men who engage in this trade should be punished."

Riffe insisted that the labor organizations of both nations sit with their governments when a new treaty is negotiated, that CTM representatives administer recruiting centers in Mexico, and that U. S. union representatives be present when contracts between workers and employers are negotiated and signed.

Joint Action

The conference of U. S. and Mexican unions in Mexico City, in addition to the wetback problem, also was to consider a program for joint action on industrial relations issues affecting workers in identical industries in both nations.

The CIO delegation, in addition to Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, included CIO Vice Presidents O. A. Knight, president of the Oil Workers, and James G. Thimmes, vice president of the Steelworkers.

Others: R. J. Thomas, assistant to Riffe; Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee; Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray, Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee; John W. Edelman, legislative representative of the Textile Workers; and Irwin DeShetler, Robert Starnes, Timothy Flynn, David Sternback and Nicholas Dragon of the CIO organizing staff.

C. Of C. Sings A Wassail Song But It Got Its 'Fixins' All Mixed Up

CHRISTMAS "CHEER" flowed early this year from the U. S. Chamber of Commerce as Dr. Emerson P. Schmidt, its director of economic research, soberly set forth his views that unions have no effect on raising wages.

Writing in the C. of C. Economic Intelligence report he said:

"In the last 20 years—a period of fabulous union growth—the share of the national income going to labor, while shifting a bit from year to year, has not changed perceptibly."

Honest to Christmas, fellows, that's what the man said.

"Baloney," retorted a CIO spokesman.

Then he added "Dr. Schmidt knows better and so does every business man. Even if the proportion of labor's share of the national income hasn't changed upward, labor's share would have gone down if unions hadn't been out scrapping for wage increases."

Business and labor economists in the nation's capital interrupted their holiday shopping to get into the argument resulting from Dr. Schmidt's pronouncement.

The question was referred to CIO's Dept. of Education and Research. They suggested Dr. Schmidt compare the periods of 1923-1929 on the one hand with 1947-1953 on the other. Both were periods of full employment.

During the 1923-1929 "prosperity," when unions were weak, average hourly earnings of all manufacturing workers (according to the U. S. Dept. of Labor) averaged from 52c to 56c an hour, approximately. Prices were fairly stable during this period and real hourly earnings increased about 7%.

Continuing, the CIO economists pointed out that from 1947-1953, a period of strong unionism, average weekly earnings for manufacturing workers went from $1.24 to $1.78 per hour.

After adjusting these figures to eliminate the effect of price changes, the gain in real hourly earnings has been from $1.47 per hour to $1.75 per hour. The real gain in the latter period was more than 19%.

Thank you and Merry Christmas, Dr. Schmidt.

Carey Says IUE To Push For GE Votes

JAMES B. CAREY, president of the CIO Electrical Workers, last week hailed the victory of IUE in a National Labor Relations Board election at the Lynn and Everett, Mass., General Electric plants.

He said it was "clearly a victory for America as well as a victory for our own anti-Communist union, despite the efforts of the company, the UE, and AFL and the NLRB to prevent a IUE-CIO victory by splintering the traditional single bargaining unit into three units."

The recent election marked the third time since 1950 that IUE defeated UE at the Lynn plants.

Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, said IUE "will now proceed to press our current campaign in Erie, Pa., and Schenectady, N. Y., the only sizable locations in GE still represented by the Communist UE."

CIO, AFL No-Raiding Agreement Is Signed

HISTORIC AGREEMENT—The no-raiding pact between CIO and AFL was formally signed at a meeting of top officials of the two labor federations in Washington. Signing pact (first photo) are AFL Pres. George Meany and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, flanked by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (right) and AFL Sec.-Treas. William Schnitzler. Standing with the officials (from left, second photo): CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, AFL Vice Pres. Matthew Woll, NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve, AFL Electrical Workers Pres. Daniel W. Tracy, AFL Letters Carriers Pres. William C. Doherty, and AFL Building Service Pres. William L. McFetridge. Pact directly affects CIO and AFL chartered locals, still requires international union signing for full effectiveness.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

A MAJOR symbolic step on the path toward labor unity was taken last week, with the signing by CIO and AFL officers of a no-raiding agreement.

The pact, which goes into effect Jan. 1, applies only to those unions which have formally placed their signature on the agreement.

Directly affected by the actions of the CIO and AFL officers were the CIO's local industrial unions and the AFL's similar federal labor unions.

BUT SOME TIME next month, another meeting is planned for the "second step"—the formal signing of the pact by a large number of CIO and AFL unions. The no-raiding agreement applies to all unions that sign it, and there is a desire that major elements of both the CIO and AFL be parties to the agreement at about the same time.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey signed the basic document for the CIO, and Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler for the AFL—during a meeting of the CIO and AFL Unity Committees at Washington's Hotel Statler on Dec. 16.

The agreements had previously been ratified by the CIO and AFL conventions.

The official announcement pointed out that "a meeting will be called at an early date to permit the various affiliated unions of both organizations to affix their signatures to the agreement, and in so doing, become parties to it."

The statement noted that the no-raiding agreement will apply "only to those affiliated unions that sign it," and continued:

"The agreement applies to the United States and its territories and possessions. Its application in the Dominion of Canada will be determined by parallel action of the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress and the Canadian Congress of Labor." (See adjoining story).

Reuther, Meany, Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers and others amplified the short formal announcement in the course of a press and television conference that followed the signing of the pact.

REUTHER SAID that the vast majority of CIO affiliates—with about 98% of CIO's membership—have either tentatively ratified the agreement or are prepared to do so if the great majority of AFL members are likewise covered by their unions' actions.

The CIO president likened the CIO-AFL action to a "cease-fire" on raiding skirmishes, and with a grin, predicted that subsequent peace talks would be less drawn out than those in Korea.

McDonald said he had been authorized by the executive board of the steel union to sign the pact for his organization, and would do so when assured that "a substantial number" of AFL unions were also prepared to sign.

Pres. Dan Tracy of the AFL Electrical Workers commented that that was the view "of all of us."

AFL Pres. Meany told reporters that "it is my belief that all the affiliates of the AFL will eventully sign."

Meany's statement came in response to a number of questions from reporters about the Teamsters, largest AFL affiliate.

Pres. Dave Beck of the Teamsters, who has been under sharp attack for conducting a number of raiding efforts—including one against the CIO Brewery Workers last summer—has said the no-raiding agreement will be studied by the union's executive board at a February meeting.

Beyond expressing belief that all AFL affiliates would eventually sign, Meany said reporters should address their questions to Beck about the Teamsters' intentions.

It was indicated that the next joint meeting, to "affix the signatures" of the various affiliated unions, might be held next month.

Both Reuther and Meany agreed that no further active plans to effect labor unity would be worked on until the no-raiding agreement is in full operation. And both agreed that the move toward future unity is complicated by "hundreds of problems."

ATTENDING the meeting for the CIO, with Reuther, Carey, and McDonald, were: Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing Workers; Pres. Emil Rieve, Textile Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran, Maritime Union; Pres. Michael Quill, Transport Workers; and Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

For the AFL: Meany, Schnitzler and Tracy; AFL Vice-Pres. Matthew Woll; Pres. William C. Doherty, Letter Carriers; and Pres. William McFetridge, Building Service Employes.

Ship Unions Plan Joint Capital Rally

A JOINT meeting of CIO and AFL maritime unions has been called for Jan. 18 in Washington to bring the plight of the maritime industry to the attention of Congress.

The meeting also will point out how the nation will be adversely affected if the Eisenhower Administration fails to take proper action on tariffs, ship operation subsidies and ship building maintenance.

Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union has led in planning the conference.

The maritime unions also want to know whether the U. S. Public Service Hospitals, which provide for merchant seamen, will be abolished as the Budget Bureau has proposed. Another question is whether the policy of hauling half of the federal cargoes in U. S. vessels will be maintained.

Sub For Scrooge Is Thrown For Loss As UAW Local Hands Out The Toys

THE CHRISTMAS spirit continues to reign in Milwaukee and suburban West Allis, with no thanks to Burger Engerbretsen, a Republican state assemblyman.

If he had his way, apparently, Old Mr. Scrooge would be in charge for the holidays, shoving St. Nick off his throne and clear back to the North Pole—or some place.

What got Engerbretsen's dander up and produced an unseasonable outburst of temper was fairly simple. It all developed because CIO members in the Milwaukee area were offered the chance to buy Christmas toys at discounts up to 33%—a pretty good Christmas gift itself considering the times and the prices and the layoffs.

The offer came from the big CIO Auto Workers Local 248 at the Allis-Chalmers plant in West Allis.

Expanding its past offer to local members only, the UAW unit enlarged its display of a wide range of toys, put up the cash and carry signs, and made the service available to all Milwaukee CIO unionists.

That started Assemblyman Engerbretsen, who is from Beloit, whooping and whollering. Toys at discount, he protested, would put the state's economy in "jeopardy" and force plants to "more away." (That's what the man said.)

The lawmaker moved to force the State Industrial Development Committee to investigate this dire plot to spread walking dolls, cowboy outfits and space guns among workers' youngsters.

Engerbretsen was rebuffed by a fellow Republican, Foster Porter, who said the industry group couldn't be bothered by "trivialities."

State CIO Council Pres. Charles Schultz, a committee member, said "in a way it's too bad Engerbretsen was defeated so roundly . . . I would have liked to answer the gentleman when he appeared before the committee."

Labor Unity Parleys Due In Canada

A FOUR-MAN committee to explore the possibilities of labor unity in Canada was named last week by the executive council of the Canadian Congress of Labor.

Appointed to the group were Pres. A. R. Mosher, Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald, and Vice Presidents George Burt and C. H. Millard. Burt is Canadian director of the CIO Auto Workers, Millard of the CIO Steelworkers.

Action of the CCL followed by a few days selection of a committee to bring about closer relations with other major labor bodies by the executive council of the Canadian Trades & Labor Congress, made up of the country's AFL affiliates. The CTLC chose Pres. Percy Bengough, Sec.-Treas. Gordon Cushing and Vice Presidents Claude Jodoin and William Jenoves.

No-Raiding Agreement

The no-raiding agreement between CIO and AFL, signed last week after six months of study and discussions, is a document that will help workers in every industry and every union.

For it represents a clear-headed effort to drop the free-wheeling raiding efforts that have used up the time, energy and talent of so many unions in years past.

Obviously, the no-raiding agreement will gain real meaning only when it has the signatures affixed to it of substantial sections of both the CIO and AFL. Leaders of both organizations think that will be soon.

Most CIO unions are ready to sign when substantial segments of the AFL are likewise ready. AFL Pres. George Meany predicts that eventually all AFL affiliates will do so. When the no-raiding machinery goes into full operation, both major wings of the American labor movement will be able to turn more intensively to one of our primary jobs—organization of the unorganized.

A Sad Loss

Hariharnath Shastri was a man known to relatively few American trade unionists—but those who had met the general secretary of the Indian Nation Trade Union Congress had the greatest respect for him, as a union leader and a vital force for democracy in southern Asia.

Mr. Shastri had attended a number of international labor meetings, and he was a vice-president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at the time of his death in an Indian plane crash early this month.

Shortly after his graduation from college some 20 years ago, Mr. Shastri joined an organization known as the "Servants of the People Society." He was ideally fitted for membership in an organization with such a name. The record of his career—terminated much too quickly by a tragic accident—proved that he was truly a servant of the people, not alone in India but throughout the democratic world.

Hope Springs Eternal

In the Middle Ages, a lot of time was spent looking for a sure-fire way to change lead into gold. Three or four hundred years ago, explorers looked in vain for a Northwest Passage that would take them quickly to the riches of India.

Today, a new school of wishful thinkers has a new objective—to find some way to "prove" that labor unions aren't necessary and don't do anything for their members.

As daintily as a lady in a millinery shop, Schmidt has picked and chosen from a mountain of statistics those few which he thinks will "prove" that over the past 30 years wages would have gone up just as much if no union had ever asked the boss for a raise.

Obviously, it just isn't so—as hundreds of thousands of negotiating committee members could tell the Chamber's economist. Nor, we suspect, will it be believed by thousands of prosperous employers in the Chamber of Commerce who have so often wailed that "those labor unions are driving us into bankruptcy."

So, we think that Mr. Schmidt will have to find another weapon to use against labor unions. Now, our kid was telling us about a space gun that . . .

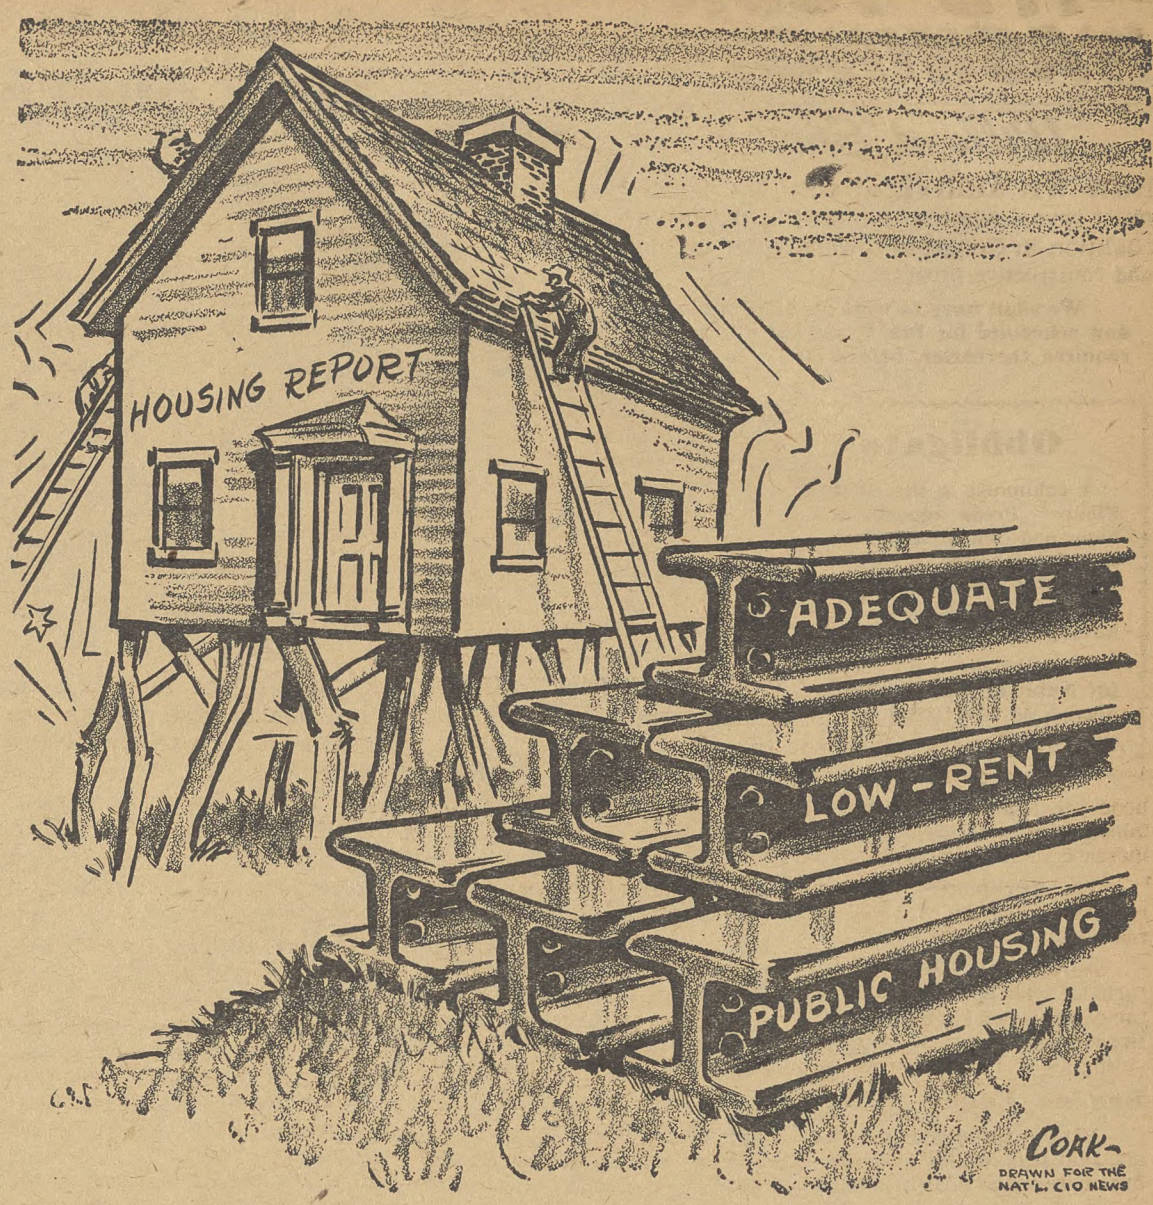
Needs A Stronger Foundation



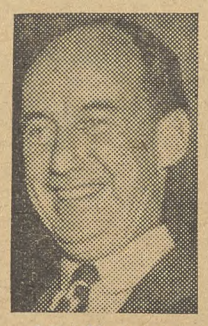
In Other Words—

Four Freedoms Versus Four Fears

Republicans have substituted the four fears for the four freedoms, it was charged by Adlai E. Stevenson, 1952 Democratic presidential candidate, in a speech at Philadelphia. Excerpts from his address follow.

By ADLAI E. STEVENSON

THE BILL OF RIGHTS is besieged, ancient liberties infringed, reckless words uttered, vigilante groups are formed, suspicion, mistrust and fear stalk the land, and political partisanship raises strange and ugly heads, the security of secret files is violated and the specter of a political police emerges.



Adlai Stevenson

We begin to resemble the very thing we dread. The Attorney General, the chief law enforcement officer of the Nation, the very embodiment of our concept of justice, has even imputed disloyalty or Communist sympathy to a former President while our allies whom he organized, aided and armed to fight communism the world around listen in bewilderment and disgust.

As someone said, one wonders if those fellows will stop at nothing until they get Harry Truman out of the White House. And latterly some Republicans act as though they will stop at nothing 'til they get Dwight Eisenhower out of the White House.

But, subversion and treachery are serious—and far more important than party polictics. Doubtless there were mistakes. There always will be.

Perhaps this clamor helps the Republicans politically but it will not solve the gigantic problems confronting us. The Nation still has to be governed and a world defended.

As I see it our duty as citizens first and Democrats second is not recrimination; it is not to defend or deny the past, for yesterday is irretrievable and the problems are now and tomorrow. What the Republicans do or don't do now is far more important than what the Democrats did or didn't do seven or eight years ago.

Knocking each other over the past may please the Kremlin but it will not build national unity or international respect. Fighting Democrats for political advantage is not fighting communism for national surival.

Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence in Philadelphia—and he went on to found the Democratic Party. But the defense of individual liberty is the obligation—and the privilege—of all Americans. Today good Republicans stand with us in the conviction that no crisis can justify the impairment of our liberties—and in the determination that no enemy, aboard or at home, shall do so.

If the Administration is looking for a good crusade I would recommend a crusade to combat the Communist conspiracy without resorting to Communist methods to do it.

For these are the days of our strength in the world's peril. These should be the days of our greatness in the world's need. But instead of the hope of the free world we could become its despair.

While The President Speaks

I believe that the President of the United States has set his face against all these things. But while he speaks of unity, his colleagues sow disunity. While he calls for calm, his friends light the fires of hysteria. While he invokes the American tradition that the accused has the right to be confronted by his accuser, members of his Administration and his party charge, try, condemn and convict in a single action of the hand.

I only wish Pres. Eisenhower could speak for the Eisenhower Administration. For, in the words of the apostle, "If the trumpet gives an uncertain sound who shall prepare himself for the battle?"

It was only a dozen years ago that a great American redefined and reaffirmed our heritage of liberty. I am speaking of Franklin Roosevelt. I am speaking of the Four Freedoms—freedom of speech and expression; freedom of worship; freedom from want; freedom from fear.

Those gallant hopes of yesterday have given way to the sorry confusion of today. The Four Freedoms have been replaced by the four fears—fear of depression; fear of communism; fear of ourselves; fear of freedom itself.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

NOW WE ARRIVE at the time when Pres. Eisenhower must reveal whether he has the capacity to lead a bipartisan coalition in Congress toward what he has termed a positive and constructive program.

We shall have to wait until the State of the Union message, now scheduled for Jan. 7, and the economic and budget messages required thereafter, before trying to form final judgments.

Obbligato

A columnist in the St. Paul Pioneer Press reports what happened when members of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra were rehearsing the "Russian Dance" from Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker Suite."

"Gentlemen," said Conductor Antal Dorati, "I want this played so McCarthy will be suspicious."

The intensive hard-driving conferences with Republican congressional leaders in the White House last week could not conceivably be expected to produce solid results. A small but battle-hardened group of GOP members is opposed to President's general approach to government—and is ready to help him be a failure.

Some of the strongest Republican legislative committee chairmen are members of this group.

Congress may begin with some bitter filibusters, on statehood for Hawaii and the St. Lawrence Seaway, and break off in midsummer with irritated members reluctantly voting a necessary increase in the authorized public debt limit.

The Eisenhower "program," as it has been carefully suggested and intimated by Cabinet members, is already coming apart at the seams.

Agriculture Sec. Benson took a fierce beating from wheat farmers who voted 7 to 1 for 90% price supports, and thus voluntarily subjected themselves to acreage limits and sales quotas which Benson looks upon as "regimentation." Cotton farmers followed by voting 16 to 1 for controls, peanut growers 17 to 1 for controls.

Benson Edges Away

Benson recently has been saying publicly, with a somewhat wan air, that it is not his business to present a farm "policy" to Congress but merely to "advise" and "suggest."

Labor Sec. Mitchell, an able citizen who might do a pretty good job if left to his own initiative, got rapped on the knuckles for suggesting that the 75c minimum hourly wage be raised and that coverage be broadened.

Rep. McConnell of Pennsylvania, Republican chairman of the House Labor Committee, deplored Mitchell's failure to consult with him first and complained that a broadening of coverage and an increase in wage rates seemed impossible.

Interior Sec. McKay is one of the few experienced, breezy politicians in the President's Cabinet, but he is running into a storm of trouble with Rural Electrification co-ops and with public power groups.

McKay is trying to modify the public power and REA programs of the last 20 years so radically that it looks like nullification. There are millions of REA buyers of electricity—farmers who were never served by "free enterprise" but who electrified their own homes and barns with the help of the federal government—and they resent the McKay doctrine of raising their rates and turning them over to the mercies of "enterprise."

Every Man For Himself

Add the issues of the budget and taxes. Add the fact that next year, an election year, nearly all members of the House and a big part of the Senate will want to do nothing except pass the necessary appropriation bills, cut taxes, and get out of town to campaign in their home areas—every man for himself in a bloodletting contest.

Mr. Eisenhower could solve his problems in these fields in a series of White House conferences with GOP leaders who have notions of their own.

He can't get any "positive" program through without Democratic help. He may not get anything through without rising to his position as Chief Executive and appealing directly to the people.

The notion that reasonable men can get together through the conference method—or even the notion that all members of Congress act responsibly in an election year—denies American history.

A President puts through programs in which he deeply believes by arousing the people to help him with Congress—as Jackson did, as Theodore Roosevelt did, as Franklin D. Roosevelt did in repeal of the Neutrality Act and passage of Lend-Lease, as Harry S. Truman did in pushing through the Marshall Plan and aid to Greece and Turkey.

Mr. Eisenhower's State of the Union message, Jan. 7, is the landmark to which we must look forward.

★ STAR of the recent Democratic rally in Philadelphia was former Vice-Pres. Alben Barkley, whose political oratory and sureness of phrase gave the younger people a lesson. He'll be a formidable rival, if he decides to run for the Senate again next year in Kentucky against one of the better Republicans Senators, John Sherman Cooper.

The Bricker Brickbat—

A Look At The Record Suggests It's Congress That Needs Curbing

(When Congress returns next month, among the brickbats aimed at Pres. Eisenhower is the so-called Bricker amendment—a move by latter-day isolationists to hamstring the President in foreign affairs. What's behind the proposal is discussed by Henry Steele Commager, a leading historian, digested from The Reporter magazine.)

By HENRY STEELE COMMAGER

THERE IS NOTHING essentially new about the so-called Bricker amendment, which proposes strict limitations on the power of the President in making agreements with foreign governments.

The fathers of the Constitution knew well the dangers that threatened the rights of individuals and states from a central government with extensive powers, and they threw all necessary safeguards around those rights.

What are the safeguards? After a treaty has been negotiated by the President, it must be ratified by two-thirds of the Senators present. As a single political party rarely commands a two-thirds majority, this means that it must have bipartisan support.

It must be constitutional or the courts will hold it void. If it turns out to be a really dangerous treaty, Congress can impeach the President who was responsible for it. It must ordinarily be carried out through legislation and when Congress comes to vote funds for its administration, that body has another chance to pass upon its merits. If it is found to be unsatisfactory, in whole or in part, it can be modified or even repudiated by law.

Ample Powers and Safeguards

The fathers, then, gave amplest authority to the President to conduct foreign relations, and to the Senate to confirm such treaties as he negotiated, and then placed careful safeguards around these powers.

Has anything happened in 166 years to suggest that the fathers went wrong on all this? Has the Constitution here proved to be a failure?

In the last century and a half the United States has concluded something like 900 treaties and perhaps twice that many executive agreements. If the treaty power is the Trojan horse that its critics now assert, certainly that fact must have become apparent during these years.

Surely there is at least one treaty that the critics can cite as evidence of a violation of the Constitution or an invasion of liberties of the citizen.

But let us look at the Bricker amendment itself, the first section of which stipulates that a provision of a treaty which conflicts with the Constitution is of no force or effect. Of course a treaty contrary to the Constitution is of no force. Only those incapable of understanding the logic of the Constitution and the decisions of the Supreme Court ever thought otherwise.

And in fact, the executive never has made a treaty which has been held to conflict with the Constitution. This, it is relevant to observe, is a much better record than Congress can show.

—Herblock in Washington Post

"We Want To Keep In Close Touch With You, Too."

In the same period, perhaps 70 or 80 acts of Congress have been held void by the courts. If we are going to have amendments to prevent unconstitutional actions by branches of the national government, perhaps Sen. Bricker had better start with Congress.

The treaty-making power is, of course, liable to abuse. But all power is liable to abuse, and it is impossible to devise safeguards adequate to every hypothetical abuse. If we are going to guard against hypothetical dangers, why bother with anything as carefully circumscribed as the treaty-making power?

Why not start with the powers of Congress itself? Congress can destroy the executive power by refusing to vote appropriations, by refusing to confirm nominations, or by impeaching the President because it doesn't like the way he conducts his business.

Under the Constitution as it now stands, Congress can destroy the Supreme Court by reducing its membership to one, by increasing it to 100, or perhaps by impeaching its judges because they grant stays of execution.

What Congress Can Do

But it would be madness to try to write into the Constitution guarantees against all these dangers. If we did, the Constitution would quickly become unworkable, and its zealous defenders would promptly conjure up a new crop of hypothetical dangers.

We have to take our chances on these things, trusting in experience, in common sense, in the integrity of our elected officials and the virtue of our people.

'Know-Nothings' Of Congress Hit

THE "DESTRUCTIVE mischief of latter-day know-nothings" controlling congressional investigating committees was condemned by several lawyers participating in a recent Notre Dame Univ. panel symposium.

Such a description of the McCarthy, Jenner and Velde committees was voiced by Brig. Gen. Telford Tayor, a prosecutor in the Nuremberg Nazi war crimes trials (and a recent target of McCarthy because he had criticized the Wisconsin Senator).

Other participants in the Norte Dame College of Law symposium were Rep. Keating (R. N. Y.); Abe Fortas, once Interior Dept. undersecretary; and George Morris Fay, once U. S. attorney in Washington. The subject was "Safeguards which should be available for witnesses in legislative investigations."

The participants agreed that Congress has investigative powers, doubted that it has exercised them well.

"We are entitled to insist," said Fortas, "that the problems of espionage and subversion are too important to be used for partisan political purposes or for personal power or glory."

Taylor agreed with the proposal of Rep. Frelinghuysen (R. N. J.) for setting up a nonpartisan joint congressional committee on internal security.

"These are not partisan political matters," said Taylor. "Republicans and Democrats, conservatives and liberals must all stand on conservative ground against radicals who sow suspicion and fear in our land at a time when foreign perils urgently require that we be of one mind."

Keating proposed the establishment of "a good set of rules" to protect the rights of witnesses and emphasized that "no congressional investigation is justified unless it can be directly related to gathering facts about proposed legislation and to inquire in the workings of existing federal laws."

The American Civil Liberties Union reached a similar conclusion on McCarthy-type investigations, saying their chief result to date has been an intolerance of dissent "and the fear to express dissent."

The ACLU issued a special 160-page report on developments in civil liberties in the past 30 months, saying "we will continue to oppose tyrannical Soviet communism as the chief threat to our civil liberties from the outside and 'McCarthyism' as the chief threat to our civil liberties from the inside."

Amounts To Wage Cut—

CIO Warns Sales Tax Would Speed Recession

A GENERAL sales tax amounts to "a wage cut" and passage of a federal sales tax law could speed up the downward trend of the nation's economy.

Any sales tax or manufacturers' excise tax would curtail consumption at a time when defense spending and business investment are leveling off. Either would impose a tax rate up to 60 times heavier on the poorest families than on the richest.

So reported the current issue of Economic Outlook, published by the CIO Dept. of Education & Research.

Entitled "Behind the Drive for a Federal Sales Tax," the Outlook described the campaign for sales or manufacturers' excise taxes as "bad economics" and "unfair to the millions of lower and middle-income families."

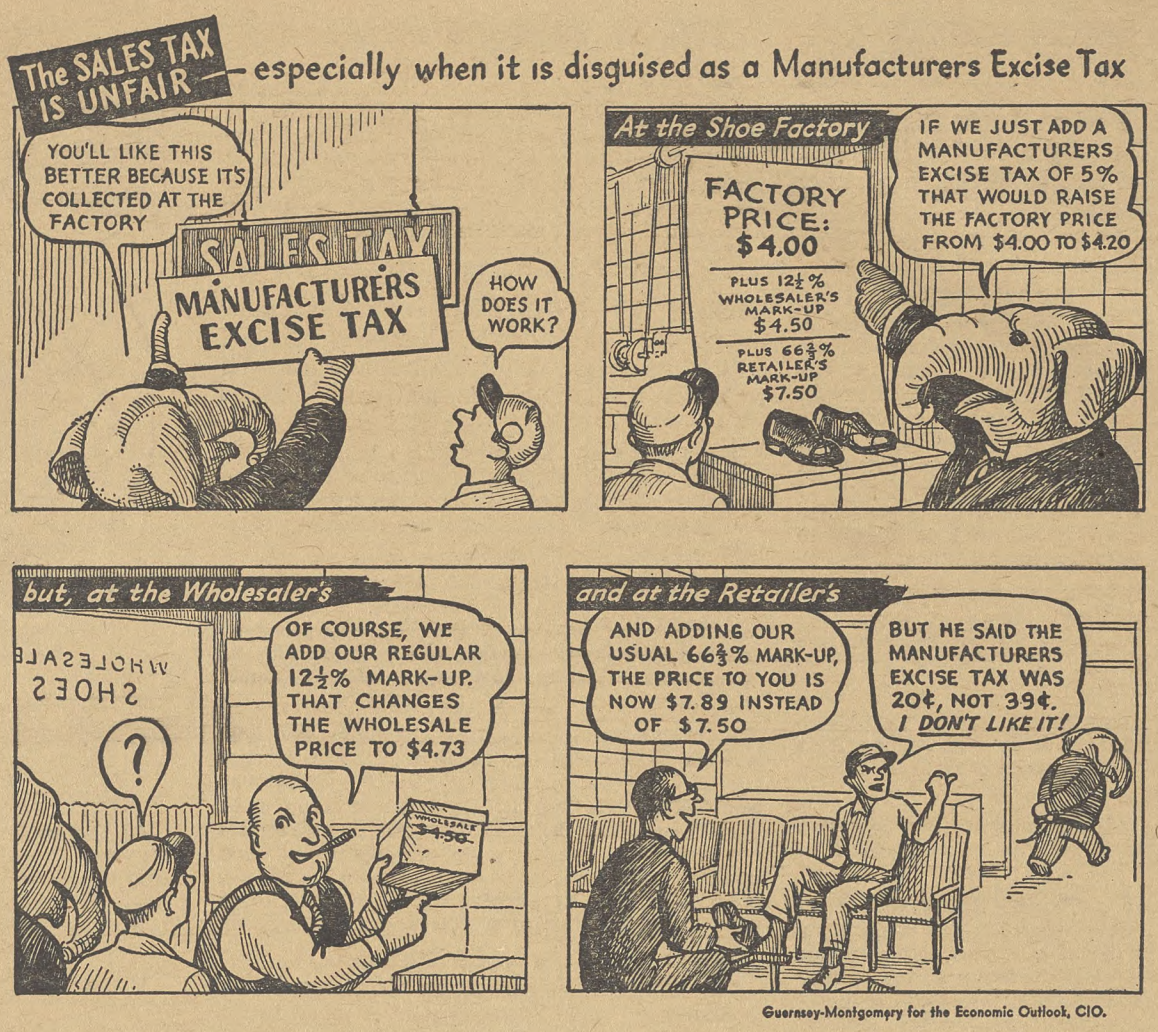
The CIO publication noted that Dr. Neil Jacoby, appointed recently by Pres. Eisenhower to his Council of Economic Advisers, in 1938 wrote that "the evil of sales taxes is magnified during the downward swing of the business cycle."

Danger To Economy

Sales tax legislation would be "particularly dangerous to the national economy at this time," the Outlook said, when "defense spending and business investment are levelling off."

"To sustain economic growth, consumer spending must rise and personal consumption must be encouraged," the report said. "But a general sales tax or a manufacturers' excise tax would curtail consumer purchases of goods and services. In effect, a general sales tax is a wage cut."

The Outlook commented that "to extend sales tax legislation at this time could well magnify the downward movement of the national economy that is now becoming apparent."



Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

The publication also quoted from Dr. Jacoby's 1938 study on "Retail Sales Taxation" that "a sales tax on all consumers' expenditures is equivalent to a tax rate on income 16 to 20 times higher for the family with $1000 income than for the family with $1 million income. If the sales tax is limited to tangible merchandise (such as a manufacturers' excise tax), it results in a levy on income at a rate about 60 times higher on the lowest than on the highest income."

The sales tax, the Outlook noted, has "sometimes been defended on the grounds of equal treatment for all. But it is the type of equality that says millionaire and pauper alike: 'you are both equally free to sleep on a park bench'."

The CIO publication said that "basically a sales tax and a manufacturers' excise tax are the same thing—a tax on consumption, not a tax based on ability to pay. Both result in increased living costs." And it pointed out that the manufacturers' excise tax is hidden and can be pyramided to cost the consumer far more than the tax itself.

Too Many Loopholes

Federal sales taxes or manufacturers' excise taxes, the Outlook continued, would "undermine the progressive nature of the federal tax structure, which has already been weakened by ineffective enforcement and loopholes that benefit upper-income families primarily."

"If a federal manufacturers' excise tax is enacted," the publication said, "it will be used to eventually replace parts of our individual income tax structure. While this is what an Administration dominated by big business would like to do, it is contrary to the best interest of all the American people."

The Outlook said that if the Administration is "really interested in raising the amount of revenue that a 5% manufacturers' excise tax would raise, it could be done more equitably through closing the loopholes and gaps in the present federal tax structure."

Oil Money Sets '54 Pattern In Chavez Race

By MILTON PLUMB

THE REPORT of the Senate Elections subcommittee which investigated the election of Sen. Chavez (D. N. M.) over Patrick J. Hurley last November is expected to be released within the next few days.

Even the group's members are not yet sure what the report will say. They are working on the final draft, or drafts, since a minority report now appears likely.

But the following facts are certain:

1. The odds are better than five to one that it will have no effect on Chavez' standing in the Senate. Even New Mexico's Republican Gov. Edwin Meecham long ago certified Chavez re-election.

2. Costs of the so-called "investigation" of the New Mexico Senate race are a major political scandal. The Republican-run probe has cost over $150,000 and is the second most costly recount in history.

3. Despite vast expenditures, the committee's report will not touch upon the most significant scandal of the election. This is the effort—revealed here for the first time—of oil and other business interests from outside the state to "buy" Hurley a seat in the Senate.

SEN. CHAVEZ
The election was checked.

The effort to unseat Chavez, a liberal, pro-labor Senator who has consistently fought oil and other monopoly interests, sets a pattern big business is certain to follow in New Mexico and other states next November.

Hurley, who represents Sinclair Oil Co., is a wealthy attorney who became a millionaire through handling oil litigation. He moved to New Mexico from Oklahoma several years ago and at once began running for the Senate.

Chavez, on the other hand, has worked in the Senate to thwart big business' anti-labor and monopoly moves. With Archbishop Edwin Byrnes of Santa Fe, he helped prevent enactment of a New Mexico "right to work" bill in 1949.

Oil interests have never forgiven Chavez for his vote against the Kerr Bill on natural gas rates or for his leadership of the successful fight that prevented the granting of a franchise for New Mexico's gas to El Paso Natural Gas Co., one of the holdings of Clint Murchison, wealthy Texas contributor to reactionary causes.

Hurley first ran against Chavez in 1946. He was roundly defeated, but claimed he had been cheated out of victory. In 1948, Hurley again was beaten, this time by Sen. Anderson (D.). When Chavez beat him in his third try last November, Hurley charged "fraud" and claimed 30,000 illegal ballots had been cast for his opponent.

No Evidence Found

An official state recount gave Chavez 122,543 votes to Hurley's 117,168 as the final totals. In addition to the recount, other investigations of the election were conducted by the FBI, state election officials, and a county grand jury. They shelved Hurley's charges when no evidence was found to support them.

Meanwhile, the Republican-controlled Senate set up a special three-man committee under Sen. Barrett (R. Wyo.), who defeated liberal Sen. O'Mahoney (D.) for re-election last year.

Barrett hired a record-sized staff which he has kept working some 10 months in an effort to smear, and possibly unseat, Chavez.

Big Gifts

Some of the big out-of-state contributions that helped elect Sen. Barrett (R. Wyo.) include $5000 from Douglas B. Marshall of Houston; $3000 from E. L. Cord, Chicago; $2000 from H. B. Earhart, Detroit; $1000 from H. W. Bass, Dallas; and $1000 from John S. Bugas, Detroit, personnel director for the Ford Motor Co.

Among Texas contributors of $1000 or more to the Hurley-for-Senate Committee are H. L. Hunt of Dallas, backer of the Facts Forum and Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), and Robert F. Thompson of Dallas, who gave $5000. The latter is a close associate of Clint Murchison, wealthy oilman.

At the end of its first six months' work, it had spent over $100,000 and its 65 employes had failed to complete the tally of votes in a single county or produced evidence for a single indictment. The National Committee for an Effective Congress last August charged that Barrett. "set a new record for waste and ineptitude."

The committee staff was also strongly criticized by New Mexico's attorney general and in the final report of the Bernalillo county grand jury which probed the election. In this atmosphere, the committee staff was ordered back to Washington last September. Its costly on-the-spot survey failed to produce any evidence that Chavez hadn't been elected.

Whether their report will be accepted by any of the three Senators on the subcommittee and thus made public is the question currently being decided. Many Republicans, however, are worried about pressing the probe further.

Might Boomerang

It has been pointed out that any election irregularities might bounce back on the GOP, since election officials were appointed by a Republican state administration. These fears increased when it was learned some ballots—45 in one precinct alone—had been changed from Chavez to Hurley instead of the other way around.

The official reports, on file with Congress, show significant overlapping of donors to the Barrett and Hurley election funds. For example, in each state, four members of the Pew family of Philadelphia, identified with the Sun Oil Co., are each listed as giving varying amounts over $1000.

Oil and gas deposits recently have been found in New Mexico and Wyoming, as well as in Idaho, Montana and Colorado. Senators from all of these states come up for re-election next year. What the oil companies tried to pull in New Mexico last year can be expected to be repeated on a broader scale in 1954.

McCarthyites, Commies War On Humphrey

"NUMBER ONE target" of the Republican Party in 1954 is a Senator who, in his first term, is already known as the "most vigorous Senate liberal." He is Hubert H. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

Big business and the reactionary McCarthy Brigade for months have been dipping into a propaganda slush fund, running into millions, that has been earmarked primarily for the purpose of convincing the people of Minnesota that Humphrey is a dangerous "communistic" radical. Thus far, this campaign has been a complete dud.

But another drive against Humphrey has been more successful. And, strangely enough—in view of what the McCarthyites have been saying—this is the smear job that is being done on Humphrey by the Communists themselves.

The object of both campaigns, of course, is to defeat Humphrey in his bid for re-election next November.

The Man To Lick

Republicans, having picked Humphrey as the man they most want to lick, began their drive early this year. Minnesotans suddenly began to find their mailboxes filled with propaganda leaflets of big business fronts like the Committee for Constitutional Government — mostly mailed from outside the state.

The Communists' attack began even earlier — they've bitterly fought Humphrey since he was mayor of Minneapolis, long before he went to the Senate.

(When elected, Humphrey was national head of the anti-Communist liberal organization, Americans for Democratic Action. The ADA is hated—and smeared and feared—by the Communists even more than it is by McCarthyites. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt are among its leaders.)

Plenty Of Money

Liberal traditions are strong in Minnesota, once the center of populism and the Farmer-Labor Party. Humphrey's rapid rise to prominence as a leader of the American liberal movement has won him the enthusiastic—and continuing—support of the overwhelming majority of Minnesota voters.

Thus it was clear to Republican strategists that, if Humphrey is to be beaten, it will be necessary to subvert the basic democratic beliefs of most people in the Gopher State. This was why the well-heeled GOP propaganda drive began so early.

Plenty of money—from special interests outside the state—to try to buy the defeat of Humphrey was easily found.

Texas oil millionaires, who rake in annual "depletion allowance" tax exemptions aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars, were happy to contribute. Leader in the fight for tax reform, Humphrey had stepped on their toes by vigorously opposing depletion exemptions as one of the loopholes through which businessmen escape paying their fair share of taxes and transfer the tax burden to low-income families.

Oilmen and other business interests last spring picked Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) to lead their attack and promised him "unlimited funds" to conduct a spree of McCarthyism on radio and television. Weekly broadcasts, aimed at creating the hysteria which GOP strategists seem to think is the only weapon that can defeat Humphrey and other liberal Senators next year, are scheduled to begin soon and continue to the elections.

Joe Opens Up

McCarthy first attacked Humphrey by name in a TV broadcast last week.

Yet, despite their slush fund and an eager-to-go McCarthy, Republicans still haven't solved their major problem in Minnesota. So far no one has been found who is willing to be the GOP candidate opposing Humphrey.

Bids have been made, and the thought of running has reportedly been carefully considered by such GOP stalwarts as Rep. Judd and the anti-labor darling of the reactionaries, former Sen. Joseph H. Ball. Neither took the bait, probably because the most recent poll shows that Humphrey's record is approved by more than two-thirds of the voters.

Yet, while attention has been focused on the unsuccessful efforts of big business, the drive against Humphrey by the Communists has quietly made headway. Its effects aren't too serious to date, but that it is making some inroads can't be denied.

Red Propaganda

Red propaganda against him reached its peak last year when Humphrey, then chairman of the Senate Labor subcommittee, began an investigation of the problem of Communist unions in defense industries. Publications like the Daily Worker called him "tool of Wall Street," "anti-Roosevelt," and "an enemy of labor."

The March of Labor, party-line monthly magazine, attacked him as the "bitterest enemy of those who resist the war measures, frozen wages, higher taxes, restricted civil rights." There was, of course, no more truth in these charges than in McCarthy's charges that Humphrey is pro-Communist.

But the subtle commie campaign to poison the people's minds against Humphrey went on. Posters appeared on bulletin boards in plants where Communist-dominated unions like UE have contracts, charging him with such things as planning to shift the tax burden to the workers, an obvious distortion of his drive to close tax loopholes.

The reactionary press has begun to pick up and repeat these distortions in editorials. For example, one Minnesota Republican paper recently accused him of trying to boost prices to consumers because he's worked tirelessly to protect farmer income. That was straight Communist Party line.

Recently Humphrey was asked in all seriousness by several farmers whether it is true that he is, as the Communists charge, "a tool of General Mills." It seems that Humphrey, nearly 10 years ago, was a radio commentator and the makers of Wheaties sponsored his program.

Campaign For FDR

But, in the same year, Humphrey was managing the Minnesota campaign of Pres. Roosevelt.

At the 1948 Democratic convention Humphrey first gained national recognition for his leadership in the fight for a strong civil rights plank. He defeated Sen. Ball (R.) in the race for the Senate, and since that time has been one of the nation's leading voices on behalf of labor, the farmer, small business, and minority rights.

How successful his Senate career has been is indicated by the fact that most people find it difficult to realize that 1954 is Humphrey's first bid for re-election. He's done as much in one term as most senators do in several.

—M.P.

GOP Move?

The desperate GOP effort to defeat Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) is reflected in this report in the Baltimore Sun:

"A proposal to smear Sen. Humphrey by launching an election-year investigation of labor racketeering in Minneapolis' is being pondered by the Republicans.

"Leaders of the GOP Senatorial Campaign Committee are enthusiastic over the idea. But they want the House to do it, so it won't look so much like part of the Senatorial campaign."

Bottled Up

Bottled up by Chairman Jenner (R. Ind.) of the Senate Rules Committee is a bill by Sen. Humphrey to establish a Federal Election Campaign Commission to turn the spotlight on out-of-state contributions by big business to election campaigns.

Former Sen. Pepper (D. Fla.) recently said that more than $3 million had been spent to defeat him for re-election in 1950, and that big contributions had come from New York, Massachusetts, Georgia and from corporations outside Florida. The cost of re-electing the late Sen. Taft in 1950 has been set at $5 million.

FARMER-LABOR SUPPORT is source of Humphrey's "unbeatable" strength. He led Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party into Democratic camp; helps to keep it there by conferences with farmers like this one last summer.

LEADING ADVOCATE of fair employment practices, the Minnesota Senator has kept the high respect of his Southern colleagues. With him here at recent Labor Committee hearing is Sen. Long (D. La.).

Vic Reuther Tells Texas Council Labor Is Strongest Foe Of Reds

THE STRUGGLES of free trade unions in Western Europe to stop the surge of communism were recounted by Victor G. Reuther, until recently CIO European representative, before the 17th annual convention of the Texas CIO Council in Mineral Wells.

Reuther, now assistant to the CIO president, related some of his experiences in bringing CIO strength and help to unions engaged in the fight abroad.

Charges of Communist domination of the CIO, he declared, are nothing but attempts by demagogues to smear the one organization which has done an effective job against the red menace in this country.

Former Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D. Calif.) gave a detailed comparison of what the Eisenhower Administration and the Democratic administrations that preceded it have accomplished.

She described Republican rule as a "magnificent, unbelievable flop" and said America must stop "scaring itself to death," and courageously lead the world.

In another talk at a tea in her honor given by the wives of CIO members, she strongly urged the women to take more active roles in politics.

NATIONAL CIO Rep. Fred Peiper convinced the more than 400 delegates and guests that the issue in Port Arthur, where the CIO has been under heavy fire as the result of a strike of office, retail and restaurant employes, is one of "unionism, not communism." After he described the situation, the convention pledged the Council's unqualified support to the walkout.

Resolutions called for the broadening of the union education program through more one-day and week-end institutes, and urged increased participation of CIO members in community welfare projects and elections of school boards.

The convention supported Fair Employment Practices Commission legislation, demanded an end to segregation in the schools, asked for specific legislation to improve workmen's and unemployment compensation, and demanded a liberalized program of aid to farmers on state and national levels.

CIO strength in Texas has increased by more than 10,000 in the past year, to a total of more than 82,000. Twenty-five new locals affiliated with the Council.

Jim Smith, of the Steelworkers, was elected president. Sec.-Treas. D. Roy Harrington, of the Oil Workers, was reelected. Roy Evans, Auto Workers; Sherman Miles, Communications Workers, and Charles Tipton, Packinghouse Workers, were chosen administrative vice presidents.

CIO Goes To The Fairs . . .

PENNSYLVANIA — CIO Clothing Workers union label story and CIO-sponsored John W. Vandercook radio news program got big boost at the Reading Fair. Berks County Council members kept busy distributing CIO literature.

MISSISSIPPI—CIO fair booth points out unfairness of state tax structure with 72% of tax revenue coming from sales tax. CIO locals gave away a union-made suit each day and a trophy to high-scoring 4-H and FFA teams.

CIO Councils In Action

WITH 1954 ELECTIONS—and the primary deadlines—looming ever larger on the horizon, CIO councils and their PAC affiliates are stepping up their activities. They are finding out where congressmen stand on issues affecting labor and the American people.

Here is a partial report on widespread PAC activities:

CIO members in Indiana's 8th Congressional District now know how Rep. Merrill (R.) stands on two issues after his appearance at a meeting sponsored at Tell City by the 8th District PAC. He favored weakening Social Security and continuance of Taft-Hartley injunctions.

What Rep. Doyle told the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council should make CIO members in California redouble their PAC work. He said the Republican Party would like nothing better than to defeat him and Democratic Reps. King, Holifield, Yorty and Sheppard. King, Holifield and Yorty also addressed recent council meeting.

The New York State CIO Council last week called the inadequacy of unemployment compensation benefits in the State a "public scandal" and urged the establishment of an exclusive State fund to "cut $90 million fat" out of compensation costs. Henry Mayer, the council's legal and legislative consultant, presented the council's case before the Moreland Act Commission.

The Greater Buffalo CIO Council is joined in battle with the Associated Industries and the Chamber of Commerce over increasing the purity of a branch of the Niagara River, which furnishes drinking water at Tonawanda, Niagara Falls and Lockport. The Council wants pure water, the industry groups want it "just a little better than an open sewer—anything can be dumped into it that doesn't float."

The Cleveland CIO Council has opened a club room for retired union members at the Cleveland CIO Hall.

The Michigan CIO Council is collecting funds from its affiliates to provide cigarets at Christmas for bed-ridden veterans in hospitals in the State. The fund was started 12 years ago.

The Middlesex County (N. J.) CIO Servicemen's Committee makes life happier for GI's at Camp Kilmer by holding parties and dances the year round. Recently it held a canteen revue at which it raised $200 for the United Fund and an additional sum for the new Child Care Center, New Brunswick.

Coming Events: The Indiana and the Indianapolis CIO Councils will hold a citizenship training conference in Indianapolis, Jan. 15-17 . . . The Milwaukee County CIO Council and the CIO Dept. of Education & Research will hold an education conference at Milwaukee Jan. 22-24.

Flint Fund Aids Orphans

The latest project of the Flint Red Feather Disaster Fund is to set aside $100,000 for the education of 50 children orphaned by last June's tornado.

The CIO Auto Workers and their Michigan locals gave $100,000 to the fund, which reached the $1 million mark.

After the court passes on the eligibility of a child to receive aid from the fund, the report goes to David MacDonald of the UAW Regional Office, chairman of the fund advisory committee, and other members of the committee for scholarship grants.

Oak Ridgers Warned On Atomic Grab

"CIO OPPOSES allowing private power groups to virtually monopolize the decisions on how to utilize the products of our $12 billion investment in atomic energy."

That's what Victor Reuther, administrative assistant to CIO Pres. Reuther, told the educational conference of Dist. 9, CIO Chemical Workers, at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

"The future of atomic energy may not be left to the experts who by their vast proximity to the questions may leave them unable to see the problems in their world perspective," Reuther said, because of the drive of private utilities to control atomic energy.

He praised Pres. Eisenhower for his "courageous" proposal to the United Nations that atomic energy be pooled for peaceful purposes.

UGCCW PRES. Elwood D. Swisher said that he hoped that many reactors to convert atomic energy to power would be built, "but there is every indication that private industry is not ready to invest its money."

"If the government is to build these reactors, then the government should retain the ownership of all fissionable material, the reactors themselves and control over all phases of atomic research."

Rep. Baker (R. Tenn.) said that he expected the fate of the control of atomic power would be decided at the next session of Congress.

More than 100 UGCCW members attended the conference. Speakers included UGCCW Vice Pres. Joe Joy, Dir. Elwood Hain of UGCCW Reg. 9; Pres. Emerson Pownall, UGCCW Local 228; Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Reuther; Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of research and education; Ben Sigal, UGCCW general counsel; and Leo Goodman, UGCCW legislative director.

Equal Pay Measures Backed

LEGISLATIVE guarantees of equal pay for women were demanded last week by Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers.

Beirne took "sharp issue" with AFL Pres. George P. Meany who had been quoted as saying that "equal pay to women workers is properly within the province of collective bargaining and not of police action by government." Meany wrote Rep. Bolton (R. O.) opposing her plan to press for an equal-pay amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Pointing out that the membership of CWA-CIO is 65% women, Beirne said Meany's position was "unrealistic" and "contrary to all . . . special state and national legislation giving . . . protection to women workers. Meany's philosophy, carried to the ultimate, would throw all these laws out the window."

"Looks like the Senator is going to have something else to read into the Congressional Record."

Co-op Hospital Backers Win Two Harbors Election

CITIZENS of Two Harbors, Minn., have overridden the opposition of an American Medical Society affiliate, a U. S. Steel Corp. subsidiary, and business interests to vote an appropriation of $200,000 to help finance the new cooperative-owned Community Health Center and Hospital.

They acted in a special referendum which ended with the pro-hospital forces winning by 1236 to 1153 votes and the losers threatening court action. The money will come from the profits of the municipally-owned liquor store and will be paid in 10 annual installments of $20,000 each.

THE CIO and AFL played important roles in the campaign that led to victory for the 65 to 70% of Two Harbors area residents who belong to the co-op. Most of the members belong to the railroad brotherhoods and shop craft unions, for they are employed by the Duluth, Missabi & Iron Range Railroad.

The railroad is a U. S. Steel subsidiary and has refused to contribute to the $700,000 fund being raised to replace the 50-year-old group hospital and expand its health facilities. Local merchants, taking their cue from the city's largest employer, have joined in the fight against it.

The St. Louis (Minn.) County Medical Society has blackballed physicians associated with the hospital and health center because of its control by a lay board of directors, and joined in the campaign against the referendum.

The physicians have filed suit against the society to compel it to admit them and to collect damages in repayment for loss suffered because of the blackballing.

UPA Awards For '53 Issued

WINNERS of the CIO Paperworker's third annual UPA Awards were announced last week.

Top honors went to Sec.-Treas. W. Porter Rice of Local 770 in Fort Worth, Tex., and Rec. Sec. William Woods of Local 179, Kansas City, Mo. Each will receive an engraved plaque from UPA-CIO and a $100 U. S. savings bond.

In announcing the awards Pres. Harry D. Sayre and Sec.-Treas. Frank Grasso of UPA cited the winners as "outstanding citizens of their communities as well as active and loyal trade unionists." Rice is active in church work as well as in union circles in Texas. Woods has been prominent in civic activities as well as an enthusiastic volunteer organizer for UPA.

CIO Sets Housing Conference As Cole Group Reports To Ike

PLANS for a CIO national housing conference were unveiled last week in the wake of release of a report on housing to the President.

Housing in America in 1954 will be considered in all of its aspects Jan. 8 in Washington at the CIO conference. Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of the CIO Steelworkers, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, will preside.

Albert M. Cole, federal housing chief and chairman of Pres. Eisenhower's advisory committee on government housing policies and programs, will address the conference. Thimmes served as a member of the 23-member panel headed by Cole which last week made its report to the President.

Other speakers will include Leon Keyserling, former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, and Pres. Ira S. Robbins of the National Housing Conference.

COLE RELEASED the results of the panel's nine weeks of study at a Washington press conference. The report, several hundred pages long, single spaced and weighing more than two and a half pounds, was at once disclaimed by Cole as "the Administration program."

He said it was in no sense a unanimous report and that there had been numerous dissents among panel members.

Sec. Ben Fischer of the CIO Housing Committee said "the Administration's own program was anxiously awaited." He added that it now appeared "as if the Administration sights in the total housing field for 1954 are too low to meet either the needs of the people or the urgent need for an effective anti-depression program."

Thimmes' own comments on the report and on the country's future housing needs are expected to be made directly in a report to Pres. Eisenhower.

Rather than being the last word on the housing situation, the Cole report was regarded as the opening maneuver in this field. The Administration program and legislative proposals are expected to be announced "shortly after the first of the year" when the President addresses Congress.

Highlights Of The Report

1. Reliance primarily on private builders to meet the nation's housing needs.
2. New and possibly higher interest rates on FHA and VA mortgages.
3. Establishment of a new national mortgage agency, federally-chartered but privately-financed.
4. Reorganization of existing government housing agencies.
5. Acknowledged the need for subsidized low-cost housing and recommended heavy spending by private builders for restoration of run-down neighborhoods plus continuation of low-rent public housing construction.

CIO Backs $10,000 Pay Rise For Congress, U. S. Judges

CIO SUPPORT for a Senate bill raising the salaries of members of Congress and federal judges by $10,000 a year was spelled out for the Commission on Judicial and Congressional Salaries last week by CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg.

"The labor organization which I am representing," he said, "stands, as I expect you gentlemen know, for good wages. We believe that the laborer is worthy of his hire—and that congressmen and federal judges are, too."

The 18-man commission was set up by Pres. Eisenhower at the request of Congress to study the salary increase problem. Bernard G. Segal, Philadelphia lawyer, is chairman. CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald are members.

Congressmen now get $12,500 a year in salary, plus $2500 for expenses. Salaries of judges range from $15,000 in district courts to $25,500 for the Chief Justice of the United States, who gets $500 more than his Supreme Court colleagues.

The CIO position, Goldberg told the commission, is that a salary scale "under which only the independently wealthy can afford to serve . . . violates the principles of democracy."

"Further," he added, "it deprives the government of the services of many of its ablest citizens. Our country can ill afford, in the light of grave and complex issues confronting us, to restrict public service to a small segment of the population.

"Restriction of public service to the ranks of the wealthy is additionally objectionable from the standpoint of the working people, in that it means no one drawn from their ranks can serve. The consequence is not only that many able and public spirited men are excluded from public service, but that it becomes one-sided."

GOLDBERG also urged that provisions be made for widows and minor children of congressmen and federal judges who die in office. Failure of current legislation to provide such pensions, he said, is a "major gap."

Pres. George Meany of the AFL also was among a large number of supporters of the bill. The only opposition was raised by Rep. Dawson (R. Utah), who said he was getting along all right on his salary with the aid of a small outside income.

White House Aide Says Joe Votes Right—Not So You Can See It

A BACK-SLID Democrat who helped write the Taft-Hartley Act and is now running Pres. Eisenhower's machinery for maintaining liaison with Congress has taken on another job—buttering up Sen. McCarthy.

The butter-spreader is Gerald D. Morgan, one of the President's administrative assistants. He shares direction of the White House liaison work with Capitol Hill with Jack Martin, who formerly was the late Sen. Taft's administrative chief.

In 1947 the Republican National Committee hired Morgan to put the House part of T-H into legal language, a highlight of his career that remained hidden until the Democrats made an issue of it in 1949.

The Wisconsin Republican's challenge to the President for party leadership — which he blandly denied was a defi—had no sooner overheated radio, television and newspaper telegraph wires than Martin, looking forward to next year, calmly asserted he does not expect McCarthy to be one of the White House's congressional problems.

"We have never had any trouble with Sen. McCarthy over the legislative program," he said. "His voting record is as good as any Republican in Congress."

That, according to a lot of people, is just the trouble. It may be good enough for the Republicans, but it isn't good enough for the people.

McCarthy has been in the Sente for seven years. The CIO News Voting Record shows that for six of those seven years he voted "right" on just nine of 65 key issues, and "partly right" on two others. On 45 of the issues he voted "wrong," and on two he was "partly wrong." Seven times he was absent when a crucial vote was taken.

That makes him "right" a little less than 10% of the time, which isn't often enough, and "wrong" about 72% of the time, which is too often.

Of the 15 bills dealing directly with labor—industrial or farm—McCarthy was "wrong" 14 times. The other time he was absent.

State Court Can't Enjoin Where T-H Covers The Issue

THE SUPREME Court last week issued an important decision on the jurisdiction of state labor laws.

It ruled that in most cases, an employer cannot enjoin a union in a state court for unfair labor practices if the situation is covered by the Taft-Hartley Act.

The decision involved the Central Storage & Transfer Co., Harrisburg, Pa., which had obtained an injunction in the Dauphin County Court against the AFL Teamsters to halt picketing.

The trial court found the action was calculated to force the company to make its employes join the union in violation of the State law. This, it said, also was an unfair practice under T-H.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court reversed the lower court on the ground that, whether or not the union's conduct violated Taft-Hartley, the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board is exclusive. Justice Jackson agreed with the State Supreme Court in a unanimous decision for the U. S. Supreme Court.

The union was represented by Sidney G. Handler, Harrisburg labor attorney. Arthur J. Goldberg and David E. Feller, CIO general counsel and assistant general counsel respectively, filed a brief for CIO in support of the AFL union's position.

"ON THE BASIS of the allegations," Jackson said, "the petitioners (the company) could have presented this grievance to the National Labor Relations Board. The respondents (the union) were subject to being summoned before that body to justify their conduct. We think the grievance was not subject to litigation in the tribunals of the State."

Chrysler Lays Off 9200; U. S. Reports Unemployment Rising

NEW LAYOFFS at Chrysler were strongly protested last week by the CIO Auto workers, as new government economic reports showed a decline in industrial production and climbing unemployment.

More than 9200 Chrysler workers were laid off, while additional thousands are working short weeks of three or four days.

Norman Matthews, UAW-CIO Chrysler Dept. director, blamed the situation on "reckless and irresponsible over-scheduling of production during the first half of 1953."

Meantime, here are other signs on the economic horizon:

UNEMPLOYMENT: The Labor Dept. reported that non-farm employment dropped to 49.2 million in November—a decline of 300,000 from October. And 1.102 million persons claimed unemployment benefits—an increase of 262,016 over the preceding month.

WORK WEEK & WAGES: The Labor Dept. also reported that the factory work week dropped to 39.9 hours, the first November in four years in which the work week was not appreciably above 40 hours. Average weekly factory wages remained at $71.02.

ECONOMIC ADVISERS: The President's Council of Economic Advisers reported that unemployment rose in November by 266,000, the largest monthly increase in 1953, and that the index of mine and factory production, prepared by the Federal Reserve Board, drifted from 231 in October to 228 in November, compared with 1935-39 production as 100.

STEEL: The American Iron & Steel Institute said that operations scheduled last week would be at 85.0% of capacity, the smallest output since the week of Aug. 4, 1952.

PROFITS: The Association of American Railroads reported rail profits zooming, with the net profits for 130 Class I railroads for the first 10 months of 1953 being $750 million compared with $630 million in the same period in 1952.

Matthews said a Chrysler spokesman reported the firm was "very sorry" that layoffs were necessary, "particularly at this time."

"The corporation's regrets will put no toys under the Christmas tree or any turkey on the table," Matthews said. "And now thousands have been put on the street. We wonder if the corporation's publicity and advertising men have some suggestions as to what these workers can tell their children on Christmas morning."

At Hudson 3000 have been laid off in the past two months, and at Packard 8000 have been laid off since last May. The Studebaker plant at South Bend, Ind., last week suspended production until Jan. 5, laying off 12,000 out of a work force of 15,000.

Labor's World—

Finns Called 'Mad Enough' To Stand Up To Soviets

THE FINNS are "mad enough and obstinate enough" to maintain their independence in spite of anything their next-door neighbor, Soviet Russia, can do, according to Olavi Jarvela, director of organization, and public relations for the Finnish Federation of Labor (SAK).

Jarvella is in this country on a State Dept. grant with Vice Pres. Orvo Gosta Lymi of the Finnish Textile Workers Union, who works in a cotton mill, and A. M. Salonen, head of the Bureau of Economic Research maintained jointly by the SAK and the consumer cooperative societies. They were guests at a luncheon in Washington given by the CIO Dept. of International Affairs.

"A few years ago, the situation in Finland with regard to the Communists was grave," Jarvella said, with Salonen interpreting. "Immediately after the war we never knew what might happen the next day.

But now Finland will never go Communist unless there is a major upheaval beyond our capacity.

"We feel we've been fighting for the rest of the world as well as for ourselves, but we believe freedom is worth fighting for, that no price is too high to pay for it, and that all the sacrifices we have made were well worth while."

Italy

Approximately six million Italian workers staged a one-day strike Dec. 15, their second major 24-hour walkout in a campaign for a sharp increase in the basic wage, now about $12.50 a month, and a resulting boost in take-home pay, which averages about $50 a month.

Most of the country's major industries were halted by the strike, which was called by the anti-Communist Italian Confederation of Labor Unions and the Communist-controlled General Confederation of Labor. It followed a one-day limited strike of about one million members of both groups on Dec. 11.

Great Britain

An all-time record of 9,524,000 members was established by the trade unions of Great Britain and Northern Ireland at the end of 1952, according to official preliminary figures made public by the Ministry of Labor.

Spain

The Franco government's ban on strikes was broken by 2000 shipyard workers in Bilbao who staged a sitdown strike when their overtime pay yas cut. They refused to return to work after being cleared from the yards by police. Some 25 members of a negotiating committee were arrested, and the rest discharged.

Indian Unionist Dies In Air Crash

Harinarnath Shastri, vice president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, general secretary of the Indian National Trade Union Congress and one of Asia's leading anti-Communists, was one of 13 persons killed in an Indian air line crash last week.

"His death is a great loss to the Indian trade union movement, which he long served in its struggles to improve the conditions of life of the workers," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said in a cable to INTUC expressing the CIO's shock at his death. "Please convey our heartfelt condolences to his family and to his fellow trade unionists."

Back Poll Tax Cut By Alabama Vote

Alabama voters last week approved a proposed constitutional amendment cutting the amount of delinquent poll tax that must be paid before voting.

The requirement was cut from 24 years' back tax, at $1.50 a year, to two years' levy.

UAW Holds Parley For Skilled Trades

"THE PRODUCTION worker needs the skilled worker, and the skilled worker needs the production worker."

That point was made by CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther to more than 800 delegates, staff representatives and visitors at the UAW's third annual skilled trades conference at Cleveland.

"The UAW is working out the problems of the skilled workers within the structure of an industrial union," Reuther said.

An evidence of the solidarity of the skilled workers with other UAW members was the $1000 collection taken up for North American Aviation strikers, whose walkout was settled a few days later.

Chairman of the meeting was UAW Vice Pres. Richard T. Gosser, director of the union's Skilled Trades Dept. Speakers included: UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey; Norman Mathhews, Chrysler Dept. director and a member of the union's skilled trades committee; Patrick J. O'Malley, UAW Reg. 2 director, and Ken Bannon, Ford Dept. director.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius For LPA

JUDGING FROM the many questions this department is getting about vacuum cleaners, about half the families in the country must be in the market for a new one and are especially interested in the canister type.

Chief question asked is what type to buy: upright, tank or canister. The answer depends on whether you want the cleaner chiefly for rugs, or for general household cleaning. If you have much carpeting the upright type generally is preferable. Uprights clean rugs better.

For general household cleaning, the tank or cylinder type cleaners are more convenient to use with attachments. Also, some of the more powerful tank types are a reasonable compromise for a home where a cleaner is most used for general cleaning, but where there are also some rugs.

The canister cleaners fall into the tank group. They are increasingly popular because of their quiet operation, compactness, and ease of emptying and storing. Instead of a dust bag they generally have disposal bags or dust bowls. (However, many tank cleaners and some uprights now also use paper linens to facilitate emptying.)

Tips On Trees

The Forest Service advises that the most important thing to look for in buying a Christmas tree is to see that it is fresh.

If the needles are turning brown, the tree has already dried out and is a fire hazard. To keep the tree fresh, saw off the butt at least an inch above the original cut and stand the tree in water as soon as possible. The container should be refilled daily.

Regardless of tree chosen, the desirable characteristics are: Retention of needles between time of cutting and the end of the holidays; filled-in and symmetrical shape; limbs strong enough to hold ornaments and lights; non-prickly foliage with a good green color; fragrant odor, and pliable branches.

In vacuum cleaners it's very noticeable that price is no particular criterion of quality. Some of the costliest, carrying price tags of well over $100, are no better made nor more powerful than some of those selling for much less. It's just that some of the costlier ones are sold under expensive distribution methods.

Getting A Discount

You can further cut the cost of your cleaner by getting a discount; many independent retailers give discounts on vaccum cleaners of 20 to 30%. The large mail-order houses and consumer co-ops, and department-store chains like Macy's, also have their own-brand vacuum cleaners at reasonable prices. These are made for them by the large national manufacturers but sell for less than the list prices of the national brands.

In selecting a cleaner, try it yourself to make sure it cleans well and is convenient to handle. Are the attachments easy to insert? If an upright, is the housing low enough to get under furniture and does it have a headlight? Is the dust bag easy to remove? The cord long enough?

Another desirable construction feature is a dust chamber sealed off from the motor to protect it from dust, which will cut down repair bills and help make the motor last longer.

One of the most reasonably-priced canister cleaners with excellent convenient features is the Eureka. Even at full list price it is $20-$30 less than many other national brands. The Lewyt is another well-made canister type, with a dust-protected motor. It costs more than Eureka but many dealers cut prices on it.

In tank types, Hoover is one of the most powerful, with a full horsepower motor, and is sturdy and convenient to use. However, it is one of the most expensive. At a lower price, the Hamilton Beach is well made and is outstandingly convenient in use because of its swivel wheels.

CCL Urges Dominion To Take Lead For Industry Councils

ESTABLISHMENT of a series of industry councils, with the dominion taking the initiative in their formation, was urged last week by the Canadian Congress of Labor.

The request was one of a series of points the CCL made in bringing its legislative program to the attention of national leaders and commenting on proposals made by the government in laying down its program at the opening of Parliament.

Industry councils were specifically sought in national industries such as steel, autos, textiles and clothing. On them would serve representatives of labor, management and government, and their main function would be to promote greater productivity and efficiency.

The CCL particularly asked for such a council for the farm implement industry, where employment had dropped 25% by August, and suggested the inclusion of a farmers' spokesman.

As in other years, the CCL asked for a national labor code. It called attention to the "striking anomaly" in gold mining, where several thousand members of the CIO Steelworkers are on strike. The dominion government is subsidizing the industry, the brief pointed out, thus making "the government an interested party," but labor relations are under the jurisdiction of the provinces.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

MY FAMILY has long considered Chicago our home town. We spent so much time there during the early days of steel and packinghouse organization that a recent visit to the Illinois State CIO convention was like going home to spend some time with the folks.

Like the other state conventions I've had the time to attend, Illinois worked hard at hammering out a program to meet the needs of CIO and its membership. The political battle in Illinois promises to be a tough struggle. There is considerable talk of money being poured in to defeat liberal candidates. The men and women of Illinois have their work cut out for them.

From Chicago, I traveled South to Mexico to confer with our brother trade unionists from Latin America on one of the gravest problems that confronts us—the wetback problem, where unscrupulous employers and lax public officials run hundreds of thousand of illegal immigrants into the country to work the crops along the border.

The effect this has on our own farm labor should be obvious. With an almost unlimited supply of illegal wetback labor available, the employers are in a position to exploit wages and working conditions as they see fit. The illegal workers themselves suffer conditions that are unspeakable. They are held in a status that is close to peonage. Over their heads is the constant threat of exposure to the police. Such workers are not likely to be able to stand up for their rights.

AS TO THE NORTH AMERICAN farm workers, our own countrymen, they are the forgotten men of our land. You may have noted, in this column, the succession of reports from California and Arizona of CIO's organizing efforts in the packing sheds and fields. But it it not enough to organize these men and women. We must protect them from the flood of illegal immigration which is a constant threat to such conditions as they are able to win.

Our brothers from Latin America are painfully aware of the dangers of the situation. They realize it affects the abundance of good will which should normally exist between the working peoples of our continent.

We of CIO have suggested a course of action. We believe that labor should sit down with the governments of the United States and Mexico, which are primarily involved, and that we should tighten up the restrictions on the importation or exportation of labor; that we should see to it that adequate protection is offered at the border to prevent the mass illegal immigrations that are now commonplace, and that severe punishment be given those guilty of the terrible exploitation.

The agricultural workers who harvest and pack our crops are already at the mercy of the seasons. They are stripped of many of the protections that apply to industrial workers. Their wages, in many cases their actual yearly earnings, are less than poverty.

THE UNION LONG AGO taught us that there is no such thing as economic isolation. One group of workers does not suffer alone, while others prosper—not for any length of time. Driven from the fields and farms, the illegal immigrants are moving into factories and laboring jobs. Their poverty is like a cancer, as all poverty is.

From Chicago to Mexico is not as long a trip as it might seem to be. Our common problems and the bridge of understanding we are creating brings us close together—so that we may stand together, work together, and fight together against poverty and injustice—and for a better way of life for all men of good will.

Speaking of good will, a Merry Christmas to you all—and some "Peace on Earth."

UAW Gains 4% Hike As Long North American Tieup Ends

THE LONG strike by CIO Auto Workers against plants of North American Aviation, Inc., in California and Ohio ended last week.

Settlement terms included a 4% wage increase, averaging 8c to 20c an hour. Approximately 33,000 UAW-CIO members were involved in the strike, which began Oct. 23 in Columbus, O., and Los Angeles and Fresno, Calif.

Vice Pres. John W. Livingston, director of the UAW Aircraft Div., termed the settlement superior to those recently negotiated with a number of other aircraft companies.

He contended that production of Sabrejet and Super Sabre planes would not have been halted if the Defense Dept. "had measured up to its responsibilities in terms of the security of the nation and of the legitimate needs of workers in the aircraft industry."

UAW officials said government officials should have entered the dispute to force an earlier settlement in the interests of national defense.

Before the strike ended, Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) supported the demand of UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther for investigation of the Defense Dept. role in the strike.

Kefauver urged a special meeting of the Senate Armed Forces Committee "to explore the problem and determine our future action." Reuther, who is also CIO president, charged that the Defense Dept. had been "a silent partner in the strike."

Wood Union Votes On Wage Demands

AN EXPERIMENT in grass-roots democratic action on wage negotiations was begun last week by the CIO Woodworkers.

The membership will vote by referendum ballot their preference on the major points to be considered when negotiations begin in February.

Pres. A. F. Hartung of IWA-CIO termed the plan "the essence of the democratic procedures in CIO trade unionism." He added "I knew of no other union using so democratic a system and believe the Woodworkers are pioneering it."

Ballots will be submitted to the membership by the Northwest Regional Negotiating Committee, which is made up of an elected negotiator from each of the eight IWA districts involved, with Hartung as chairman.

The committee chose three points for balloting: A general wage increase; correction of wage inequities on the basis of job analyses; three weeks paid vacation after five years seniority.

Members in all locals taking part in Pacific Northwest negotiations will vote whether they want the talks to open on none, one, two or all three of the points.

CWA Seeks Records On Health Plans

THE CIO Communications Workers have served notice on the AT&T that its major goals for 1954 are company-paid hospitalization and surgical benefits.

The various Bell Telephone companies and Western Electric, with which CWA holds contracts, are AT&T subsidiaries.

"We know that bargaining on this broad subject can consume considerable time," CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne wrote AT&T Pres. Cleo Craig. "We are trying to avoid unnecessay delays during the actual bargaining period by preparing well in advance.

"The purpose of this letter is to inform you of our intentions and to earnestly solicit your cooperation in facilitating the collection of the necessary statistics, as well as creating an atmosphere in which this important area of employe protection can be discussed, and agreement reached as quickly as possible.

"As you no doubt know, most American workers employed by major corporations are already insured through partial or complete employer premium payments against financial hazards of hospitalization and surgical costs. We trust that the Bell System will be as eager as we are to afford telephone workers and their families the same kind of protection."

William Green's Widow Is Dead

Mrs. Jennie Mobley Green, 83, widow of former AFL Pres. William Green, died last week at her home in Coshocton, O. Six children survive.

Death last week also claimed Mrs. Helen Melley Kennedy, wife of Vice Pres. Thomas Kennedy of the Mine Workers, in Duesseldorf, Germany, after a short illness.

Confidence

Pat Napolitano of New York City wants to be sure that nothing interferes with delivery of his CIO News.

"Please mail me a 10 year subscription of your excellent newspaper, The CIO News.

"Enclosing check for $10.00."

Unofficially, Pat has been voted man-of-the-week by the staff. Officially, the circulation department reports he is in good standing as a subscriber until Dec. 14, 1963.

N. Y. Transit Parleys Stalled

A HOLIDAY deadlock developed last week in the negotiations of the CIO Transport Workers for 44,000 employes of the New York City's publicly - owned transportation system.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill charged that responsibility for the deadlock rests on two members of the state-created Transit Authority, which operates the city's street car, bus and subway lines.

He said they said "no" to the union's 15 demands, which included a 25c hourly wage increase, three weeks' vacation for all workers, cutting in half the time to reach top rates in all grades, and payment by the authority of all the costs of health insurance.

The present memorandum of understanding with the authority expires Dec. 31. Quill said he would recommend that TWU Local 100 follow the "no contract, no work policy" if no agreement is reached when the present pact expires.

Before the negotiations were deadlocked, TWU's executive board urged the local to use every means to gain its demands and put at its disposal a $500,000 fund. The board also urged all locals throughout the country to press for a 40-hour week and the $2 hourly wage awarded by arbitrators in a dispute with nine privately-owned New York City bus lines.

Growing Layoffs Plague Illinois CIO Parley

By ED LASHMAN

GROWING unemployment was the chief problem that occupied the 11th constitutional convention of the Illinois CIO Council in Chicago.

Nearly 1000 delegates, alternates and guests at the three-day meeting of the 300,000-member Council heard speakers from labor and government outline the problem and recommend a variety of solutions from increased unemployment compensation benefits to the guaranteed annual wage.

Council Pres. Joseph Germano, who also is CIO Steelworkers Dist. 31 director, started it in his keynote speech:

"When you have no jobs, you have no money to spend. Then the factories go down because they can't sell their goods. The President of the United States must take responsibility for this situation."

Vice Pres. Duane (Pat) Greathouse, who is CIO Auto Workers Region 4 director, added to it with a report on 20% layoff in the agricultural implement industry in the Quad-Cities area of Illinois, "the Detroit of the farm implement industry."

Greathouse charged industry with "deliberately creating unemployment in order to force unions to accept wage cuts in the next round of negotiations."

CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll said "industry is slowing up, inventories are going up, production is being cut down and personal income is going down."

Kroll noted there were an additional 300,000 unemployed between September and October of this year, "yet there are people in Washington who say we don't have to worry until we have a 25% decline in our economy."

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) urged industry, government and labor to begin planning now what to do in the event of a real depression. He suggested that unemployment compensation benefits generally be raised to "at least half the average weekly wage," that benefit periods be extended in "distressed industries."

He recommended also that excise taxes be reduced, personal exemptions for income tax be raised, and that programs of slum clearance, public housing and highway improvement be initiated to provide employment for displaced workers.

Potofsky's Program

CIO Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky detailed an eight-point program to "reverse the downward economic drift and insure continued prosperity."

He advocated government-labor-management planning for a peace economy, government "pump-priming" including public housing, road building, schools and hospitals, an increased federal minimum wage of $1.25, expansion of social security, loans to other friendly nations "so they can buy more American goods," maintenance of farm income and elimination of "hobbling anti-labor legislation."

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who is also president of the Electrical Workers, charged that "the Republicans hope to take the public's mind off their real problems and off the mighty important fact that the new Administration hasn't any solution to these problems."

Their technique, he said, is "investigations conducted in front of television cameras. They hope to do what the old Romans used to do—give the masses a circus so they will forget their hunger and forget who made them hungry."

The convention's employment committee report recommended enactment of a state minimum wage law and pressed for action on the guaranteed annual wage. The committee also urged improvement of unemployment compensation benefits to "maintain the standard of living."

More Pink Slips

A State CIO Community Services Committee report warned that "the pink slip notices of unemployment are growing by the thousands every day." The report said that the situation in Illinois was growing more serious as "more and more unemployed are exhausting their compensation payments."

Strong support for CIO's demands for a guaranteed annual wage was voiced by CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe. "Workers live by the year," he said, "and they ought to be paid by the year."

Riffe warned that the GAW "won't come easily." He said that employers "can plan production on a yearly basis so you can have work all year around. That's the way to avoid a depression."

Among a number of important actions, the convention advocated replacement of the retail sales tax with "a more progressive form of taxation" and hit out at the state's corporate tax structure as making Illinois "a bonanza state for business."

The delegates also adopted a 20-point state legislative program, chief points of which were aid to education, establishment of secret primary election balloting, a state fair employment practices bill, a series of bills dealing with health and safety in industrial plants and revision of the 1870 Illinois state Constitution.

Germano Honored

A separate resolution dealt with the problems of state employes. It recommended wage incerases and improved vacations, along with several changes in appointment and promotion policies.

At a testimonial dinner, Germano was presented with an award of merit by the Jewish Labor Committee of Chicago for "his devotion to the ideals of democracy, to the inherent right of all people for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

David J. McDonald, CIO Steelworkers president and featured speaker at the banquet, hailed his current series of tours with U. S. Steel Pres. Ben Fairless through the company's plants as "one of the greatest things that every happened in the labor movement."

McDonald paid tribute to Germano for "his great strength and his leadership" in helping workers make of the world a better place to live.

The Choice

In warning of the danger to civil liberties in America, CIO Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky said:

"We have to decide whether we want an America of Jefferson and Jackson, or an America of Brownell and Jenner. We have to decide whether we want an America of Lincoln and Wilson, or an America of Harold Velde.

"We have to decide whether we want an America of Roosevelt, Truman and Stevenson, or whether we want an America of Joe McCarthy."

Retirement

The rumor that Inland Steel Pres. Clarence Randall might seek the Republican nomination to the U. S. Senate was reported at the Illinois CIO convention.

Council Pres. Joseph Germano, noting that Randall is up for retirement at his corporation job, commented:

"All I can say is that if he's depending on the votes of the people in Local 1010 at Indiana Harbor, he'll be retired altogether."

Kentucky CIO Blasts Drive For 'Right-To-Work' Measure

THE KENTUCKY CIO Council supported a nine-point state legislative program and disapproved a proposed "right-to-work" bill advocated by the Associated Industries of Kentucky.

State CIO Pres. Al Whitehouse, who is also CIO Steelworkers Dist. 25 director, predicted that Gov. Lawrence Wetherby "isn't going to let anti-labor legislation pass in Kentucky."

He added he was "not afraid" the Legislature would outlaw the union shop as the manufacturers' group wants.

Heading the list of state legislative actions was a call for a 75c minimum wage law for intrastate workers. A state labor relations act to "encourage the practice of collective bargaining and the self-organization of workers in intrastate industry" also was urged.

Performance

Dan Powell, CIO-PAC southern regional director, told the Kentucky CIO Council convention "there's one promise Eisenhower has kept. He's reduced taxes."

Then came Powell's explanation: "When you don't work and you don't get paid, you don't have to pay taxes."

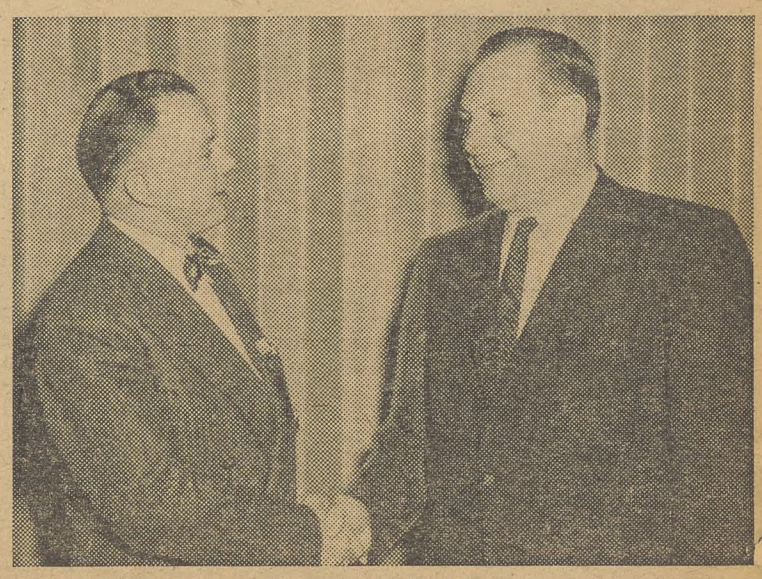
Resolutions opposing state and national sales taxes and city payroll taxes brought considerable supporting floor discussion.

Other measures the council supports include liberalization of workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation benefits, repeal of Kentucky's wage garnishment law, lowering of the voting age to 18, legislation curbing court powers to issue injunctions, a state fair employment practices act, and amendment of the Common Carrier Act "to prevent its use as a strikebreaking weapon."

Lorne Nelles, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee in Atlanta, urged the delegates to contribute dollars voluntarily for political action "unless you want to go back to the days when management took money out of your pay envelope to support reactionary candidates."

Nelles said the 1954 elections would be "crucial ones in which the issues will be layoffs, a $9 billion loss of farm income and the danger of a serious depression."

Other convention speakers included CIO Reg. Dir. Paul Christopher, CIO-PAC Southern Reg. Dir. Daniel A. Powell and William B. Taylor, National CIO assistant director of organization.



WELCOMING HAND is extended to CIO Region 4 Dir. Paul Christopher, left, by Kentucky CIO Council Pres. Al Whitehouse. Christopher outlined plans for conferences on taxes, unemployment and social security.

CIO Raps NLRB Rulings

FIRMER TIES between U. S. and Mexican unions were forged during the first international conference held in Mexico City. Despite denial by the U. S. Ambassador of their right to assist in setting policy, the unions worked towards solution of the wetback problem, equalization of wages paid Mexicans by U. S. firms, enforcement of labor contracts and other mutual matters. CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe (center) confers with ORIT Sec.-Gen. Luis Alberto Monge (left) and CTM Rep. Alfonso Sanchez Madriaga. (Story and more pictures on Page 8.)

BUNDLED WARMLY against driving rain Irene Robicheaux (left) pickets the jewelry store where she worked in Port Arthur, Tex., before 23 establishments were struck for living wages several weeks ago. Her husband is seriously ill but Irene never misses her picket duty. Strike or no strike, Santa was on hand for the children of the Port Arthur strikers. A stageload of presents is readied by the committee for distribution. Contributions from CIO and its affiliated unions made the holiday scene at the right possible. The strikers are members of the CIO Sabine Area LIU 1814.

BLS Price Index Falls Slightly, But It's Still Way Up Yonder

THE MONTH - by - month rise of consumer living costs has paused on a high plateau, with a slight drop in the latest recorded figure of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics' consumer price index.

In mid-November, the BLS report last week, the index dropped fractionally to an even 115.0 of the 1947-49 average. That compares with the mid-October figure of 115.4, recorded after eight straight months of increases.

Despite the latest monthly report of a .3% drop, living costs are still on an all-time high plateau—resulting from the killing of price and rent controls by the GOP Administration months ago. The latest index figure is .6% above a year ago and 13% above June, 1950.

Declining food prices, for meat and eggs, were the main factor in the BLS drop. Other costs, for housing, medical care, goods and services, continued to rise.

Other economic indicators hinted that the BLS index may resume its monthly climb. The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index last week climbed for the seventh consecutive week, and BLS Commissioner Ewan Clague said retail food prices in December were going up again.

The National Industrial Conference Board reported that the purchasing power of the dollar in November was 55.1c, compared with 55.4c a year ago.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS Index.

GOP Tries To Bar 30,000 Votes In Attempt To Disqualify Chavez

REPUBLICAN members of the Senate Elections subcommittee, seeking to capture for the GOP the Senate seat won by Sen. Chavez (D. N.M.), have voted to disenfranchise nearly one out of every four persons who went to the polls in New Mexico last November.

Sole basis of this unprecedented action is the committee staff's charge that election officials—mostly Republicans—in 67 of the state's divisions failed to enforce "secrecy" provisions of the state voting laws—not that the voters had done anything illegal.

By a 2-to-1 vote, with Sen. Hennings (Mo.), the lone Democratic member, dissenting vigorously, the subcommittee decided to recommend tossing out 30,000 ballots the Republicans said had been cast improperly. If upheld by the Senate, the action would have the effect of giving the election to Patrick J. Hurley, defeated GOP candidate, by 5000 votes.

In hopes of increasing this margin—which is so small that it would make many Senators hesitate before voting to invalidate six times as many ballots—Chairman Barrett (R. Wyo.) has ordered his staff to canvass all election districts not yet studied. Those remaining represent about half of the ballots cast.

BARRETT said that the state law requires voting booths or compartments be provided for voters in each precinct. He said the subcommittee staff will go into every precinct to determine if this requirement was met. Ballots cast in those divisions where officials failed to provide so-called adequate voting booths would be disqualified.

In his dissent, Hennings declared flatly that the subcommittee had "found no proof of fraud." He said he does not think the Senate "should disenfranchise voters because of the failure of the election officials to fully comply with the technical election statutes."

"I further do not believe," he added, "that the U. S. Senate should assume jurisdiction to enforce the election laws of the State of New Mexico, especially since there has been no proof of fraud on the part of the election officials or Sen. Chavez sufficient to invalidate the election returns of the original ballots."

HENNINGS pointed out that elections in New Mexico have always been conducted in a manner similar to the election held last year, and even the Republicans on the committee concede that this is so.

Myron Ehrlich, minority counsel, pointed out that the Republicans produced "no proof of failure" to carry out the law on the part of state election officials.

No one on Barrett's staff is commenting on the fact that the election was held under a Republican state administration and that a majority of the election officials, whose alleged "failure" to enforce the law is being used to challenge the ballots, were Republicans.

Douglas, Bender Announce Candidacies For Senate

DEMOCRATIC hopes for 1954 spurted last week when Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), one of the outstanding members of the upper house, announced he will be a candidate for a second term in his party's primary elections next fall.

SEN. PAUL H. DOUGLAS

Douglas said his personal inclinations suggested "an easier and more pleasant type of life, but acute problems of the times have shaped my present resolution."

His decision was made, he said, after a tour of the State during which he found fears among farmers, workers and small businessmen that "can only be decreased by effective action against the economic problems that underlie them."

Two candidates for the Illinois Republican senatorial nomination have already come to light. They are Joseph T. Meek, executive secretary of the Illinois Federation of Retail Associations, and Edward A. Hayes, former national commander of the American Legion.

In Ohio, Rep. Bender announced that he will seek the Republican nomination for the Senate seat now held by Sen. Burke, who previously had said he will seek the Democratic nomination.

Can Strike Aid Urged

FOOD AND CASH contributions for 1300 can company workers on strike in Milwaukee have been called for by the Wisconsin CIO Council.

Meantime, negotiations were broken off in the strike by the CIO Steelworkers against Continental Can Co. and American Can Co., the country's largest producers of tin and paper containers. The strike affects 33,000 USA-CIO members in 72 U. S. and Canadian plants of the two firms.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

IT IS THIS REPORTER'S considered opinion that the press has been less than adequate in its portrayal of the low-down political attack by Mr. Eisenhower's self-righteous Post Office Dept. upon a citizen named "Cowboy" Pink Williams of Caddo, Okla. We shall here attempt to remedy the deficiency.

"Cowboy" is something of a character. He raises cattle and he thinks about politics and circulates irreverent comments about politicians. There have been other such characters in the Southwest: Ed Howe was one of them, William Allen White of the Emporia (Kan.) Gazette, a famed small-town editor, was another of a somewhat milder but still recognizable stamp. The type is American, old fashioned and valuable.

Pink Williams voted for Mr. Eisenhower last year, but quickly became disillusioned as farm (and livestock) prices tobogganed. Exercising his rights of free speech, Pink Williams had some cards printed, expressing derogatory ideas about the Eisenhower Administration, and invited customers to buy them from him in bulk lots, mail order, via the Caddo post office.

The sentiments and pictures on the cards were quasi-vulgar. They included a picture of a donkey and an invitation to cattlemen to have their donkeys kicked free of charge at a picnic on "Salt Creek" the "day after you have been foreclosed by Eisenhower." "Donkey" was not the word Pink Williams used.

'Nuff Said

One of Pres. Eisenhower's floor managers at the 1952 Republican convention announced last week he was quitting the party because of his "keen disappointment" with the Administration.

H. Glenn Weber, leader of the liberal wing of the GOP in Missouri, said he would support Democratic candidates for Congress in 1954.

"There can no longer be any doubt," Weber said, "that reactionary Old Guard Republicans are in complete control of the Administration in Washington and of the party organization nationally . . ." He added that he felt the President "has not only let me down but thousands of other Republicans who helped elect him . . ."

So The P. O. Moves In . . .

So the Post Office Dept., in all its majesty, moved in against Pink. He was transmitting unpermitted material through the mails, it was charged. Besides, he was using a pseudonym, "Cowboy," in his solicitations for orders—and the use of a pseudonym is forbidden by regulations.

First the Post Office impounded Pink's mail—including the cash orders that might be enclosed. Then it solemnly had a hearing in Washington, to which Pink had to travel to defend himself, to decide whether the original impounding decision was justified. The examiner has not yet made a finding, but Pink's mail—and cash—are still impounded.

A more transparent and stupid political persecution cannot be imagined. The Post Office, with former Oklahoma Congressman Ross Rizley functioning as acting solicitor, apparently decided that Mr. Eisenhower and the Republicans ought to be protected against jibes, japes and mockery moving through the mails.

The "vulgarity" of Pink Williams' cards didn't approach the vulgarity of the New York stage, nor some of the Hollywood movies, nor a lot of the nationally famous magazines that carry in advertising or text—or both—cheesecake art of undraped women and double-meaning phrases.

Fearful Of Criticism

Postmaster Gen. Summerfield has plenty of money, paid by the voters, to fight the case against Pink Williams to the Supreme Court. Williams will have to pay his own freight, hire his own lawyers, bear his expenses while Summerfield continues to impound his mail in Caddo.

One suspects that the Republicans don't really object to "vulgarity"—some of them are vulgar themselves—but to attacks on the GOP.

Pink Williams claims he has every right to use the pseudonym "Cowboy," because he is well known by that nickname in and around Caddo.

This observer wishes him luck—and confusion and court rebukes to the smug, arbitrary and intolerant Summerfield and Rizley—the latter of whom, incidentally, has just been promoted to Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

Hail Bertie, Hail

It has sometimes been suggested that Col. Robert R. McCormick, New Deal-hating and Eisenhower-hating publisher of the Chicago Tribune and Washington Times-Herald, has one of the finest minds of medieval times. He just never has made the grade, intellectually, into the 20th Century.

Well, the good colonel's Christmas gift to Times-Herald employes was a handsomely printed collection of the publisher's favorite gems of literature. Included is the nominating speech for James G. Blaine at the Republican National Convention in Cincinnati, June 15, 1876. (About all the rest of us remember about Blaine is the little ditty labeling him the "continental liar from the state of Maine.")

Also included, from "gems" of the military mind are quotes from Gen. Pershing and Gen. Douglas MacArthur—and sandwiched in between a "gem" from Col. McCormick himself! The Times-Herald boys and girls had a hearty Christmas sense of humor.

'Brainwashing' By Bosses—

CIO Protests Tough New NLRB Decisions

ADMINISTRATIVE amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act to put workers open to "brain-washing" by their bosses was bitterly denounced last week by the CIO.

The blast was touched off by a Republican-controlled National Labor Relations Board decision junking the tried and tested requirement that employers who make anti-union speeches to their employes on company time must give the union a chance to reply.

In its place, the board promulgated a new doctrine letting the employer tell his workers anything he wants—short of outright and flagrant coercion—without being liable to a charge of unfair labor practices. If a boss harangues employes within 24 hours of a representation election, the board may set aside the results should the union lose.

The new policy statement is but the latest in a series of administrative rulings and court decisions that have chipped away more and more of the legal protections enacted to safeguard union rights and promote collective bargaining under the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

Dissent

NLRB Member Abe Murdock, in his dissent in the Livingston Shirt Co. case, expressed tart disbelief that the majority decision "is consistent with the declared congressional policy which is not that of neutrality, but of 'encouraging the practice and procedure of collective bargaining.' "

"Practically every employer speech on company time and property," he noted, "is designed to perpetuate individual bargaining and to discourage collective bargaining."

It was handed down in a case involving the CIO Clothing Workers and the Livingston Shirt Co., Livingston, Tenn., in which the company had denied the union the chance to reply to a company official's speech to a captive audience of employes. The case reached the NLRB on appeal from a decision of the regional director, who upheld the union's charges on the basis of the old board policy.

A similar ruling was issued in another case involving the Peerless Plywood Co., High Point, N. C., and the CIO Furniture Workers.

"The CIO has always objected to the T-H provision which sanctions captive audiences," CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg said in a statement. "We have never regarded compulsory attendance by workers at a 'brain-washing' session conducted by an anti-union employer to be any form of free speech.

"However, even T-H . . . at least required an employer engaging in such compulsory persuasion to give the union an opportunity on company time and property to reply.

"The CIO, of course, supports the principle of free speech for employers and everyone else in America. But these cases have nothing to do with free speech."

Goldberg charged the decisions amount to "an anti-labor amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act by the process of administrative interpretation." Such an amendment, he said, had been proposed by anti-labor forces in Congress, but "until today was never part of the law."

"The old board and the courts had held that it was a violation of the law for an employer to compel his workers to listen to anti-union propaganda during working hours," Goldberg explained, "if, at the same time, he prohibited union representatives from presenting the union's views to the workers during working hours.

"The new board now says that such unfair and anti-union actions are perfectly proper . . .

"The new NLRB now says it is lawful and proper for an employer not just to express his views, but to use his disciplinary authority to compel his employes to listen to those views—and at the same time, the NLRB denies to the union the right to convey its contrary views to the workers.

"This, the CIO says, is patently unfair."

The new ruling upsets what had come to be known as the Bonwit-Teller doctrine. The majority opinion was the work of Chairman Guy Farmer and Member Philip Ray Rodgers. Member Ivar H. Peterson agreed with the end result, but reached it by a different route. All three are Republicans.

Member Abe Murdock, the only Democratic holdover, supplied the lone dissent. One place on the board is vacant.

Upsidedown

The Supreme Court has ruled that people on strike can't say anything unkind about their employer's product. We can just see picket signs reading, "Don't Buy Those Yummy, Toothsome Cracklepops. They're Absolutely Delicious."

Series Of Regional Parleys For CIO Councils Planned

PLANS were announced last week for a series of regional Conference of CIO councils, focused on problems of state and federal legislation, community relations and political action.

The conferences, beginning next month, will be attended by regional directors, leaders of state, county and city councils, and regional directors and staff members of international unions.

This will be the third series of CIO regional conferences.

THE CIO Councils Dept. has been assisted in planning the meetings by the Legislative Dept., National CIO-PAC, the Community Services Committee and the Education and Research Dept.

Here is the schedule:

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 22-23, Regions 4 and 5, covering Tennessee, Kentucky, North and South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

Chicago, Jan. 29-30, Regions 7, 8 and 9, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 5-6, Regions 3 and 6, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Ohio and West Virginia.

New York City, Feb. 19-20, Regions 1 and 2, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Maine, New York and New Jersey.

St. Louis, Feb. 26-27, Regions 10 and 11, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Mississippi.

San Francisco, Mar. 5-6, Region 13, California, Washington, Oregon, Arizona and Nevada.

Denver, Mar. 12-13, Region 12, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho and Montana.

Boyer Gets Award

Pres. Harry Boyer of the Pennsylvania CIO Council has received the 1953 civil rights award of the Pennsylvania Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Flynn Resigns CIO Post On West Coast

TIM FLYNN, CIO director for Region 13 with headquarters in San Francisco, will leave that post next month to accept a new assignment with his own union, the CIO Steelworkers.

Flynn has been stationed in San Francisco for many years. Previously he had handled a number of organizing assignments for CIO and the steel union.

A new regional director for the San Francisco post will be named at a later date, according to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe.

Riffe praised Flynn for having "done a wonderful job for the CIO, on the West Coast and in other locations. He has the respect and admiration of all of us in CIO for his ability and devotion to democratic trade unionism."

"We wish his every success in his new assignment with the Steelworkers," he added.

ACWA Begins Drive At Open Shop Firm

A DRIVE to organize the 2000 employes of the Schoeneman Co., with headquarters in Baltimore, Md., was announced last week by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers.

The firm has plants in Chambersburg, Souderton and Lansdale, Pa., and Wilmington, Del.

"Our organizers are already in the field," Potofsky said, "and are explaining the benefits of free collective bargaining. Only under the Amalgamated contract, as worked out for 98% of the industry, are job security and decent standards of work assured. They do not depend upon the whim of an employer who can take away what he has given."

The ACWA-CIO president emphasized the importance of the union label campaign to manufacturers. Retailers, through buying clothing made under union conditions, are finding out that they are assured of continued production and uninterrupted deliveries, he explained. In addition, they have a ready market of union members and their families who are union label conscious.

IN ANOTHER phase of ACWA-CIO activity, the unaffiliated Consolidated Cutters & Shavers Union, in the Gloversville, N. Y., glove manufacturing area, voted unanimously to affiliate with ACWA-CIO Local 1712, United Tannery & Leather Workers, as a prelude to receiving a separate ACWA charter.

Affiliation with the ACWA was expected to speed the formation of a joint board covering glove, leather and other ACWA jurisdictions in a three-county area. Negotiations for affiliation of the independent with the ACWA were aided by CIO Rep. Murray M. Gassman.

Welfare Experts, CSC Meet As New Advisory Council

THE FIRST meeting of the new Health and Welfare Advisory Council to the CIO Community Services Committee —a body of the leading authorities in the social welfare field to give technical advice to CSC's expanding program — was held recently in New York.

Joseph A. Beirne, CSC chairman and president of the Communications Workers, hailed the joint relationship between organized labor and the field of social services as a new kind of team work which will benefit both groups.

"It is a significant development, one that will strengthen CIO's efforts to improve health and welfare standards and at the same time bring about a better understanding between social work and labor," he said.

Programs discussed at the meeting included plans for retired workers and multiple health testing.

The 17-member Council is drawn from various fields of social work. Present were professional leaders from health agencies, recreational organizations, community planning, and religious, health and welfare organizations.

Council members elected Harry L. Lurie, associate director of the Council of Jewish Federation and Welfare Councils, as temporary chairman. Julius F. Rothman, CSC staff representative, was appointed secretary.

A Worse Taft-Hartley

Dyed-in-the-wool enemies of labor have been trying for years, without success, to make Taft-Hartley an even more intensive weapon against unions.

Fortunately, their efforts in the Congress have never met success.

But now, while Administration and congressional circles gravely discuss what Taft-Hartley amendments will be proposed next year, the National Labor Relations Board has been doing a thorough-going job of sharpening the teeth of the law.

In its latest decision, the Board has not only sanctioned "captive-audience brain-washing" sessions for the employes of anti-union firms, but has denied the union the chance to answer back. This interpretation of free speech must be making Thomas Jefferson spin in his grave.

The Labor Board's "new look" has taken other curious forms. The Board has solemnly said than an employer, predicting trouble for his employes if they vote for the union in an NLRB election, was making not "threats" but "prophecies." Nobody can take that one seriously.

As the CIO's general counsel, Arthur Goldberg, has pointed out, decisions like these "constitute an anti-labor amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act." And labor will hold the Administration responsible—for these acts, rather than for flowery words about "improvements" in Taft-Hartley.

Burying Beria

Even at this holiday period of good-will, it's impossible to scrape up sympathy for Lavrenti Beria, the deposed head of the Soviet secret police—who got a taste of his own medicine and was executed less than a week after he was indicted and placed on trial.

As one of the most dreaded figures in the Soviet world, Beria ran the slave labor camps and the recruiting drives by which millions of humans were condemned to death or degradation. He also ran the great purges which deposed scores of thousands of citizens from their jobs and threw them into jail or the slave camps—sometimes with a "trial," sometimes without even that.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey was moved not by compassion for the hateful Beria but by a belief in democratic justice when he urged the Soviet Union to grant even Beria a fair trial—a request, which if granted, would have torn apart the inner machinery of the Soviet dictatorship.

Like his two predecessors, Beria "confessed" to being "a traitor, a betrayer, an agent of foreign capitalism, a criminal, a British intelligence agent"—and, for all we know, a wife-beater.

Beria—the alleged traitor and spy—was the man who nominated Malenkov to the Number One job in Russia. From where we sit, that would cast a cloud over Tovarish Malenkov; for all we know, maybe he's a "traitor" and a British "spy" too.

And it was the "spy" and "traitor" Beria who liquidated his "predecessor," a Mr. Yezhov—who, at that time, as we recall it, was charged with being a "spy" and a "traitor."

Confusing? Yes. Absurd? Indeed. We can comment only, that it's the devil of a way to run a railroad. The Beria case, whatever the facts may be, can have but one lasting result: to produce sympathy for the millions of citizens living under the Kremlin's yoke—in or out of the slave labor camps.

In Other Words—

A Voice Without Words

By PETER DRAKE

(Reprinted from the New Leader Magazine)

A WEARY CALM has returned to the shabby halls of 1778 Pennsylvania Ave., headquarters of the United States Information Agency.

The dust raised by Sen. McCarthy's "pro-American underground" during the probe of the Voice of America and the overseas libraries seems to have settled. The insecurity caused by wholesale RIFs (the bureaucratic word for firings) has likewise subsided.

The propaganda set up has been revamped. No longer a stepchild of the State Dept., the foreign information program is now housed in an independent agency directly under the National Security Council. In the past, many good suggestions sent to other agencies or to the White House got lost in the bureaucratic labyrinth. Since Aug. 1, however, the new agency can—in theory at least—write its own ticket, subject only to broad policy guidance.

Theodore C. Streibert, the new USIA director, is also empowered, at least for a limited time, to hire and fire without recourse to Civil Service procedures. These regulations, designed for routine jobs, often impeded the creative job of writers and editors. The old agency could not rid itself of Civil Service-protected hangovers from the innumerable transformations of the information program since OWI days.

Finally, the new agency has been given an official charter which, in a few clear words, spells out its aims. To be sure, the idea of telling people abroad that "the objectives and policies of the United States are in harmony with and will advance their legitimate aspirations for freedom, progress and peace" is not entirely new.

With considerable enthusiasm and occasional adeptness, the same principle was largely applied by the working staffs of the pre-Ike Information Service. But previous agency heads like Dr. Wilson Compton and the fabulous Dr. Robert L. Johnson too often shifted their objectives to accommodate noisy critics in Congress and the press. The result was confusion among their subordinates. The new agency's aims could inspire an imaginative, concerted efforts.

Unfortunately, however, this doesn't seem to be the case. Little if anything is stirring on 1778 Pennsylvania Ave. With all the emphasis on ground rules and organization, no one seems to have given much thought to content.

There has been no apparent conscious effort to combat the growing notion in Europe and Asia that this country is rejecting its allies, tends to be trigger-happy and two-faced, and is altogether unfit for world leadership.

There is much talk about organization, promotions, all kinds of housekeeping details, but little about content. One information officer enthusiastically described the advantages of the new organization.

"Yes," I asked, "but what are you sending out, what are you telling people abroad about us?"

"Oh, well, same old stuff, you know . . ."

The new Republican efficiency manifests itself in the old evil of excessive bureaucracy. USIA administrative, personnel and security divisions far outnumber the operational ones.

We're Not Doing So Well

Final figures are not yet available, but it looks as though roughly two-thirds of the roughly 6000 USIA employes in this country are assigned to administrative tasks, shuffling papers and "coordinating." They and their paperwork weigh heavily on the press, motion picture, library and radio men, who must, in the President's words, "appeal to the human soul, the human heart, the human mind of people abroad."

Like government employes elsewhere in Washington, USIA men and women keep their nose to the grindstone, concentrate on eliminating waste, forego coffee in the office, and so on. But business efficiency in government does not replace idealism.

As a result, we are not doing so well in the ideological war against Communism. The new Administration has given our cold war information agency a fine new organizational chart. But with all the talk of psychological warfare and crusades of all kinds, the new team has failed to provide the very thing it talks about most often: a sense of mission.

1953—A Year That's Well Behind Us . . .

By WILLIAM MILLIS

NINETEEN-HUNDRED and fifty-three, that was the year when . . .

- The Republicans returned to power in Washington, learned it wasn't the promised land.
- "Government by postponement" preoccupied the executive branch, and investigations the legislative.
- Big business gathered its rewards—in the form of coastal oil lands, killing of price and rent controls, and lock, stock and barrel control of most U. S. agencies.
- CIO and AFL negotiated and signed a no-raiding agreement—a long first step toward a united U. S. labor movement.
- Things weren't going so well for farmers—crop and livestock prices kept going down—but every family's living costs climbed for month after month. And layoffs, unemployment, cutbacks in production were climbing at year's end.
- And "pocketbook issues" were reflected at the polls, in a series of Republican defeats in state, local and special congressional elections.

JANUARY saw Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower inaugurated as the 33rd President with a prayer to be of "service to the people," amid GOP gold-plated festivities distinguished by parades of Cadillacs and mountains of mink. Even before Inauguration Day, Ike had a headache in the case of General Motors Pres. Charles E. Wilson, the man who said "what's good for General Motors is good for the country." Wilson wanted to hold on to his $2.5 million in GM stock and his Cabinet job as Defense Secretary; eventually he had to sell the stock.

Same Old Alliance

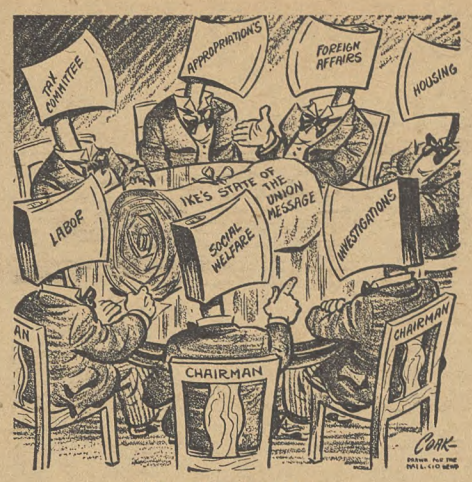
The old congressional Dixiegop alliance soon restated its power, knifing changes in Senate and House rules which are roadblocks to civil rights. The Senate sidetracked action on a report questioning the highflying finances of Wisconsin's Joe McCarthy.

FEBRUARY brought the death of "Mr. CIO himself," Allan S. Haywood, tireless organizer and CIO's executive vice president and director of organization and councils. Haywood died in the field, at a union meeting, and CIO's Executive Board mourned "never has there been a happier warrior." A few weeks later, John V. Riffe, of the Steelworkers and the Southern organizing drive, was named his successor.

An 11-member CIO committee headed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther was selected for resumption of discussions with the AFL looking toward a united U. S. labor movement, while CIO on the legislative scene threw its full efforts into gaining Taft-Hartley amendments in line with the President's promise of "justice and fairness." "Substantial" and "truly fundamental changes," highlighted by an end to "government by injunctions" were urged by CIO.

MARCH was highlighted in the union field by the Atlantic City convention of the Auto Workers, a convention which set the guaranteed annual wage as "the next step forward" for American labor. CIO Clothing Workers gained a 12.5c hourly wage increase for 150,000 workers.

Again



The Hatchet Men

Shake!

David J. McDonald was installed as president of the CIO Steelworkers, succeeding the late Philip Murray.

In the capital, Taft-Hartley hearings (with the late Sen. Taft then in command) preoccupied labor. A full-dress presentation of CIO's case for sweeping changes in the act as "the road to peace in American industry" was voiced by Reuther to the House Labor Committee.

APRIL brought a pledge from the White House that looms even larger on the eve of 1954. The Full Employment Act was emphatically endorsed by Mr. Eisenhower in a letter to Reuther, as reflecting "a determination on the part of the American people to see to it that the stupidity of mass unemployment never again visits the land."

The oil give-away battle, over the so-called tidelands, was warming up in Congress, while House GOP committees whacked funds for social agencies and knifed public housing.

IN MAY the oil interests collected on the slush funds contributed to GOP candidates in '52. The give-away of the nation's multi-billion dollar coastal oil reserves was voted by both houses, despite a last-ditch fight in the Senate, and signed by the President, despite CIO's pleas for a veto. The House crippled funds for public power, while CIO protested big business grabs aimed at atomic energy development.

JUNE brought important economic gains—through amicable collective bargaining—for three big CIO unions. The Steelworkers gained an 8.5c hourly basic wage increase throughout the industry, and wiping out of the long-opposed southern pay differential. The Auto Workers won their long fight to reopen their five-year contracts, bring the escalator clause in line with the new U. S. consumer price index, wrote much of the escalator gains into the basic wage. The Electrical Workers won contract gains at RCA, Philco and General Motors.

Negotiations between the CIO and AFL brought agreement on a no-raiding pact which was quickly ratified by the CIO Executive Board. A streamlining of CIO's organizing and field staff, and consolidation into 13 regions, was announced.

A long-range program for "maintaining prosperity" was outlined by CIO, as Pres. Reuther called for a crusade to prevent a "boom or doom" economy, recession and mass unemployment and "to lift America to new standards of family living."

In a dramatic demonstration of labor opposition to communism and Soviet military rule, workers in East Berlin and Russian-occupied Germany conducted a series of strikes and demonstrations against factory speedup orders which were broken only by tank units of the Red Army.

JULY brought the Stockholm world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, with CIO proposing a bread-and-butter campaign against communism. Reuther visited East Berlin and CIO made a "substantial" contribution to aid German workers. The war in Korea ended—months later, peace hadn't come.

Cost Of GOP Living

At home, a CIO News headline reported "Cost of GOP Living Sets All-Time Record"—and it was to go even higher. In sticky Washington, Congress was rushing to adjourn, with four-fifths of its normal work and most of Pres. Eisenhower's "must" legislation left undone. Foreign aid funds were the latest to get the ax. "Appeasement" by the White House of McCarthyite "immoral forces" was charged by CIO in the rejection of John Edelman, TWUA Washington representative, for nomination as assistant secretary of labor.

AUGUST: The "put-off Congress" went home, leaving Taft-Hartley unchanged, a five-foot shelf of GOP campaign promises unkept and what The CIO News called "a drab record of sins ot omission and commission." Political action in 1954 looked like the answer, and CIO-PAC at a Washington conference kicked off a twin drive aimed at the "off-year" local and state elections and the '54 congressional races.

SEPTEMBER: Soon after Labor Day, labor's relations with the Republican Administration exploded. Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin, the only non-millionaire in the Cabinet of "nine millionaires and a plumber," resigned, charged he had been short-changed by the President on promises to seek 19 Taft-Hartley amendments. CIO backed Durkin's resignation.

Text of the no-raiding agreement, hailed as "the first and essential step toward the achievement of organic unity," was announced as the pact was ratified by the AFL convention. The CIO began a nation-wide public relations program aimed beyond labor's ranks, sponsoring nightly newscasts of Commentator John W. Vandercook over the ABC chain.

OCTOBER: CIO's two departed leaders, Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood, were honored at CIO-sponsored ceremonies in their home towns in the British Isles.

At home, the House Agriculture Committee went out to the Midwest to investigate falling farm prices, heard Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and other farm state CIO groups join farmers' organizations in pleading for fair farm price supports. A sign of the times: Voters in Wisconsin's 9th District, which never before had gone Democratic, sent Democrat Lester Johnson to Congress

The CIO Steelworkers held a preliminary meeting on 1954 negotiations, setting the guaranteed annual wage as a major goal as "insurance against depression."

NOVEMBER came in with hundreds of local elections marked by Fair Deal Democratic gains, highlighted by the election of Robert F. Wagner as New York's mayor, of Robert B. Meyner as New Jersey's governor, and of Harrison Williams to Congress in a New Jersey special election.

Under banners proclaiming "what's good for the nation is good for the CIO," the CIO met in Cleveland in its 15th convention—at a peak in its strength. A hard-working, harmonious convention reelected Reuther, James B. Carey and Riffe, ratified the no-raiding agreement and pledged continuing efforts for a unified, socially-alert and democratic labor movement, adopted a wide-range legislative and political action program, and bitterly condemned Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell for voicing a charge amounting to treason against former Pres. Truman.

DECEMBER: Full employment is the key to freedom's future, said the Auto Workers at a 100-delegate national conference in Washington which drafted a "Keep America At Work" program. The CIO and AFL formally signed the no-raiding agreement.

So went 1953—Hello, 1954!

Final Report Of NPA—

Strong Unions, Good Will Held Factors In Industrial Peace

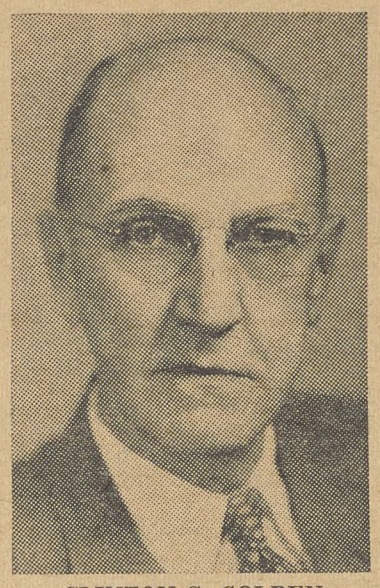
By GERVASE N. LOVE

SEVEN years ago, the newspapers were full of headlines about strikes, lockouts, interrupted production and general industrial upsets.

But they didn't say anything about the more than 90% of all union-management contracts that were settled as a matter of course, without strikes, lockouts, interruptions or other dramatic events.

That bothered Clinton S. Golden, then vice president of the CIO Steelworkers and now executive director of the Trade Union Program at Harvard Univ. After all, he reasoned, there was a lot more industrial peace going on than industrial warfare—peace that was more significant than strikes or lockouts, but less susceptible of headline treatment.

So at a meeting at Princeton Univ., he proposed to the National Planning Association — a non-profit, non-political organization devoted to planning, of which he is a vice chairman—that it would be a good idea to study the causes of industrial peace rather than the causes of industrial warfare. His suggestion was accepted.



CLINTON S. GOLDEN

THE SEVEN-YEAR study ended last week when the association published its final report, entitled "Causes of Industrial Peace Under Collective Bargaining." It was unveiled at a press conference in Washington at which H. Christian Sonne, association chairman, described it as a "milestone in the literature of industrial relations."

Preceding it, over the years, were 13 smaller volumes. Twelve were case studies of union-management relations—good relations in medium-size plants in different industries and different sections of the United States; seven involved CIO unions, six an affiliate or affiliates of the AFL. The 13th study covered, as its title said, "Working Harmony in 18 Companies" in the U. S. and England.

OVER the seven years, the scholars who made the studies for the association came to some of the answers to the perplexing problem of union-employer peace. They also found some more questions which, the final report said, must be answered before men of good will on both sides of the bargaining table can follow a reasonably well-charted course to good relations.

The committee found that good labor-management relations usually result when some of nine conditions (see adjoining column) are present.

Both environment and psychological factors have their effects, the study demonstrated.

"A favorable combination of various environmental factors may make it easier for managements and unions to achieve mutually agreeable and non-collusive peaceful relationships," the report says, "but the parties still have to desire peace and work to achieve it."

The committee posed four questions it had turned up in its investigation and expressed the hope that further study will provide the answers. They were:

1. "What happens when industrial peace continues for a long time? Do management and the union find new areas for joint activity, or does the relationship stagnate and even deteriorate as a disillusioned union membership rejects the 'peaceful' leadership?

2. "How do employes, who also constitute the union membership, view the relationship which union and management characterize as 'good' or 'peaceful'? Are they equally enthusiastic or apathetic?

3. "What happens when favorable environmental conditions change for the worse? Can the relationship stand this test of adversity?

4. "Is industrial peace . . . possible only when the environment is equally favorable?"

At the press conference Golden expressed the belief that management hostility to unions has grown less in the last few years, although it persists in many quarters. The "profound adjustments," he said, are "not wholly attributable to full employment."

No judgments were formed as to the influence of labor legislation like the Taft-Hartley Act, he said, "but the studies indicate the parties were able to get along without recourse to any law."

The study was made possible by the financial help of John Hay Whitney, NPA board member, senior partner of J. H. Whitney & Co., and president of the John Hay Whitney Foundation.

Highlights Of NPA Report

In studying the causes of industrial peace under collective bargaining, the National Planning Association found one or more of nine internal factors in each case which it believes all unions and companies can utilize. They were:

1. Full acceptance by management of the bargaining process and of unionism as an institution. The company considers a strong union an asset to management.
2. The union fully accepts private ownership and operation of the industry; it recognizes that the welfare of its members depends on successful operation of the business.
3. The union is strong, responsible and democratic.
4. The company stays out of the union's internal affairs and does not seek to alienate the workers' allegiance to their union.
5. Mutual confidence and trust exist between the parties. There have been no serious ideological incompatibilities.
6. Neither party has adopted a legalistic approach to the solution of problems.
7. Negotiations are "problem-centered"—more time is spent on day-to-day problems than on defining abstract principles.
8. There is widespread union-management consultation and highly developed information sharing.
9. Grievances are settled promptly, in the local plant wherever possible. The procedure is flexible and informal.

Textile Worker From Maine Named Iran Apprentice Aide

KENT Armstrong, a member of Biddeford, Me., Local 406 of the CIO Textile Workers, has been named an industrial training and apprenticeship consultant to the government of Iran.

He is leaving this week to spend two years in Teheran helping the Iranians to develop a national industrial training program under the Technical Cooperation Mission of the U. S. Foreign Operations Mission.

Armstrong, who was born in Biddeford, served his apprenticeship in the textile machinery plant of the Saco-Lowell Shops. Until his appointment to the post in Iran, he was a research machinist and tool maker in the same company's experimental department.

Peaceful Atomic-Power?—

Cost Of 2 H-Bombs Equals Housing Units For 600,000

ANNOUNCEMENT that the Tennessee Valley Authority will study the possibilities of civilian use of atomic power has focused attention on how much good could be done in the world with the money spent on atomic weapons.

The Atomic Energy Commission will give TVA access to all its atomic power information, including the data developed in connection with the nuclear power plant to be built by Westinghouse.

The atomic power plant is expected to cost $40 million to $80 million. The lower figure is $5 million less than the cost of three medium-size H-bombs, the higher $10 million less than the cost of six such weapons.

The estimate of the cost of the medium-size H-bomb was placed at $15 million by Sam Stavisky in an article in the Washington Post. He explained that the estimated costs of that bomb and of other atomic weapons was based on unclassified data issued by AEC.

SETTING the price of the small A-bomb—about twice the explosive strength of that dropped on Hiroshima—at about $500,000, he said that sum could be used to supply 12 smaller Latin American countries with sanitary drinking water.

"The new super A-bomb, which the President described as 25 times more powerful than the original fission bomb, may cost in the neighborhood of $3 million," Stavisky wrote.

"That estimated cost of a single super A-bomb would pay for the hydro-electric plant built jointly by the United States and Greece on the Lauros River, serving the Epirus area."

He said "two medium-size H-bombs, converted into dollars, would provide all the materials needed to build 100,000 'aided self-help' housing units, of the type erected in Puerto Rico, or enough housing for 600,000 persons on the bottom of the economic ladder."

CIO's Position

"Atomic energy can be made to produce power and a higher standard of living as well as bombs, destruction and devastation."

That is the CIO position contained in a resolution adopted by the 1953 convention.

The Atomic Energy Commission was "applauded" for planning construction of a nuclear reactor to convert atomic energy to electricity for industry, and CIO called for wide expansion of this program.

Radio News Group Elects Vandercook

John W. Vandercook, whose nightly newscasts over ABC radio network are sponsored by the CIO, has been elected assistant secretary-treasurer of the Association of Radio News Analysts.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

WE CAN SAY that we made our New Year's Resolutions early. The policies hammered out in our national convention are the guideposts for '54. Our strength, as we know, is at its all-time peak. I believe, too, that our understanding of our responsibilities has given us the determination to make this coming 12 months the greatest in our history.

The idea that the "best is yet to come" is one that is heard time and again. Perhaps, it is used so often that people come to doubt it, and put it down as just some fancy words. But when we take a cold and hard look at the world around us, and we see the needs of the people, we can realize that once again we are called upon to step out and lead the working people of this nation to a better and more secure life.

The situation is much like that in the early Thirties, when CIO was first born. There is unrest and some fear. People are tired, tired of the threat of war, tired of the threat of economic collapse, tired of the effort that is required of a democratic people to assure the continued enjoyment of their cherished rights.

Now, right now, is certainly time for the militant voice of trade unionism to rally the people.

WE DON'T HAVE the Administration in Washington we had in the Thirties and Forties. We don't have the dynamic leadership that brought an entire nation off its back and set it on its feet. What we have, instead, is the greatest challenge we have ever faced.

There are millions of unorganized still to be brought to realize that their future is in the union cause. There are whole new economic worlds in which our union banner must be planted. For as I see it, organization of the unorganized is still the key to ultimate victory for economic justice.

If we have been able to raise the living standards of the entire nation by going as far as we have in the basic industries, consider what we can do as we move forward.

The key to the realization of our program is organization. It is organized workers through their unions that make policies into realities.

I wish for every man in this union, for every man in this land, for that matter, a happy and prosperous New Year. It can be so, as we make it so.

There is one excuse that we shall never be able to use: We cannot say that we do not have the capacity to do the job.

AS THE YEAR came to its close the following reports of election victories came to my desk: CIO Lithographers, Craftsmen Press, Baltimore; CIO Auto Workers, Ames Auto Accessories, New York City, Whiteway Motors, Inc., New York City, Replacement Parts Co., Cleveland, O.; CIO Rubber Workers, Fabric Fire Hose Co., Sandy Hook, Conn.

CIO Retail Wholesale Workers, Kroger Grocery Warehouse, Cincinnati, O.; Joseph Burger, New York, N. Y.; DPO, Robin-Skall Display Case Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.; CIO Chemical Workers, Merck Institute for Therapeutic Research, Rahway, N. J., Hewitt-Robins, Staten Island, N. Y., U. S. Gypsum Co., Trojan Powder, Wolf Lake, Ill.; CIO Electrical Workers, Benjamin Air Rifle Co., St. Louis, Mo.; CIO Furniture Workers, Kay Mfg. Co., High Point, N. C.; CIO Shoe Workers, Laconia Shoe Co., Laconia, N. H.

CIO Quits Defense Bond Drive As Labor Set-up Is Killed

CIO ENDORSEMENT of the U. S. savings bond program has been withdrawn following firing of the labor representatives in the Treasury Dept.

The use of CIO Pres. Walter Reuther's name and that of Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey was halted in statements endorsing the purchase of bonds through payroll savings plans.

Formal request was made on the government for the return of about 8000 mailing plates through which union officials were contacted on savings bond activities.

THE LABOR section of the Treasury's savings bond section was abolished Nov. 10 and the CIO and AFL representatives were terminated a month later. CIO representatives on the National Labor Advisory Committee for Savings Bonds protested the action during the Cleveland convention, pointing out that the labor section had greatly aided the sale of bonds among American workers.

Signing the protest in addition to Reuther and Carey were Pres. David J. McDonald, Steelworkers; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing Workers; and Pres. Emil Rieve, Textile Workers.

William McDonald, CIO representative in the Treasury Dept., notified state CIO council presidents and secretaries of the withdrawal of official endorsement.

Shoe Wage Talks Stalled

THE MASSACHUSETTS Board of Arbitration and Conciliation last week held a hearing in an effort to break the deadlock in negotiations between the CIO Shoe Workers and some 60 New England factories with more than 10,000 employes.

USWA Pres. Russell Taylor said the negotiations were deadlocked by the refusal of the management to agree to any economic demands, although some other items were settled.

The union's proposals include a 7.5% across-the-board wage increase.

Anti-Shipping Move Rapped By CIO Unit

PENDING MOVES of the Eisenhower Administration against the maritime industry have been strongly protested by the CIO Maritime Committee.

The latest blow dealt the industry was the order by Federal Maritime Administrator Rothschild closing the maritime training school at Sheepshead Bay, N. Y., despite a shortage of skilled unlicensed seamen.

Earlier Rothschild closed a similar school at Alameda, Calif. At that time Hoyt Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, predicted that Rothschild was going to close the Sheepshead Bay School.

Haddock said that the third and last of such schools, at Kings Point, N. Y., was in line for slaughter, but the administrator found it politically expedient to postpone action until after the 1954 elections and to ask Congress for funds for it for another year.

This school and four state maritime academies supported by federal funds train merchant marine officers.

HADDOCK recently charged that Pres. Eisenhower was considering substituting a seaman-financed hospital plan for the present U. S. Public Health Service program.

Budget Dir. Dodge several months ago wrote Sec. Hobby of the Health, Education and Welfare Dept. two letters urging the abolition of the hospitals, which were set up more than 150 years ago to care for the nation's merchant seamen.

Haddock cited a letter from Eisenhower's office to James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and president of the CIO Electrical Workers.

"In the case of hospital care for merchant seamen," Eisenhower wrote, "it seems possible that there are alternatives which it would be fruitful to investigate. For example, a hospital insurance program might be an acceptable substitute. It is this sort of thing we are looking into at this time."

UFWA Board Blasts GOP On Recession

ADMINISTRATION economic policies have promoted "the slackening of activity which set in after the end of the Korean war," the CIO Furniture Workers Executive Board charged.

"What the publicity boys call 'a rolling adjustment' resulted," the UFWA-CIO board stated during a meeting in Cleveland. "What this slick phrase tries to conceal is that more workers are putting in shorter hours, more workers are on part-time, more workers are losing jobs."

Increased political action was urged by the board, since "the Administration has demonstrated in practice that it serves the interests of big business and not the interest of the people."

THE BOARD approved the CIO-AFL no raiding pact, but indicated that its signing would hinge upon the signing by certain AFL unions operating in the furniture industry. Agreement will be effective only with those unions that do sign.

Since last February, the board reported, UFWA won 24 NLRB elections involving about 4000 workers. Wage increases averaging 8c an hour were obtained for more than 20,000 members. Three shops which were organized by CIO voted to transfer to UFWA.

IUE Wage Parley Called

THE WESTINGHOUSE Conference Board of the CIO Electrical Workers will meet Jan. 4-5 in Philadelphia to formulate economic policy for 1954.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, said "substantial wage boosts" would be sought in spring negotiations with Westinghouse and General Electric.

He indicated that a guaranteed annual wage will be among the bargaining goals for the 365,000 IUE members.

Holderman Named To Anti-Racket Group

Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey State CIO Council was named a member of a labor-management committee to fight organized gambling in that state's industrial plants. U. S. Atty. William F. Tompkins said "bookmaking and numbers operations make the greatest contribution to corrupting public officials."

CIO consultant for CARE, Mrs. Marion Stewart Abbott has been named aide to Par Danforth, CARE mission chief in India and Pakistan.

UN Refugee Fund Asks Emergency Aid For Homeless

AN APPEAL for donations by individuals to the United Nations Refugee Emergency Fund was sent to all parts of the world last week by Dr. G. J. van Heuven Goedhart, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees.

The UN fund will be exhausted by March because of the tremendous demands on it, but the services it has rendered to the homeless could be multiplied many times if money were available, he said. His appeal was echoed by the deputy high commissioner, James Morgan Read.

Van Heuven Goedhart directed his appeal to "everyone of you who will be celebrating Christmas in your home and with your family, to send a donation, however small, to the UN Refugee Emergency Fund."

Save-Niagara Unit Gets CIO Backing

AN ORGANIZATION to preserve the public interest in electricity developed at the St. Lawrence and Niagara Rivers power sites was set up at a meeting in Albany, N. Y., in which the CIO and several CIO unions participated. Aim of the new group is "to develop the maximum amount of electric power from available hydro sites in the New York-New England area at the least possible cost and with the immediate objective of mobilizing all interest and resources behind an effort to prevent favorable action on the Miller-Capehart Bill."

The Miller-Capehart Bill carries the ingenuous title, "A bill to preserve the scenic purposes of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes." The "other purposes" include giving power facilities at the falls to five New York State private utility companies.

The new organization was formed by representatives of municipal utility systems in New York and Massachusetts, electric co-ops and farm bodies in New York and Vermont, CIO and AFL unions in the stone, electrical, chemical, paper, textile and machine industries, and by staff members of national organizations in the public and co-op power field.

LEO GOODMAN, Washington legislative representative of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, was a speaker and was elected a director. Field Rep. Kenneth Peterson of the CIO Electrical Workers was named an alternate director.

Meantime, Sen. Langer (R. N. D.), chairman of a Senate Monopoly subcommittee investigating the proposed new federal power marketing policy in the Missouri Valley, and Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) asked Pres. Eisenhower to delay effectiveness of the new standards, set for Jan. 1. Under it, private utilities would benefit at the expense of public and co-op setups, contrary to the law.

Power Lobby Friend Won't Run Again

THE FIRST servant of big business in Congress to concede he won't be back in Washington after next year's elections has just thrown the towel into the ring.

He's Rep. Miller (R. N. Y.), sponsor of the bill to give away Niagara Falls power to private utility companies. Miller told a Buffalo Courier-Express reporter he "definitely" won't seek re-election.

Miller gave as his reason that he's "sick and tired" of being hamstrung by pressure groups.

"By the time a measure reaches the floor," he said, "the farmers, American Legion, Catholic Church, CIO and the Better Business Bureau, depending on which is affected, will let you know they don't like it."

Stronger Curb On 'Wetbacks' Urged By Joint U. S.-Mexico Labor Meet

MORE EFFECTIVE control of migration and improvement of conditions under which Mexicans work in U. S. farms and factories were planned last week at concluding sessions of the first conference of trade unions of Mexico and the United States in Mexico City.

Establishment of closer ties between the unions of the two nations was recommended by the conference called by the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), an affiliate of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

IN ADDITION, the conference urged:

- Strict enforcement of standard labor contracts by both nations to prevent exploitation of migrant workers.
- Prevention of illegal "wetback" migration from Mexico by both governments and labor unions.
- Control of competition from contract laborers with U. S. workers.
- Improvement of information services between U. S. and Mexican unions.
- Working out methods of membership transfers between unions.

Representatives of U. S. unions were rebuffed when they visited Francis P. White, the American ambassador to Mexico, to ask that labor be represented in talks on revision of the treaty governing migratory farm workers.

White made it clear that labor participation was not wanted in treaty discussions.

The unionists charged that it was another instance of the Administration going back on its promise, since former Labor Sec. Durkin promised to give labor's request for representation "serious consideration."

PRACTICAL importance was given the conference through participation of the CIO, AFL, Miners and railroad brotherhoods from the U. S. and the Mexican Federation of Labor (CTM), the major Mexican labor group with 2.5 million members.

Also represented were six "independent" Mexican unions, including telephone workers, miners, electrical workers and a big farm union. The independents, like CTM, are anti-Communist and liberal groups.

CIO's delegation was headed by Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, CIO Vice Pres. O. A. Knight, who also is president of the Oil Workers, and James G. Thimmes, Steelworkers vice president.

Others were R. J. Thomas, assistant to Riffe; Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee; Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray, Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee; John W. Edelman, legislative representative of the Textile Workers; Irwin DeShetler, Robert Starnes, Timothy Flynn, David Sternback and Nicholas Dragon of the CIO organizing staff.

THE CONFERENCE members divided into two committees. The first considered all aspects of legal and illegal Mexican migration to this country. The second studied a series of proposals for cooperative action between unions.

Important phases of the latter group's work dealt with possibilities of equalizing wages paid workers employed in Mexico by wholly-owned U. S. corporations and strengthening ties between the unions in both countries.

Telegrams outlining the purpose and scope of the conference were sent to Pres. Eisenhower and Pres. Adolfo Ruiz Cortines of Mexico. They were signed by Sec.-Gen. Fidel Velasquez of CTM who presided at the conference and Sec.-Gen. Luis Alberto Monge of ORIT.

WORKING through ORIT, the conference voted to exchange information on wages, hours and working conditions in the U. S. and Mexico and set up a policy of exchanging visitors from identical unions as observers of bargaining negotiations, policy meetings and other union activities.

Transfer of $6 million from the U. S. Railway Retirement Fund to social security funds in Mexico, to compensate Mexican workers on U. S. railroads during World War II, was discussed.

Horror

Horror and derision by Mexico City delegates greeted a rumored proposal to build a tall barbed wire fence along the entire border between the U. S. and Mexico.

Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell, Jr., was credited with the suggestion to erect the fence as a means of controlling illegal immigration of Mexican laborers to this country.

"It would put Mexico in a stockade," snorted one delegate from south of the border. All delegates were equally unsympathetic to the suggestion.

World Labor Unity Grows, Carey Says

CHRISTMAS in 1953 has more than the usual significance for American union members, said CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey in a Christmas statement broadcast behind the Iron Curtain by Radio Free Europe.

"All of us will observe Christmas as we have in years past—with profound appreciation for all the spiritual meanings which this holy day conveys," said Carey, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers.

"We will be thankful for Christianity's vast moral and ethical contributions to our civilization, its emphasis on the dignity of man, the innate worth of the individual, and the concept of brotherhood.

"But the American labor movement this Christmas will also be thankful for two other things. First, trade unionism in the U. S. during 1953 reached its highest point in history.

"Second—and we consider this exceedingly important—we are thankful this Christmas that never before in history has the American labor movement been closer to the workers of other lands. Today there are unprecedentedly close ties between American workers and their organizations and the working men and women of other countries and their organizations."

Carey made it plain the ties exist not only with the free unions of Western Europe, but also with the underground labor movements in the Russian satellite states. The help U. S. workers have given the latter in the past, he pledged, will be continued.

At the same time, he thanked workers behind the Iron Curtain for "fighting our fight, fighting the fight for freedom and human decency all over the world," and expressed "all the gratitude we can command for their struggles, their sacrifices and their accomplishments."
